We have been much pleased with an examination of the above book. The style is chaste and simple, the language is fair and forcible, and the argument is direct and convincing. Dr. Ives has done the cause of truth a lasting benefit in this little volume. No person, unbiased by tradition or can read this book without being convinced that the doctrine of the natural immortality of the soul is not in the Bible, and that endless misery is of heathen origin.

We commend the book to our brethren as worthy of an extensive circulation. It will disarm prejudice and present Christ in his true character as the great life giver We shall make an extract from this new volume next week. Brethren send in your orders, and circulate this most convincing work.

Notice.

As the time approaches for the Iowa Christian Mission Camp-meeting, we wish to call attention to the importance and necessity of being prepared. In the contract for lease of ground, we agree to plant one hundred shade trees. In the past lumber has been furnished for seats by a few, and carried away at the close of the meeting. We now advise that the churches procure seats to be kept on the ground as long as they shall be needed. Let all who are interested respond at once with money or pledges—also any one who wishes to assist in planting trees and cannot be present, and will send a sufficient sum to plant one tree, such person so doing shall have his or her name placed on the tree. There will be preaching in the church at New Hartford, April 26, 7 o'clock p. m., at the close of which the officers and all interested will remain to make the necessary arrangements. (On Monday April 28, the trees will be planted.)

To the Friends in Neponset District.

I would say to the friends of the cause in this District, of the Northern Illinois Conference, that I have arranged for a tent to use in this part of the field the coming summer, and if any would like a tent meeting in their vicinity, and will write to me immediately, we will see what can be done.

In connection, it may be well to say, we intend to preach the gospel in its simplicity as God gives ability, and specially to warn sinners to flee from the wrath soon to come, and if there be those, who, depending on human instrumentalities, want only the "Big Guns" in their neighborhood, and look for eloquence and smooth things, and a preacher that can suit everybody to such we say "do not write to us," as I wish it distinctly understood, I do not advertise myself as a first class preacher, as it is generally understood among our people now a days, but with the Lord's help, I will do all I can to tell the story of the Cross, and the glory of the Crown, in the few short months, ere the Master comes.

We walk by faith in this matter, and in the name of the Lord we "pitch our moving tent," praying God's blessing to rest upon every effort.

Address L. F. Cole, Oneida, Ill.

Notice.

Who wants the next Q. M. of the A. C. C. Manchester (Iowa,) District, held with them? Brethren look about you. Make up your minds when and where you want this meeting, and write me at once. Let no time be lost, for it is high time the meeting was called. Address me at Muskegan, Mich, Box 84.

Martha J. James, Secretary.

Special Request.

If any of the brethren or sisters have any books and tracts on our faith which they have no use for, and would like to have them put in a destitute field, where many have never heard the proclamation of the soon coming king and kingdom, to such I would say if you see fit to forward me such as you can spare. I will see them faithfully distributed. Address, Wellington, Sumner County, Kansas. Virgil Hunt.

An Excellent Pen.—We have been favored with a sample card of the celebrated Spencerian Steel Pens, and after trying them quite thoroughly are convinced of their superior merit. These pens are comprised in fifteen numbers, each differing in flexibility and fineness of point, so that the most fastidious penman cannot fail to find among the fifteen just such a pen as suits him. The Spencerian Pens are famous for their elasticity of movement, smoothness of point and great durability, and are a nearer approximation to the real Swan Quill Pen than anything hitherto made. They are manufactured in England under the supervision of the original inventor of Steel Pens, the venerable Josiah Mason, and Joseph Gillett—the latter making a few of the numbers after the models of the late P. R. Spencer, the famous penman. They are used very largely in the common schools of the United States, in all the principal commercial colleges, in the government offices at Washington, and in the banks and commercial offices throughout the country, the sale reaching an enormous quantity annually. For the convenience of those who may wish to try them, a sample card of the Spencerian Pens may be had by mail by enclosing 25 cents to Messrs. Ivison, Blakeman, Taylor & Co., 138 and 140 Grand Street, N. Y., or the pens may be bought at almost any store where pens are sold.

Obituary.

ROSE—Died April 4, 1873, in Rudd Township, Floyd County, Iowa, Minnie Rose, wife of A. D. Rose, and daughter of James Sweet. Aged 29 years, 6 months and 10 days.

She was a kind and affectionate wife and mother, beloved by all who knew her. She leaves a husband and three little ones that will miss her love and care, also a large circle of friends and acquaintances. She leaves for their consolation the evidence of a well grounded hope. "She rests in peace."

Asleep in Jesus blessed sleep,
From which none ever wake to weep,
A calm and undisturbed repose,
Unbroken by the dread of foes.

Sermon by the writer, from Luke 8: 52.

NOW READY.
A BOOK ON SPIRITISM,
BY ELD. C. C. MARSTON.

"Modern Spiritism; an examination of its origin, character and tendency."

The immoral tendency and corruption of the systems as shown by the statements of its own most noted advocates, fully developed, clearly proving that Spiritism is calculated in its very nature to undermine and destroy the morals of all good society.

THE FOUNDATION OF THE SYSTEM IS FALSE.

It is shown that Satan's great falsehood, first propagated in Eden, is the main pillar upon which the system rests. The spirit and fruits of Spiritism are shown to be Anti Christ and Anti-Christian by copious extracts. In short, suffice it to say, without giving an extended analysis of the work, that it brings out in its true colors the prominent features of modern Spiritism.

It will be read with interest and profit by all who desire an intelligent understanding of this subject.

The work contains 80 pp., neatly bound in paper covers and will be sent post paid for 12 cts.; per dozen, $1.00; per hundred, $6 00

"Evil Servants."

BY DANIEL CLOW.

"But and if that evil servant shall say in his heart my Lord delayeth his coming, and shall begin to smite his fellow-servants, and to eat and drink with the drunken, the Lord of that servant shall come in a day when he looketh not for him, and in an hour that he is not aware of." (Mat. 24:49.)

This was uttered in contemplation of the general rising up of the people, in the last "generation"; and going forth (as illustrated in the parable of the "ten virgins") to meet the "Bridegroom" at his coming. And it is clear that the Lord anticipated a division among the people immediately subsequent to this, and that some would even smite their fellow-servants, and say, my Lord delayeth his coming, and begin to eat and drink with the drunken, (the nominal, frolicking professor of religion) and seek to draw us all into perdition with them. Nay, they boldly tell us now that our course has been one of shame, reproach, and folly; and that we have sinned against God and reason in our position on definite time. How can we, say they, by any fair exegesis of reasoning, claim that a knowledge of the time of Christ's coming is involved in the analogy of Christ's reasoning? And then follows an expression of deep distress in these words: "My heart aches at the desolation our folly has produced." And again: "It will not avail anything for us to inquire what the prophetic periods are intended for."

"It is too bad," they tell us, that the columns of our "representative papers" should be occupied with "definite time articles"; and the author of this charitable thought tells us, "I am almost certain that, could the mass of our people be allowed to express their opinions as to the propriety of occupying the columns of our representative papers with definite time articles, they would pronounce against it." And of this I have but little doubt. Nay, indeed they are saying, "My Lord delayeth his coming." And I must say that I doubt if even five of the "ten virgins" are left to welcome their Lord and Master.

Nay, there is a general abandonment not only of definite time, but also the prophecies which treat of definite time. And this is equivalent to a total repudiation of the personal second advent of our Lord and the establishment of his kingdom upon earth. Yea, the victory may be declared in favor of the brainless scoffers of the world, if indeed, traitors can claim immunity for their labor.

We gather a little comfort from the fact that there are a few confiding and faithful servants, holding on to the said prophecies as directed by the apostle who said, "We have a more sure word of prophecy, whereunto ye do well that ye take heed." And the positive injunction of our Savior, too, to watch even for the day and hour of his coming!

That there are many among the self-appointed teachers who, for a little notoriety among scoffers, are seeking to acquire the approbation of the world by the total abandonment of our faith, and an unconditional surrender of all that relates to manhood, is too obvious to admit of a doubt.

"The almost incessant agitation of definite time by certain elements connected with us as a people," says one, "has furnished the devil with plenty of material with which to hedge up our way." And another says, "There are thousands who believe in the near coming of Christ, and that, too, of the definite time question. They can tell you all about the prophetic periods. They seem to have the Bible on their tongues' end, and yet have not the spirit of Christ. A great deal of theory but no practice. A hollow theology which is only skin deep." This was uttered by another "representative paper," whose editor is entitled to the credit of indorsing the same in a separate column, in the following language:

"THE TEN VIRGINS.

In another column will be found an interesting article from Br. ——, on the parable of the ten virgins. We think it the best thing we have ever seen on the subject. We believe he has presented it in its true light."

Now we must not lose sight of the fact that all these are zealous advocates of "sanctification and holiness." And we congratulate them and ourselves also, that we are advancing in the knowledge of the constituent elements of moral perfection.

Nor will we complain of injustice and vituperation in all this, as it affords us corroberative testimony that we are, in very deed, drawing near, very near, the end of our struggle with "evil men and seducers, who are waxing worse and worse, deceiving and being deceived."

Nay, 'twere necessary that the said evil servants should come, and fill up the measure of their scorn and contempt of the faithful servants, and then again, to "eat and drink with the drunken." Drunken, not indeed with wine, nor yet with the blood of the saints, but with the "wine of her fornication."

Nor do they seek to conceal their shame, but openly mingle with the vilest of scoffers in pouring out their cups of bitterness and their vials of wrath upon us.

Do they not frankly tell us that their "lamps are gone out"? Nay, that "it will not avail anything to inquire what the prophetic periods are for." "And no advantage in konwing the time can be conceived, while a readiness for the event is our only safety." Was not this the scoffer's song in 1843? And do I err in saying that they openly mingle with scoffers in pouring out their vials of wrath upon us?

"How can we," says one, "by any fair exegesis of reasoning, claim that a knowledge of the time of Christ's coming is involved in the analogy of Christ's reasoning"? I wonder if the above thoughts were drawn from the "analogy" of the Lord's answer to the disciples who came to him and said, "tell us when shall these things be, and what shall be the sign of thy coming, and of the end of the world." Nay, I wonder if they were drawn from the persistent efforts of the "beloved" Daniel to understand the vision, and to gain a knowledge of the prophetic periods? And of Peter's charge, to take heed unto that "more sure word of prophecy"? And what he says also of the "prophets searching diligently," to understand the time specified in connection with both the first and the second advent? and of the angels, too, desiring to look into these things?

'Tis our duty, they tell us, to follow them into the enemy's camp and confess our sins! This is at least one or two degrees lower than I can get, and I must, therefore, beg to be excused. Nay, I shall "stand upon my watch," with the Bible in my hands, and definite time upon my tongue as long as I can see as clearly as I now see that 1873–5, will close the mad career of scoffers, and bring the Son of God to dwell with us on earth.

NOTE.—An article having appeared in THE TIMES too strenuous in its tone against the advocates of definite time, places us where we deem it fitting in justice to our time brethren, to insert Br. Clow's article. While we do not feel sure as to the definite time of the Lord's coming ourselves, we certainly would not denounce those who do; nor should they censure us for not accepting their views. Let us have no contention on this matter or any other. We are glad to have writers give us their own views in a kindly spirit upon Bible subjects. Free, independent discussion we like, but must insist upon writers avoiding all reference to the articles of others such as would necessitate personal controversy. [ED. TIMES.]

"Behold the Bridegroom Cometh."

BY J. D. CAREY.

If I were asked to explain the parable of the ten virgins after having carefully and prayerfully read it with the view of arriving at the great truth our Savior sought to inculcate, I would as I now believe, say that the ten virgins mean the Christian church; the going forth means the proclamation of the soon coming of our great King; the lamps mean the Bible which is our lamp; the "oil", means holiness without which no one can enter into the marriage feast: the tarrying of the Bridegroom in my opinion means that Jesus did not come when he was expected—that he was to tarry beyond the time he was expected to appear. "They all slumbered and slept", that is, they were in a waiting stall in a tarrying time, those who are ready and those who are not ready, but all resting in full assurance that every thing is ready. There is to be a waiting time. Blessed is he that waiteth and cometh to the 1335 days [years]. The midnight cry" as I think is the true cry that will be made by the thousands of Christians when "the sign of the Son of man" appears in heaven, whereby all will know that Christ has left the mercy seat, and has started to join His Bride. This sign will be seen and recognized by all the world, as the herald of His immediate Advent. It will cause all the tribes of earth to mourn. Then consternation and dismay will seize upon every heart, not staid upon Christ. This cry will be the shutting of the door. It will be synonymous with the voices in heaven saying "it is done." I believe the rising up to trim lamps, signifies the self-examination that will then take place.

Those who are ready will feel that all is well, and will "lift up their heads and rejoice, knowing their redemption draweth near." While the cold hearted professor, will turn to those who are prepared, and beg for help—will beg for their prayers, but their answers will be, we cannot help you, but go where help may be had. Then they will begin to pray in earnest. Then their long neglected prayer meeting will be revived, but all, all in vain, and while this fruitless task of trying to get ready is going on, Christ appears, and the translation of the living church takes place together with the resurrected saints, and at that time they will make application to be taken up, also, the dreadful answer will be, I never knew you.

During the tarrying time is the time for a thorough and deep self examination as to whether we have the oil; if not, there is time now to go and buy, which all may do without money and without price. O, my dear brother or sister, are you ready for immediate translation. If not, don't put off the work of preparation another hour, but go immediately and buy oil. You still have opportunity, but to-morrow it may be too late. As soon as that midnight cry is heard it will be too late, too late! It will not be too late to make the effort, but it will be too late to succeed, because Jesus has left the mediatorial throne.

The last grains of sand in the great hour glass of time, are just falling. A few more months, or in a few more days for ought we know, and "the sign of the Son of man will appear" when it will be too late. What a blessed thing it is to know we are ready for translation—ready to enter into the great supper. This "sign" that Jesus calls, "the sign of the Son of man" will be the flaming sceptre in the sky, the emblem of his kingly authority, and will precede his advent by only a short time. Let us watch for it all the time, and be ready "for in such an hour as ye think not, the Son of man cometh."

Self Culture and God's.

Sometimes there is a way of self-culture attempted in the name of religion, which is not in any proper sense religious, having no element of faith in it, and expecting no uplifting help for gracious inspirations. The self-culture is what a man may do upon himself; mending its defects, correcting his mistakes, chastening his faults, tempering his passions, putting himself into the charities he has learned from Christ, perhaps, to admire, finishing himself in the graces that have won his approval or commanded his respect. But the work is a far more hopeless one than he imagines, and is almost sure to result, even visibly, in more affectations of character than are likely to be much approved. Besides, it holds him to a continual self-contemplation which is selfish, and keeps him all the while filing and polishing on his nature by his will; which is, in fact, the most wearisome possible, or rather impossiable, kind of self-attention. The old faults conquered, too, will be coming back on him just when he is conquering another set. And, turning round to fight them off, he will find the whole swarm loose upon him again; till, finally, getting worried, and vexed, and soured, and discouraged, he virtually, though perhaps not consciously, gives over his whole undertaking. O, if he could have gone to Christ, or to God, in a true faith-culture, and let his faults fall off as blasted flowers fall off the trees, dislodged by the life-principle in them, his beautiful thought of finishing a character would have been how easily put forward—without a care, too, and in the sweetest liberty! No man finishes a character who does not go above himself, and take the culture of God's own Spirit; by that growing out a character from within which can not be manipulated inwardly from without. If there be any good gift that cometh from above, and can not be made below, it is character.

Unanswerable.

If the soul is immortal or an undying part of man, it must survive the death of the body. It is or it is not the conscious part. If it is not, then the dead are dead, soul and body, and both are mortal. If it is the conscious part, it is the only part God ever spoke to. How then could he say to immortality, "Thou shalt surely die." If the soul is immaterial, it is not material. Immateriality cannot die a material or literal death. If the soul dies a spiritual death it must be spiritually mortal, for nothing can die except what is mortal. If the soul is a spiritual thing and immortal, it must have spiritual immortality. Then it can not die a spiritual death.

If literal death destroys a literal thing, spiritual death destroys a spiritual thing. Again, if the soul is the only conscious part, it is the only part capable of sinning, and the only part that incurs or suffers the penalty of the law and this penalty is death. A death that does not kill is no death at all, neither does it mend the matter to say the soul is spiritually killed, for if the soul is spirit it can not die or be killed any other way than spiritually, and spiritually killing a spiritual thing is the same as literally killing a literal thing; so the penalty of the law is death. If it is not just that, it is just nothing, as we have shown, and we are at liberty to sin without fear of punishment of any kind.

DO THOSE in the church who complain that few even call on them, return what calls they do receive? Do not the neglected in some instances also neglect?

"Evil Servants."

BY DANIEL CLOW.

"But and if that evil servant shall say in his heart, my Lord delayeth his coming, and shall begin to smite his fellow servants, and to eat and drink with the drunken, the Lord of that servant shall come in a day when he looketh not for him, and in an hour that he is not aware of." (Mat. 24:49.)

This was uttered in contemplation of the general rising up of the people, in the last "generation"; and going forth (as illustrated in the parable of the "ten virgins") to meet the "Bridegroom" at his coming. And it is clear that the Lord anticipated a division among the people immediately subsequent to this, and that some would even smite their fellow-servants, and say, my Lord delayeth his coming, and begin to eat and drink with the drunken, (the nominal, frolicking professor of religion) and seek to draw us all into perdition with them. Nay, they boldly tell us now that our course has been one of shame, reproach, and folly; and that we have sinned against God and reason in our position on definite time. How can we, say they, by any fair exegesis of reasoning, claim that a knowledge of the time of Christ's coming is involved in the analogy of Christ's reasoning? And then follows an expression of deep distress in these words: "My heart aches at the desolation our folly has produced." And again: "It will not avail anything for us to inquire what the prophetic periods are intended for."

"It is too bad," they tell us, that the columns of our "representative papers" should be occupied with "definite time articles"; and the author of this charitable thought tells us, "I am almost certain that, could the mass of our people be allowed to express their opinions as to the propriety of occupying the columns of our representative papers with definite time articles, they would pronounce against it." And of this I have but little doubt. Nay, indeed they are saying, "My Lord delayeth his coming." And I must say that I doubt if even five of the "ten virgins" are left to welcome their Lord and Master.

Nay, there is a general abandonment not only of definite time, but also the prophecies which treat of definite time. And this is equivalent to a total repudiation of the personal second advent of our Lord and the establishment of his kingdom upon earth. Yea, the victory may be declared in favor of the brainless scoffers of the world, if indeed, traitors can claim immunity for their labor.

We gather a little comfort from the fact that there are a few confiding and faithful servants, holding on to the said prophecies as directed by the apostle who said, "We have a more sure word of prophecy, whereunto ye do well that ye take heed." And the positive injunction of our Savior, too, to watch even for the day and hour of his coming!

That there are many among the self-appointed teachers who, for a little notoriety among scoffers, are seeking to acquire the approbation of the world by the total abandonment of our faith, and an unconditional surrender of all that relates to manhood, is too obvious to admit of a doubt.

"The almost incessant agitation of definite time by certain elements connected with us as a people," says one, "has furnished the devil with plenty of material with which to hedge up our way." And another says, "There are thousands who believe in the near coming of Christ, and that, too, of the definite time question. They can tell you all about the prophetic periods. They seem to have the Bible on their tongues' end, and yet have not the spirit of Christ. A great deal of theory but no practice. A hollow theology which is only skin deep." This was uttered by another "representative paper," whose editor is entitled to the credit of indorsing the same in a separate column, in the following language:

"THE TEN VIRGINS.

In another column will be found an interesting article from Br. ———, on the parable of the ten virgins. We think it the best thing we have ever seen on the subject. We believe he has presented it in its true light."

Now we must not lose sight of the fact that all these are zealous advocates of "sanctification and holiness." And we congratulate them and ourselves also, that we are advancing in the knowledge of the constituent elements of moral perfection.

Nor will we complain of injustice and vituperation in all this, as it affords us corroberative testimony that we are, in very deed, drawing near, very near, the end of our struggle with "evil men and seducers, who are waxing worse and worse, deceiving and being deceived."

Nay, 'twere necessary that the said evil servants should come, and fill up the measure of their scorn and contempt of the faithful servants, and then again, to "eat and drink with the drunken." Drunken, not indeed with wine, nor yet with the blood of the saints, but with the "wine of her fornication."

Nor do they seek to conceal their shame, but openly mingle with the vilest of scoffers in pouring out their cups of bitterness and their vials of wrath upon us.

Do they not frankly tell us that their "lamps are gone out"? Nay, that "it will not avail anything to inquire what the prophetic periods are for." "And no advantage in konwing the time can be conceived, while a readines for the event is our only safety." Was not this the scoffer's song in 1843? And do I err in saying that they openly mingle with scoffers in pouring out their vials of wrath upon us?

"How can we," says one, "by any fair exegesis of reasoning, claim that a knowledge of the time of Christ's coming is involved in the analogy of Christ's reasoning"? I wonder if the above thoughts were drawn from the "analogy" of the Lord's answer to the disciples who came to him and said, "tell us when shall these things be, and what shall be the sign of thy coming, and of the end of the world." Nay, I wonder if they were drawn from the persistent efforts of the "beloved" Daniel to understand the vision, and to gain a knowledge of the prophetic periods? And of Peter's charge, to take heed unto that "more sure word of prophecy"? And what he says also of the "prophets searching diligently," to understand the time specified in connection with both the first and the second advent? and of the angels, too, desiring to look into these things?

'Tis our duty, they tell us, to follow them into the enemy's camp and confess our sins! This is at least one or two degrees lower than I can get, and I must, therefore, beg to be excused. Nay, I shall "stand upon my watch," with the Bible in my hands, and definite time upon my tongue as long as I can see as clearly as I now see that 1873–5, will close the mad career of scoffers, and bring the Son of God to dwell with us on earth.

NOTE.—An article having appeared in THE TIMES too strenuous in its tone against the advocates of definite time, places us where we deem it fitting in justice to our time brethren, to insert Br. Clow's article. While we do not feel sure as to the definite time of the Lord's coming ourselves, we certainly would not denounce those who do; nor should they censure us for not accepting their views. Let us have no contention on this matter or any other. We are glad to have writers give us their own views in a kindly spirit upon Bible subjects. Free, independent discussion we like, but must insist upon writers avoiding all reference to the articles of others such as would necessitate personal controversy. [ED. TIMES.]

"Behold the Bridegroom Cometh."

BY J. D. CAREY.

If I were asked to explain the parable of the ten virgins after having carefully and prayerfully read it with the view of arriving at the great truth our Savior sought to inculcate, I would as I now believe, say that the ten virgins mean the Christian church; the going forth means the proclamation of the soon coming of our great King; the lamps mean the Bible which is our lamp; the "oil", means holiness without which no one can enter into the marriage feast: the tarrying of the Bridegroom in my opinion means that Jesus did not come when he was expected—that he was to tarry beyond the time he was expected to appear. "They all slumbered and slept", that is, they were in a waiting stall in a tarrying time, those who are ready and those who are not ready, but all resting in full assurance that every thing is ready. O Father, Care For Me.

B. O. M'CULLOCH.

O Father, take care of thy weak, faltering child,
For the billows are heaving and the storm-clouds are wild;
But one glimmering ray shines now on my path,
To save me from darkness, to save me from wrath.

The dark, thorny ways of the world I have trod,
Forgetful of Jesus, forgetful of God—
But the pleasures of earth—oh! how soon they depart
And leave not a blessing to rest on my heart

I have watched and I've prayed for many long years,
But o'er my pathway thick perils appear;
O Father, regard me, thine arms 'round me twine,
And bid the bright sun on my pathway to shine.

I will trust thee in darkness, I will trust thee in light,
I will follow thee by day, I will follow thee by night;
Whatever the cross, I will bear it along,
And Jesus shall be all my joy and my song.

I know the darkness will soon pass away,
I know his coming will not long delay;
Then courage! my soul; the winds and the storm
But herald the coming of that glorious morn!

Abraham's Offering.

BY C. E. DARROW.

And Abraham stretched forth his hand and took the knife to slay his son. (Gen. 22:10)

A fearful shudder comes over every Christian heart at the citation of this wonderful passage. We feel our hearts burn within us, and our natures shrink away from the fearful spectacle which is here presented. A parent called to offer up his only son! Who but the "Father of the Faithful" could have refrained from saying, "Lord, must I slay my own son? Dost thou not remember the precious promises that can be fulfilled only on the condition that his life be prolonged? Didst thou give him only to tantalize me? Remember the long years through which his birth was expected; how our hearts throbbed with delight at the expectation of a son; and how Sarah laughed when she heard the precious news of a promised heir. Dost thou not remember all these things." Thus would any other person but the venerable patriarch, I fear, have expostulated with God! But he who staggered not at the promises, entered no complaint against this command, but "rose up early in the morning," took his beloved son and the fuel for the altar, and set out upon a three days' journey to the land of Moriah, as the Lord had directed him. Here, upon one of the mountains, (perhaps the one on which Christ was crucified,) he takes his son, binds him hand and foot, and lays him upon the altar for a burnt offering. Now he stretches forth his hand to slay the lad, and, while the knife is uplifted, "the angel of the Lord called unto him out of heaven and said. Abraham! Abraham!! And he said, Here am I. And he said, Lay not thine hand upon the lad, neither do thou anything unto him, for now I know that thou fearest God, seeing thou has not withheld thy son, thine only son, from me."

But, let us substitute one of ourselves in Abraham's stead for a few moments and see how the carnal heart would have led us to excuse ourselves from this fearful task. Perhaps we would have said: O Lord, let all my cattle be sacrificed before thee. Let every lamb of my flock bleed upon thine altar; or, if this will not appease thine anger; if sin lieth at the door so grievously that the blood of beasts will not satiate thee, then let me die—but let my son live. But if the offering must come from my own family; if it must be the fruit of my own body, then, O that Ishmael, 'the son of the bondwoman,' might die in his stead, for how can I give up Isaac, the son of Sarah, the son of my old age, the crown of my hopes, the solace of my life. If Isaac's blood must be shed, O then, let not my eyes behold it; and let it not be said that I have slain my son." It seems to me these would have been the natural promptings of every heart, and the quick response of every one but the "Father of the Faithful." From this figure of the atonement we may learn that it costs something to be saved; more perhaps, than the majority of Christians are willing to pay for it. "Abraham stretched forth his hand and took the knife to slay his son." Oh! how much there is in these words to thrill and make grateful every heart. Have we a just sense of their import? But here was the completion of Abraham's obedience and faith. Anything short of this and all would have been lost. This last agonizing moment, when the knife was taken and the hand uplifted to give the fatal blow, consummated the trial of Abraham's faith, and bequeathed it to the church of God as the most perfect of human models. "Abraham believed God and it was counted to him for righteousness."

"The Lamb of God which taketh away the sin of the word," prefigured by the son of Abraham, in due time appeared, made redemption for all, "tasted death for every man;" "gave himself a ransom for all, to be testified in due time"; destroyed "the face of the covering cast over all people, and the veil that is spread over all nations"; bringing "good tidings of great joy which shall be to all people"; for "all the ends of the earth have seen the salvation of our God"; "he is the true Light that lighteth every man that cometh into the world"; "he is the propitiation for our sins, and not for ours only, but for the sins of the whole world." These, with many other like passages, reveals to us what is to be the result of the trial of Abraham's faith; for it has been said "because thou hast done this thing, and hast not withheld thy son, thine only son; that, in blessing, I will bless thee, and in multiplying, I will multiply thy seed as the stars of heaven, and as the sand which is upon the sea shore....... And in thy seed shall all the nations of the earth be blessed."

Here then, is the mainspring of all our joy. It has in it more meaning, more light, and is of vastly more importance than any other passage in the whole Bible. It is the foundation—the corner-stone of the whole plan of salvation. All are blessed, because all are to be raised from the Adamic death. A death which is in, and of itself, eternal. It is therefore a very great blessing upon all mankind. To a person who is lost and ruined in death, it is an unspeakable favor to once more place him where he may obtain eternal life. Without this especial blessing through the atonement all our good works and labor for the good of mankind would avail us nothing. As one dies so dieth another, and "all would go to one place." But we have now the faithful promises of him who said, "come unto me all ye that labor and are heavy laden and I will give you rest." "For, as in Adam all die, even so in Christ shall all be made alive." To simply say that those who have once rejected Christ shall never be raised from the dead, is, in substance, denying an important part of the promise to Abraham, for all cannot be blessed without the taking "away the sin of the world."

The language of Christ is: "All that are in the graves shall hear my voice, and shall come forth: they that have done good unto the resurrection of life; and they that have done evil unto the resurrection of damnation." (John 5:28, 29.) But it may be said this text implies nothing to them who have actually had the gospel presented to them and have refused its teachings. But the Scripture saith "Behold the Lord cometh with ten thousand of his saints to execute judgment upon all, and convince all that are ungodly.... and of all their hard speeches which ungodly sinners have spoken against him." (Jude 1:15.) There is a class of individuals spoken of in the Bible as coming up and saying: "Lord, open unto us," to whom the Savior will say, "I was a stranger and ye took me not in, naked and ye clothed me not, sick and in prison and ye visited me not." ...."these shall go away into everlasting punishment." Those who have rejected Christ, it seems to me, are the very ones that "shall be brought forth to the day of wrath." (Job 21:30.)

The Influence of Error on the Religious Feelings.

[Second Article.]

We resume the point respecting the melancholly ones, and remark that we would gladly rescue them,

Shall we not, then, deal out some of this charity to men who educated amidst stern dogmas, fail to see the bright and beautiful features of the economy of grace, and approach God with a feeling of distrust hampering their confidence, or of trembling forebodings partially eclipsing the calm light of the future? To ask them to break at once all the fetters which from childhood have surrounded their hearts, and to disregard all the limitations which tradition has set to the beneficence of God in relation to the disciples of his Son, would be to ask too much. To unlearn theological propositions—even though unscriptural—which have grown with our growth and become part of our mental constution, is the most difficult task that can be assigned to a Christian man. Even though he would be thankful to get free from certain apprehensions which burden his prayers and send a note of discord through his songs of praise, there is the fear lest he give up, although unwillingly, certain portions of that divine truth which gives form and consistency to the entire revelation of grace. Better keep the dust which clings to the gem than run the risk of losing any portion of the gem itself; or, in other words, better the tradition, mournful as it is, than undertake a disentangling labor which may issue in the rejection of some precious thought of God. Most fully do we sympathise in this feeling, for we are familiar with the experience it indicates; but then, upon the other hand, you clean your windows that the healthful light may enter your dwelling, and it cannot be forgotten with what holy severity our Lord rebuked those who obscured the Word of God by their traditions. To the question, "Where was your religion before Luther?" the prompt reply was, "Where was your face before it was washed?" Divine truth cannot suffer by the severest test. Its nature is its guarantee of safety. We may not be able to detect all the foreign substances which dim the light of heaven, but we may be sure that some of them cling to us when we are unable to come before our Father's face with rejoicing. The gladness of holy confidence should fill our hearts when we come to the throne of grace in the name of our glorious High Priest, and our words of praise should be the utterances of hearts that are penetrated with a sense of God's surpassing love.

2. The melancholy of doubt prevents the full enjoyment of the Gospel privileges. This is truism; but be it remembered that we are speaking throughout of a genuine Christian; we are assuming that our sorrowful one is a child of God, who nevertheless, in consequence of corrupted theology, does not know his Fathr's character so so well as he otherwise might. Well, now, what we have to say is, that our truism means something,—at least to us it has a meaning of profound value. Just recall the peace and gladness, the "joy unspeakable"—to use their own expression—of the early Christians after the descent of the Holy Spirit, according to the Master's promise, and ask whether there could be in their creed any shade of the bewildering horrors that make the modern worshiper so miserable at times lest a husband or a wife, a brother or a child, should endure everlasting torment without the faintest hopes of either deliverance or death. Would they, could they have sung in their assemblies some of the woful lyrics that modern poets have placed in the hymnology of the church? No, and for these sufficient reasons; they knew their own election of God; they were chosen in Christ Jesus to evelasting life—were fully accepted in the beloved One; for them there was no condemnation; the full privileges of God's children were theirs, and all things worked together for their good. But they also knew that their election, instead of involving the reprobation of the rest of human kind, involved, on the contrary, great and manifest blessings to all but the willful rejectors of the Savior, who are to be destroyed. They were to shine as lights in the world that others might be benititted; and they were trained by the discipline of special grace to be kings and priests to God and the Lamb, that in the ages to come, through their instrumentality, all things may be gathered together in Christ.

But we live in the "day which dawned at pentecost." There has been no dispensational change since that hallowed morning of grace. We have precisely the same privileges of calling, adoption, and justification that they had, and are to draw near as they did in the full assurance of faith. We are, as they were, a kind of first-fruits of God's creatures, and are to show forth the glory of him who has chosen us to be the lights in the world. It is obvious, therefore, we are to worship and trust, and rejoice in the Lord always, as did the men who were in Christ before us. Why should we not lay aside every weight, whether it come from Plato or pope, philosophy or tradition, creed or catechism, and run with patience the race that is set before us? There is every reason from the love of God, the death and resurrection of our Lord, and the work of the Holy Spirit, why we should do so. Our worshiping assemblies should be scenes of hallowed joy, our prayers the requests of implicit faith, and our praises bursts of adoring thankfulness. All has been done for us; we stand where stood Paul and John and their fellow disciples, and like them we should glory in the Lord whilst we live by him and work for him.

3. It is dishonoring to Christ to come to the throne—of grace with the gloom of doubt and apprehension resting on our spirits. Did he not say on the cross "It is finished?" Are we not "complete in him?" Is he not "made of God unto us wisdom, and righteousness, and sanctification, and redemption?" Why hesitate to accept the full boon, as if the Father's heart and hand were half closed when he asks us to come and enrich abundantly,—ay, even to be "filled with all the fulness of God." Is not this marvelous wealth of grace treasured up in Christ Jesus, our Redeemer, our Life, our Head, for the very purpose of being bestowed on them that believe [illegible] him? Something to do to make us fi[illegible]pients? Away with the Christ-dishonoring and soul-slaying fasehood! Not worthy of the least of his mercies? Of course not; but for that very reason we come with open arms and grateful hearts to receive large presents from the royal bounty of our munificent King. O, trust him fully, brother! and do not pain the loving heart of Jesus with thy foolish "ifs" and "buts," and conditions, and impossible qualifications! Trust him freely for everything, and let him see the bright joy of love and gratitude upon thy face when it is upturned to him in prayer and praise!

4. It is cruelty to the world to let it think that a man's faith in Christ produces melancholy. We do not pretend to have the power of changing the heart; that is the work of God's Holy Spirit; but we have the power—and it is our duty and privilege to use it—of giving by our manner of life a true representation of the influence of the Gospel. We should be, and can be, faithful witnesses. The professed disciple of incarnate compassion who is sullen, disagreeable, uncharitable in speech, indifferent to the welfare of others, selfish, or habitually wears a countenance of gloom, fears false testimony, which deters men of the world from examining the Gospel for themselves, and distresses the inquirer whose heart yearns for peace through the blood of the Lamb. We cannot be always telling them what our faith is, but we can let them see what it does. If it makes us humble, contented, patient, kind, and cheerful; if through its blessed influence we bear afflictions meekly, and continue trusting and loving under the sure conviction that all is right, we shall be admirable preachers of the Gospel, and worldly men who know us will say, "These people have a good Master!"—Rainbow.

The Day of Judgment.

There is an important sense, in which the whole of human life is one continued Day of Judgment....The doctrine of a day of judgment—of a single day or a set time for all mankind—seems to me to have originated in the mistake of construing passages literally which were intended to be understood figuratively....Without pretending to be wise above what is written, I think we may safely hold, that the day of judgment to every individual will be the day of his death. It will begin then; by what process and instrumentalities it will be carried on, and how or when it will end, are among the secret things which belong to the Lord our God.... What chiefly and essentially distinguishes the Christian doctrine of the final judgment has nothing to do with the time and circumstances of that event; it relates to the principle,—to the law by which every thing is then to be determined.

If there is one thing clearer than any other in Christian ethics, it is this, —that every man is to stand or fall according to what he is in himself; not by what he does, except in so far as it expresses what he really is....We shall all be judged at the last "according to what we have done, whether it be good or whether it be evil, because this will make us what we are; nevertheless, everything at the Judgment Day will depend on what we are.—James Walker.

HE that reproveth another without praying for him, or having compassion on him, is a merciless foe; no good physician, but a troublesome, thoughtless prater.

"My Times are in Thy Hands."

BY MARY A. TIBBETTS.

Assurances of timely succor and protection are not more sweet and comforting to the lonely, weary traveler, as he finds his doubtful way through the wilds of a foreign and hostile shore, than are the promises of the precious Bible to the way-worn Christian as he makes his perilous journey through the wilderness of this world, waiting for the glory to be revealed at the appearing of our Lord and Savior; and though while in his state of preparation he finds himself in an enemy's land, surrounded by innumerable foes, who are ever ready to impede his progress, and effect, if possible, his final overthrow, yet, in all the mysterious dealings of his Heavenly Guide, which, in his weakness he is not always able to understand, coming to him, as they frequently do, in floods of deep waters and storms of adversity, he is cheerful as he moves onward amid the fearful struggle, if able to look up and with implicit confidence repeat "My times are in thy hand." Oh! what words of joy and peace flow into the soul at this blessed assurance; and though at times dark waves of persecution are permitted to sweep over the pilgrim, it is only that more beautiful traits of the Christian character may be more fully developed. The brightest examples of constancy and integrity have shed their lustre upon the world through sorrows and afflictions more than through prosperity. As one writer has remarked: "Was it not so with the Apostle John in his exile? His character was there more truthfully displayed than when the popular preacher at Ephesus. Was it not so with Bunyan? No one would have heard of him had he not been shut up in Bedford jail." And are there not thousands who are brought out and developed by the trials of life? You have seen the seed cast into the bosom of the earth; you have also seen it bring forth a plentiful harvest; the wind, the rain, the dark night—all have some part to act in producing that grain in abundance from a single kernel. The uninterrupted sunshine would not have done it; the heat of summer undiminished and constant would not have done it. But night came with its dews, the wind with its breath, and the rain contributed moisture, and they all combined to produce the harvest. So out of trials have come, at times, the finest specimens of true Christian character, and the rarest instances of pure devotion to God. The moral storms that burst over the world now and then, have much to do in training men and women for usefulness now and immortality hereafter. Who then, would falter in, or shrink from, the pathway trodden by the illustrious, good, and great of all ages. All had the same reliable promises to lean on in their darkest hours—the struggle against the consequences of their own sorrows, and the chastisements inflicted by the faults of others; yet their times, the disposing of their lives for time and for eternity, were in the hands of the Great Omnipotent, without whose knowledge not a sparrow falls to the ground. Then shall not our trembling hearts be encouraged, our weak faith strengthened, and our souls comforted as we look forward to the glorious coming of our blessed Redeemer, who will then gather together all the precious "jewels" he has been mining for six thousand years; and though refined in the furnace of affliction, yet they will then understand it all, and with the Psalmist be able to say, "My times were in thy hands."

Weigh every step that you are about to take whenever passions become involved. How often do things assume a different aspect when they are fairly considered!

Duties of the Hour.

BY I. C. WELLCOME.

What hath the Lord enjoined upon us? Duties grow out of, or depend upon, our relations to times and events. Each generation of the Lord's people find duties peculiar to their time. While there are duties of a general character equally incumbent upon all, yet the apostles were not required to build an ark, nor the antediluvians to be witnesses of the resurrection of Christ. We are not required to look for "false christs," nor the development of "the man of sin." Neither was the primitive church required to know that the second advent of her Lord was "near, even at the doors," or to "lift up their heads and look," knowing that their "redemption draweth nigh."

But what duties rest with peculiar force upon us, of this generation? Evidently to recognize the filling up of the prophetic mould by the events of the past and the present; to mark "the signs of the times" in which we live, and recognize in them the proof that "the Gentile times" are closing, and therefore to "lift up our heads and look up, for our redemption draweth nigh."

We are called upon to "know that the kingdom of God is nigh at hand." (Lk. 21: 30.)

And, in consequence of this knowledge, it becomes our duty as a people to make the facts known as speedily and extensively as possible; to let Zion hear the glad news that her long absent Lord is now about to return. It is our duty to seek, with these truths, to arouse the slumbering and careless virgins and prepare for the coming of the Bridegroom. It is our duty to cry: "Behold he cometh, go ye out to meet him"! To sound the alarm to the nations and multitudes who are in their sins, that the judgment is at hand, the great day of God—the day of vengeance of our God is just at hand; and to urge them to repentance and obedience to God, that they may be accepted and gain eternal life.

It is our duty to discover between the light of God's Word and the darkness of accumulated heathen and popish superstitions and traditions, and to show all reverence for, and fidelity to, the pure Word of God, regardless of the popular will of the people, or the prejudices of those who are still in error. It is our duty to make clear distinctions "between the precious and the vile," righteousness and unrighteousness, that we may cling to the one and have no sympathy for, nor fellowship with, the other.

We are in the perils of the last days in the controversies of Zion; we are to despise no man; to sneer at no man's views, but to compare them with the Scriptures; if they agree, accept them, if not, give them no reverence. We are to be "gentle towards all men, apt to teach, in meekness instructing those that oppose themselves." We are not called to preach what pious men most like to hear, not what slothful or wicked men hate most, but to preach and teach the plain, clear truths of the gospel—prophetic truths, truths especially due this generation, "whether men will hear or forbear."

We are not called to speculate on intricate and uncertain points which are not really stated and demonstrable by Scripture testimony; nor to so apply or interpret Scripture that we may justify all the views and movements of the church in the past, or teachings of those who have sincerely proclaimed the advent of Christ at hand. Errors, and consequently, false movements have been the common lot of the church in all her pilgrimage. But we may take profitable lessons from the past, and gain a better knowledge of the way. With the truth due this generation, let us go forth publishing it in pulpit and press; by papers, books, tracts; at home and abroad, and by the way; from house to house; by exhortation, song, and prayer. Living it out in our lives. Using our means. Consecrating means, time, and talents to the one great object, namely, the the publication of the truth, so that sinners may be saved, the church of Christ fed and built up in the Lord, and we be found ready with all the living church in the day when Jesus shall come, to say: "Lo! this is our God; we have waited for him and he will save us"; and with all the redeemed host sing, "Thou hast redeemed us by thy blood, and hast made us unto our God kings and priests, and we shall reign on the earth."

About Popes.

When a Pope dies there are some peculiar ceremonies. For instance, as soon as it is known in his palace that he is dead, a man enters the room where his body lies and raps on his head three times with a silver mallet, calling his name three times; then having waited for the reply, which he knew before-hand would not come, he announces formally that the Pope is dead, as if the rapping on the skull were the final proof. Then the great bell of the capitol is tolled, and everybody knows by that what has taken place; then there is a funeral of nine days, in which time the city seems given over to noise and disorder, as if it was without any one to govern it. Meanwhile, watched day and night by a guard, he lies on a sumptuous bier, with tapers blazing around him, and crowds of people come and kiss the toe of his slipper, and look at him in his splendid robes, and at last he is laid away in the vault, and the cardinals begin the struggle for a successor.

The choice is always from their own number; consequently everybody aspires to the office; and deep is the scheming as soon as there is a probability that it will become vacant. Each is entitled to one vote, and his right cannot be taken from him. Even if he is a criminal, he may be taken from prison to vote. The Pope must be an Italian by birth; no man from any other nation has occupied the place for nearly three hundred and fifty years.

At the ceremony of inaugurating a new Pope, one of the customs is to put a bunch of tow on the end of a staff and burn it just before his eyes, and while it is swiftly burning and perishing, the voice of the official who holds it solemnly says to him, "St. Peter, sic transit gloria mundi," to remind him that all things are vain and perishable.

It used to be necessary that the horse ridden by the Pope on state occasions should be gray; and when he mounted it must be from a stool with three steps, and if any royal person were present, he should hold the stirrup, and walk beside the horse, leading him.

The first who dared to set himself above sovereigns was Leo III., who was a friend to Charlemagne; and at some grand festival where the French nobility and Roman clergy were present in all their glory, Leo came forward, and to the surprise of everyone, placed a magnificent crown on the head of that prince and anointed him.

After this, the Popes took part in politics, made wars and treaties, forbade marriages, and excommunicated whoever displeased them. They meddled in the affairs of nearly every court in Europe, and made themselves a terror. The excommunication of a sovereign was felt to be a most dreadful calamity, and no wonder; for while he was in this state, the church bells were not rung, sacrament was not administered, altars and pictures were covered with black cloth, statues of saints were taken down and laid on beds of cinders and ashes, and there was a general appearance of desolation and mourning.

Sometimes the Pope granted what was called a "dispensation," if the offender would build a church, or pay a heavy fine; and in [illegible] a vast amount of wealth was [illegible] by this great potentate. A [illegible] was liable at any moment [illegible] forfeited if he gave offence in [illegible] It was so in all Catholic countries [illegible] there were frequent contests between property and rights were given up, but the one man at the head of the Romish church usually prevailed, for his secret agents were everywhere and men were superstitious and fearful. More than one king asked his forgiveness, going barefoot and on his knees even, to sue a pardon.

The number of popes, according to the Romish calendar, from St. Peter to Pius IX., is two hundred and fifty-eight. Not many of them have been known by their true names: thus, Nicholas Breakspeare, an Englishman, and the last who was of foreign birth, is known in the list as Adrian IV. Immediately after his election, the Pope takes a new name; the first one who did this is supposed to have been ashamed of his own, which was Osporco (hog's flesh) and his successors, without similar reason, followed his example.

Peter has not been a name chosen, because none wished to assume that of the first, the vicar, as they say, whom the Master appointed. There have been sixteen called Gregory; Clement, fourteen; Benedict, fourteen; Innocent, thirteen; Leo, twelve; Pius nine. The present Pope, Pius IX., has occupied the place longer than any other.—Christian Weekly.

Full Consecration.

"Put on the whole armor of God."
"This is the will of God, even your sanctification."

That we may attain to any state of grace, it is, of course, necessary to believe that state attainable. Could one ever receive the forgiveness of sin doubting or disbelieving the possibility of receiving forgiveness, or of Christ's power to forgive?

Do we believe that here we may be "pure in heart," "pure even as he is pure"? (1 John 3:3.) Do we believe that the "blood of Jesus Christ cleanseth from all sin—from all unrighteousness"? (1 John 1: 7–9), and that "He gave himself for us, to redeem us from all iniquity"? (Titus 1:14.) Do we believe that he is able to "establish our hearts unblamable in holiness before God"? (1 Thes. 3: 13.) Do we believe and pray with the apostle that we may be "sanctified wholly, soul, body, and spirit," not at death, but in life? For we are to be "preserved blameless unto the coming of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ."

"Then, having these promises, dearly beloved, let us cleanse ourselves from all filthiness of the flesh and spirit, perfecting holiness in the fear of God." (2 Cor. 7:1.) Let us at once seek to attain to this great blessedness, for now is the accepted time: today is the day of salvation; now is the Fountain open; now may we wash and be clean.

But how to step into these Bethesda waters, for we have no strength of ourselves? "My God shall supply all you need," "his grace is sufficient," not only to sanctify and save, but to assist us to "lay aside every weight and the sin that doth so easily beset us," and enable us to make an offering complete and perfect; to lay our little all upon the altar—little in reality, but still our all. And how the soul shrinks from the sacrifice! Oh! the agony, the anguish of self-crucifixion! Oh! it is no small thing to consecrate ALL to God, body, soul, spirit, time, talents, influence, reputation, aye, all of life, a living sacrifice; yet nothing else will meet the demands of God.

But how shall we know when the offering is perfect and entire, the sacrifice complete? "If in anything ye be otherwise minded, he will reveal even this unto you." Come then, O my soul, and with heart and life all dedicated to God, accept the blessing Christ waits to bestow. "From all thy filthiness and from all thy idols I will cleanse thee." This is the word of promise. Cast thyself upon it, and as sure as thou dost believe, and doubtest not, refining fire shall go through thee: all thy dross shall be removed, and the assuring spirit shall sweetly whisper, "The work is accomplished, thou art wholly mine."—Sel. by G. E. M.

Praise Children.

There is an old superstition that praise is too good a thing to be given to the children; that it is too rich for their mental and moral digestion. Some parents are so afraid that a child will grow proud, that they never praise him, and this course is often disastrous. It is apt to produce either too much self-assertion—for self-assertion is a legitimate outgrowth of the withholding of commendation to which one is entitled—or to engender a self-distrust or melancholy hopelessness of disposition.

Praise is sunshine to a child, and there is no child that does not need it. It is the high reward of one's struggle to do right. Thomas Hughes says you can never get a man's best out of him without praise. You certainly can never get a child's best out of him without praise. Many a sensitive child, we believe, dies of hunger for kind commendation. Many a child, starving for the praise that a parent should give, runs off eagerly after the designing flattery of others.

To withhold praise where it is due is dishonest, and in the case of a child such a course often leaves a stinging sense of injustice. Motives of common justice, as well as regard for the future of the child, should influence the parent to give generous praise for all that deserves it. Of course there is a difference in the constitution of children. Some cannot bear so much praise as others, and some need a great deal.

It should never be indiscriminate. We remember a wonderful woman who taught school in one village until she educated a part of three generations. She was one of the most successful of teachers. But her success lay in her gift of praising with discrimination. A bad boy who was a good scholar got praised for his brilliancy, sandwiched between her abomination for bad behavior, and so was won to better life; and we recall a good girl who had no gift of learning rapidly, but who was saved from utter despair by the praise she got for her untiring industry. Into the discouraged hearts of the children the praise of the teacher came like sunlight. And the virtues, like other fruits, can ripen in the sunshine only.—Edward Eggleston, in Christian at Work.

A HUMMING-BIRD met a butterfly, and being pleased with the beauty of its person and glory of its wings, made an offer of perpetual friendship.

"I cannot think of it," was the reply, "as you once spurned me and called me a drolling dolt."

"Impossible," exclaimed the humming bird. "I always entertained the highest respect for such beautiful creatures as you."

"Perhaps you do now," said the other, "but when you insulted me I was a caterpillar. So let me give you a piece of advice: Never insult the humble, as they may some day become your superiors."

If you wait till you get a perfect pastor before you sustain one, you will wait till doomsday. There are none such on earth. Your pastor, whom you are censuring so severely, is probably as good as the majority of God's servants.

Be ye humble before God, but resolute before men.

KNOWLEDGE AFTER DEATH.

In a recent number of the Christian Advocate an article appears from E. L. Fancher, LL.D., in support of a life of consciousness between death and the resurrection.

Great men are getting waked up on this question, but they fail to bring great arguments, not because they lack talent, but because they are on the weak side of the subject. The writer says:

> One overwhelming thought is true: all the human souls who once had an abode in mortal flesh on this earth from the time of Adam and the patriarchs to the present day still live! They who have died have only passed through the mortal scene, and emerged into some intermediate state of their immortal economy beyond the grave. They are not extinct nor annihilated, nor have they passed into forgetfulness or sleep.

That will pass for a "thought," but all thoughts are not true. We prefer proof. Thoughts prove nothing. Such a thing as a living soul, disconnected from a body, is a creature of imagination. The soul, when the term is used to signify life, may be said to leave the body, but not to live, as it is not an entity. A personal soul never leaves the body at death, or at any other time. The writer adds:

> Why should it be thought that the ties of sympathy and interest which in this life bind the souls of believers are severed by death? It cannot be that the departed mother has forgotten her child, the husband his wife, or the child its parents. Holy friendships are only refined by holier employments. It is said that memory is the seat of knowledge. If knowledge be made perfect in the heavenly state, the functions of memory must be quickened and unimpaired. To the earthly perceptions there will be added the heavenly, and insatiable faculties will be ever susceptible of sacred enjoyments.

Here are several conclusions deduced from assumed premises. First let the proof be given that the soul is conscious after the death of the body. It is easier to take this conclusion for granted; but this is the point in dispute, and here proof only can settle the question. "The dead know not anything" sounds unlike proof in that direction; and yet this is a Bible statement: nor can its force be turned aside by the statement that it refers only to the body, and not to the soul, for that would be equivalent to saying that the body only is the knowing part during life, thus depriving the soul of intellect entirely; for whatever part possesses knowledge during life is deprived of it in death. The writer proceeds:

> No want or weariness will be known. "They shall hunger no more, neither thirst any more; neither shall the sun light on them nor any heat....and God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes.

But this text refers only to the resurrected saints, and has no allusion to disembodied men. Did immortal souls ever "hunger" or "thirst," or suffer from "heat," or shed "tears"?

The following attempt at proof is made:

> When our blessed Lord confuted the heresy of the Sadducees, who denied the resurrection, he said to them, "As touching the resurrection of the dead, have ye not read that which was spoken unto you by God, saying, I am the God of Abraham, and the God of Isaac, and the God of Jacob? God is not the God of the dead, but of the living." The declaration of our Savior fully proves that the soul outlives the body, and that the souls of the patriarchs he thus named were living with God, each retaining his own identity.

How strange that the fact is constantly overlooked by our opponents, that this argument of the Savior was "touching the resurrection," and not touching a disembodied state! Jehovah is not the God of the "dead" in one sense of the term—the same sense used upon another occasion when he said, "The maid is not dead, but sleepeth"; not dead in the sense of finality, as the Sadducees claimed: in that sense of death he is not a God of the dead: but in consideration of the fact that they are to wake up, he is pronounced their God, for prospectively, "all live unto him," though dead to human view.

Another fruitless attempt is made to prove a disembodied state, as follows:

> There are other proofs in the word of revelation which testify to the same great truth: "Wherefore, seeing we are compassed about with so great a cloud of witnesses, let us lay aside every weight....and let us run with patience the race that is set before us, looking unto Jesus the author and finisher of our faith." The apostle in the chapter preceding this verse individualizes and mentions by name many glorious witnesses of the faith, beginning with Abel. These all had died in the faith, having desired a heavenly country; and we are told by the infallible word of truth that God "hath prepared for them a city." We have here no continuing city, but seek a city out of sight, which hath foundations whose builder and maker is God. Its mansions gleam beyond the mists of the dark valley. Our blessed Lord said, "In my Father's house are many mansions....I go to prepare a place for you." Wondrous thought! A heavenly home of many mansions, prepared by Jesus for his followers! What did he mean when he said, "Where I am ye may be also"? Dr. Clarke remarks on this passage, "I am going to that state of glory where there is not only a place of supreme eminence for myself, but also places for all my disciples; various degrees of glory, suited to the various capacities and attainments of my followers." The words "many mansions" convey the idea of a social [illegible] habitations of near proximity where a [illegible] society dwell. Social and friendly intercourse is an incident belonging to such a society, and this involves a knowledge of, and communion with, each other. The conversation will be on topics of interest and pleasure, and the identity and character of each of the inhabitants shall be perfectly known. "As we have borne the image of the earthly, so we shall also bear the image of the heavenly.

1 While we are told that "these all died in faith," we are also told that they had "not received the promises"; they saw them "afar off."

2. While they looked for a city, it was a "city to come"—not a city to emigrate to.

2. While Christ spoke of "mansions" to be enjoyed by his disciples, and of going to prepare a place for them, he did not intimate that he would receive them in a disembodied state, or before the resurrection, but expressly affirmed "I will come again and will receive you unto myself"—and when he comes again the saints will rise; so they will be received in their resurrected state instead of a disembodied state.

4. The "image of the heavenly," instead of being a disembodied state, is simply the image of immortality borne by Christ when raised as the first-fruits of the holy dead. "Our vile [corruptible] body" will be changed, and fashioned like Christ's glorious body.

Again he states:

> Our Lord's intercessory prayer will be answered to the joy of his faithful followers, "Father, I will that they also whom thou hast given me be with me where I am, that they may behold my glory."

Be with him when? Instead of guessing that it will be at death, we hear Jesus saying "I will come again and receive you unto myself": they will behold his glory, but not in a disembodied state.

> The "general assembly and church of the first-born, which are written in heaven," are a glorious company of happy associates, with whom the isolation of solitude is unknown. Social intercourse will highten their heavenly felicity. They will never sigh for the society of a lost friend, but will experience the perfect bliss of the "communion of saints."

Yes, "written in heaven," but not living there. When Christ sent out his disciples to cast out devils, he said to them, "Rejoice not that the spirits are subject to you, but rather rejoice that your names are written in heaven." (Lk. 10: 20.) Yet they were living on the earth. The resurrected church of the first-born are to come to Mount Zion, when Jesus and the angels come from heaven.

Our friend goes on to say:

> St. Paul looked forward to the social joy of heaven when he expressed his persuasion that he should meet and recognize his friends of Thessalonica after death. "For what," he exclaims, "is our hope, our joy, our crown of rejoicing? Are not ye in the presence of our Lord Jesus Christ at his coming?" Stations, ranks, eminences, and dignities may display the differences in glory of the redeemed; but it is believed by great and good men, who have made the Bible their life-long study, that earth's pure and valued friendships shall be renewed in the bright world above. If such friendships do not survive the grave, how can it be that God shall wipe all tears from the eyes of the saints? How often here in contemplation do we "join our friends above, who have obtained the prize?
> E'en now, by faith, we join our hands
> With those that went before;
> And greet the blood besprinkled bands
> On the eternal shore.
> The wise and the good of all ages will compose the happy community of the redeemed and shall be fellow-worshipers and fellow-citizens in that vast assembly. The glad theme of their most ecstatic song has been wafted to our ears from that isle in the Ægean, "Thou hast redeemed us to God by thy blood, out of every kindred and tongue and people and nation; and hast made us unto God kings and priests."

"In the presence of our Lord, Jesus Christ, at his coming," sounds quite unlike being with him at death, in a disembodied state, or "in the world above." Tears are to be wiped from the very eyes that have wept, and not from the eyes of shades that never wept tears. Our friends cannot obtain the prize before the judgment; and when they sing the song referred to, they will not suppress a part of it, but sing, "We shall reign on the earth."

THE CRUCIFIXION.

A friend wishes to know whether Christ was crucified on Friday, as many claim? We answer, No. That impression has its only foundation in the fact that the day succeeding the crucifixion was a Sabbath day, and it has been taken for granted that it was the seventh day Sabbath, while John expressly affirms, "And that Sabbath was an high day"—or a festival Sabbath. It was no uncommon thing for two Sabbaths to come together, as in this case. This entirely does away with the argument for the crucifixion on Friday; for he could rise on the morning after the Sabbath which was preceeded by an "high day" Sabbath, or festival Sabbath, and still allow Jesus time to be "in the heart of the earth three days and three nights." The effort to crowd in three days and nights between Friday night and early Sunday morning—only about thirty-six hours all told—on the principle that a fraction of a day is counted for a day is entirely inexcusable. It is true that a fraction of a day is counted for a day provided the fraction exceed one half; and this principle is needed to make out that Christ was crucified even on Thursday instead of Friday; for he did not die till three o'clock p. m. our time, leaving only three hours to the beginning of an other Jewish day, too small a fraction to be counted as a day. From this point we will commence to count to find three days and three nights, on the principle of allowing a fraction to stand for a whole day, or a whole night, provided that fraction shall exceed one half. Thursday night is one night, Friday night makes two nights, and Saturday night makes three nights, lacking a little fraction, for it was "yet dark" when Jesus arose. Thus on this principle we get the right number of nights. Now let us count the days on the same principle. Thursday was too far gone to count a fraction as a day, so Friday was one day, Saturday made two days, and about 12 hours of Sunday, (the day beginning with the evening) makes a fraction of three days, only just large enough to count. Even this count falls about 12 hours short of three full days and nights (about 60 hours out of the 72 hours,) while if crucified on Friday he was dead only 36 hours out of the 72—only half of the full time.

THE GATE TO HEAVEN.

On a recent funeral occasion, a clergyman attempted to comfort the mourners by affirming: "Death is the gate to let our friends into heaven." Again: "We enter through the gate of death, and meet angels." After drawing this picture, he proceeded to spoil it after this fashion: "When the last one dies, Christ shuts and locks the gate, and throws away the keys; and thus death is destroyed."

After this eulogy upon death it is too bad to lock the gate and throw away the keys. If death is such a great blessing, why not let it continue? Why lock the gate of heaven and throw away the keys?

But is death a blessing? "Sin entered into the world, and death by sin."

Did sin really bring a blessing into the world, even a passport into heaven? Is our entrance into heaven the result of sin? Let us go back another step, and we find that Satan brought sin: So from the assumed premise the following conclusion is inevitable; death is the gate of heaven, but death owes its origin to sin, and sin owes its origin to Satan; so without Satan's effort, we never should have had this gate to heaven. Are we really so deeply indebted to Satan? Is he the great benefactor of the race?

When we trace the matter up to its fountain head we discover that the theory of salvation for disembodied souls is dependent upon Satan, in part, at least; for the disembodied state is the result of death, and death is the result of sin, and sin emanated from Satan. In other words, if it had not been for Satan, there could have been no sin; if it had not been for sin, there could have been no death; if it had not been for death, there could have been no disembodied state, (if there is any now;) and without a disembodied state, there could have been no salvation of disembodied men; so this kind of salvation rests upon sin and Satan as chief corner stones. God's plan deals with veritable men, who could be saved without first dying.

THE ATONEMENT.

> What would have been the condition of the human race had there been no provision made for their salvation, through the atonement of Christ? Would generation after generation return to dust and be as though they never had been? Or would their spirits be consigned to that doleful region where Pluto reigns, and there to be tormented for ever and ever? And what benefit would the atonement be to the wicked, or what change will it make in their condition? Will they not be as though there had never been a Savior?
> This is a matter on which information would be desirable. Yours respectfully,
> H. J. Hughes.

1. Without a provision for salvation through the atonement, the wicked would have received the punishment which their sins call for, after being judged; and those who now reject the proffered benefits of the atonement will share the same fate. If God had not arranged that Christ should be the judge, he could have made other arrangements, for he would not have punished unjudged sinners. But as the matter is now arranged, it is impossible for the dead either to be raised or judged except by Christ.

2. If there had been no salvation arranged for man through the atonement, the spirits of men would have been no more capable of punishment than now. God deals with the man himself for sinning, and that, too, after judgment. Not by inflicting endless torment, but by giving him the "wages of sin," after the day of settlement arrives, which is to be not only death of some kind, but the "second death."

3. As atonement signifies agreement, concord, or reconciliation, it can affect only those who accept proffered pardon. The atonement must effect a moral change in the condition of men, before it can effect a physical change. But men must come up to be judged for their sins, even though they expect the atonement and thereby loose its proffered benefits.

"HEIRS OF HEAVEN."

While theologians freely talk about our being "heirs of heaven," we fail to find anything of this kind in the Bible. We read of being "heirs of the kingdom, which God hath promised to them that love him." (James 2: 5.) But he has never promised us heaven, but rather, "the kingdom under the whole heaven," (Dan. 7: 27,) even "the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world." (Mat. 25: 34.) Again we read: "If ye be Christ's then are ye Abraham's seed, and heirs according to the promise." (Gal. 3: 29.)

What promise? Says Paul: "for the promise that he should be the heir of the world, was not to Abraham, or to his seed through the law, but through the righteousness of faith." (Rom. 4: 13.) Not heir of heaven, but "heir of the world." Such is the testimony of the Bible—"heirs of the kingdom," and "heirs according to the promise," and "heirs of the world." Is Bible testimony reliable? Then theology is wrong.

Again, we are said to be "joint heirs with Christ," (Rom. 8: 17.) So of course we shall be joint possessors; and "joint heirs" come into possession at one and the same time—when the youngest heir is of age. Thus we learn (1) that Christ is still an "heir" of the kingdom, and not yet a possessor, though he has gone into a far country to have his right to the kingdom recognized, and to return again. (2.) Being joint heirs with him, we shall all receive the kingdom at the same time, thus it is true that "they without us should not be made perfect." (Heb. 11: 39.)

Seeking Light.

Editor Times:

For thirty years I have preached the gospel of the kingdom, being now pastor of the Congregational church in this place. Some of my members take your paper, and hold your views, at least in part. They have kindly brought me the numbers from week to week, and have loaned me several works by yourself and brethren, which I have read with much interest and care. I find myself sympathizing with some of your opinions wherein you do certainly apply a corrective to orthodox errors, which I have for many years deprecated, and labored and preached against, and shall do so yet more strenously in the future.

But one of your prominent doctrines has struck me with surprise, and has led me to a thorough and candid examination of the whole ground. It is your doctrine of no soul separable from the body, or existing apart from it. I have been wont to hear of soul-sleepers, and have understood them to teach an entire unconsciousness of the soul through the long sleep of death. There are arguments that do favor that view; and it is certain that many orthodox teachers are giving altogether too much activity and knowledge to the sleeping saints. But your view is, I perceive, not that of the soul sleep; you are teaching that there is no soul at all in death. That looks to me very different. I have been for some weeks thoroughly searching into the grounds for it, and carefully examining your works on the subject and those of your brethren. And with a sincere desire for the truth I have come to the deliberate conclusion that on that point, you are wrong. And, it seems to me, as if you yourself can be brought to see your mistake in this respect. I say this on the ground that you yourself are an honest, candid Christian, and are sincerely desirous to come at and to proclaim the truth. I have that much faith in you, or I would not write you this letter.

There is another reason why I write. Having been for some months reading your paper, and looking calmly, as an outsider, at your views, and sympathizing in some of your endeavors, I can judge somewhat dispassionately of the movement and its prospects. And my opinion is that your view on this one point is damaging the progress of your other and more important views. If you be in er-here, as it seems to me you are, it is an r repulsive to the mass of the people, and rror easily refuted; and when this is , it prejudices the masses against your r ideas. For this reason I think it worth while to review the subject candidly, see if a little different position cannot be s I have been spending so much time in oughly investigating this point, I am what prepared for a treatment of the er; and, if you wished it, I should be ng to furnish a series of articles for your r, giving the argument in favor of a real-istent soul in death (though unconscious or less if you please). This would not mit you or your paper to the view, but d give you opportunity, if you felt it ssary, to reply from week to week give the argument as candidly summed n your side. Would not a calm discuss of the subject, in this Christian spirit, be nefit to the cause of truth, whatsoever conclusions arrived at? My own earnest re is simply to know "what is truth"? I trust we all are anxious for only one thing. You can signify your will-ess to accede to the proposal by inserting (if you think best) in your paper.

have the honor to be yours sincerely,

S. B. GOODENOW.

Ve like the tone of the above letter. reathes a spirit of earnest, candid estigation, showing that truth, not troversy, is the writer's object. at he should differ somewhat from views is not surprising. He occu-s just the ground very many have le in the transition state between common orthodox views and our t. The learned and able Constable l for a time to the same opinion, as he soul in death, but has since aban-ed it, and given us one of the t works ever written upon "Sheol l Hades," in proof of the absolute onsciousness of the dead. And if "dead know not anything," if their y "thoughts" have "perished," the l must virtually be as dead as the ly is, leaving little occasion to con-ert nice distinctions, as to whether such a state it may not still exist in parate condition.

l'he difficulty in the writer's mind ms to lie here. Educated, like all us, to believe that the soul is, of it-f, a separate, distinct personality—body only its dwelling place—a de-l of this view is, to him, a denial t man has any soul at all. Now, believe that the man himself is the l; and that, when the man dies, the l dies. Man is the result of mate-l organism, vivified by the spirit of from God. God made man of the st of the earth, and breathed into nostrils the breath of life, and he the man—became a living soul—crea-re, or person. In this sense the Bi-e speaks of the souls that went down to Egypt. The souls Joshua utterly stroyed with the sword. (Josh. 10: .) The souls that were saved in the k by water.

The man and the soul are thus made e; and when the man goes down to e grave the soul goes into the grave. b says, "His soul draweth near to e grave." (Job 33: 22.) The Psalm-t says, "But God will redeem my ul from the power of the grave." 's. 49:15.) When God saved Heze-ah from the grave he said, "Thou ast, in love to my soul, delivered it om the pit of corruption." (Is. 38: .) These Scriptures manifestly ach us that the soul of man goes into e grave in the same sense that the an goes into the grave, where there no work, nor device, nor knowledge, r wisdom; and there he sleeps—the hole man—till he shall be awakened the morning of the resurrection.

This is the Hebrew faith. This is od's revelation of man's only hope of future life. Death is a sleep to the hole man; and a sleep so profound at none but God, who raiseth the ead, can awake us from it.

Our brother very truthfully remarks at "It is certain that many orthodox achers are giving altogether too uch activity and knowledge to the eeping saints." The Scriptures give one at all. And no Scriptural doc-ine is so much needed in these days as "a corrective to orthodox errors" as this very one. Spiritism is blighting the church, sapping the foundations of the Christian faith, and blaspheming its Founder. These sad fruits are but this orthodox error, respecting the dead, gone to seed. This doctrine of the state of the dead has graded the track and laid down the rails; and Spiritists had only to put on the rolling stock and run the train. And the Bible view, as held by Adventists, is the only one that will effectually meet and combat this error. This takes it out by the very roots; it tears up the track, leaving neither ties, rails, nor grade.

While we do not purpose to open our columns to mere controversy, we hold ourselves open and ready to receive and give whatever of light we can as it shines from the sacred page.

"GOD OF THE DEAD."

A friend desires to know whether the statement made by the Savior concerning his Father, "He is not a God of the dead, but of the living," (Luke 20: 38,) in connection with Paul's statement. "To this end Christ both died and rose, and revived that he might be Lord both of the dead and the living," (Rom. 14: 9,) does not teach that Christ is the God of the dead instead of his Father? That this cannot be the Savior's meaning is evident from these considerations:

1. In the same sense in which Christ is styled the Lord of the dead, he is also styled Lord of the "living," while the Father is also pronounced "God of the living."

2. God said to Moses, long years after Abraham died, "I am the God of Abraham," &c,—not my Son shall be their God, but "I am the God of Abraham, and Isaac, and Jacob." Christ adds: "For all live unto him," though dead unto us; that is, "all live unto him" prospectively—in view af a coming resurrection. To refute the Sadducee theory of the eternity of death over those patriarchs, Christ affirmed, "He is not a God of the dead," for in view of the resurrection, they "all live unto him," else he would not have pronounced himself their God. With the Sadducee view of death, endless death, he is not "the God of the dead;" and it was that view, and nothing else, that his remark was aimed at. The argument was simply this: as God is Abraham's God, but is not the God of those who are dead forever, therefore Abraham must live again by a resurrection; in view of which prospectively "all live unto him." He is not the God of the dead in the Sadducee sense of death.

TRANSGRESSING THE LAW.

Paul in giving an account of the penalty passed upon all men, through the disobedience of Adam, (Rom. 5: 13,) says: "For until the law sin was in the world, but sin is not imputed where there is no law." Please explain what law Paul referred to, and if not the Mosaic law, in what way could sin be in the world before Adam's transgression?

B. F. WORKMAN.

It will not do to affirm that there was no sin in the world before the giving of the Mosaic law, for Paul affirms that "sin was in the world" until that event; yet "sin is the transgression of the law." The simple truth is, the expressed will of God is called his law, in the various stages of its development, both before and after the day of Moses—it being one law with various features of development Adam's sin consisted in transgressing God's law, "Thou shalt not eat." But the will of God was more fully revealed subsequently. Each sin is the transgression of some feature of divine law. A new form of law was given under Moses, and a later form under the gospel. There was no sin in the world till Adam transgressed God's law.

TAKE THE OFFER.

We call attention to the new advertisement of our Business Agent, offering special inducements both to subscribe for, and to get subscribers for THE TIMES; also to those who are in arrears to pay up the old score, and one year in advance.

It is hoped by this means to increase our list of paying subscribers so as to sustain our paper in its great mission, and at the same time give these valuable works donated, a wider circulation. Every one wishing to disseminate Bible truth in opposition to the traditions and fables of men, now have the way opened by which they can do so effectually. Many who feel unable to buy tracts to read and distribute, can avail themselves, of this offer and at the same time confer a double benefit upon the cause they wish to promote, inasmuch as it will increase the circulation of both the paper and these publications. We do hope our friends will take hold and rush this work right along as they certainly can do it, and the cause demands that they should.

Field's discussion is an able presentation, and a triumphant vindication of our views as to the state of the dead, meeting the strongest arguments on the other side, and is just the work to put into the hands of those who are willing to examine fully the question.

As to Constable's work upon the nature and duration of future punishment it has no equal. It is the production of a ripe scholar, an able critic and divine thoroughly conversant with the original Scriptures, and treats the subject in a masterly and convincing manner. As this work is published by parties outside of the Advent body it will meet with far less prejudice in its circulation, and be read by many who would throw it aside, if it came to them having our imprint. It is doing a great work in leading those who examine it to abandon the unscriptural dogma of endless life in misery, and accepting the revealed truth of life everlasting only in Christ.

"The Bible Doctrine of the Soul," is a new work by Prof. Ives of Yale College; of which too much cannot be said in its praise: and we refer the reader to a full notice of it under the head of Book Notices. We appeal to each reader to interest himself earnestly in this work, for you can help us in this way if in no other.

OUR JUNE MEETING.

A very important meeting of the Western Association is called for June 10, at which it is very desirable there should also be a full attendance of delegates from our conferences. The committee on whom devolves the responsibility and labor of making the necessary arrangements, ask the favor of all who expect to be present, to notify at once our Business Agent, A. W. Tucker, to that effect. In so doing it will very much aid the committee in making needful accommodations. Please do not neglect it.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

AT HOME.

—Stokes has been denied a new trial and will no doubt be hung.

—Oaks Ames died at Boston on the night of the 8th.

—Hon. Salmon P. Chase, Chief Justice of the United States Supreme Court, and long one of the leading statesmen of this country, died at New York city Wednesday of apoplexy, aged 65 years.

—The reports from Louisiana during the last few days indicate a condition of civil war the extent or limit of which cannot now be foretold. An attempt was made on Thursday to assassinate Kellogg in New Orleans. The steamboat men refuse to carry United States troops to the locality of disturbance.

—A dispatch from Yreka says the Modocs are supposed to occupy the position held at the time of the massacre of the Thomas command. Possibly there would be no movement of troops till the arrival of the Fourth Infantry from Arkansas. Lieutenant Harris' condition was precarious. Captain Helzer, of Oregon, has raised a company of thirty volunteers to protect settlers in Southern Oregon.

THE DIXON CALAMITY.

Some of the particulars in regard to the fall of the Dixon bridge are given below. It is proper that the full measure of grief, the mourning and weeping that fills the peaceful homes of Dixon should have an impression on the people everywhere. It would strain the ingenuity of the devout believer in the dispensations of Providence to show that their was anything in the appalling hour that betokens the hand of the Lord. A peaceful and orderly crowd of people assembled on Sunday afternoon to witness a religious ceremony. The right of baptism by immersion was to be conferred on a number of persons as a result of a religious revival, and it is fair to presume that the majority of those who had assembled to witness it were prompted by a religious sympathy. It was in this very act of religious devotion that the disaster came upon the people. The moral causes which have been assigned in certain quarters to explain other disasters would be blasphemous here, and this teaches, the falsity of reasoning that seeks in Providence an explanation for the errors of man.

Sabbath morning dawned warm and bright. The ceremony of immersion by the Baptist church, which had been several times postponed, was announced for 12 o'clock, and eleven converts presented themselves for the rite of baptism. The mildness of the weather drew a large crowd to the river, which gathered upon the steep banks, and upon the bridge, at the north end of which the ceremony was to be performed. The morning service in the churches was just closing, and as the bridge was a thoroughfare the throng receive constant accessions, till nearly two thousand souls were gathered at the place. The bridge which stretches not more than fifty or sixty feet above the natural font which was used for the baptismal ceremonies, was the favorite outlook for the women and children. Just as the third candidate was presenting himself for baptism there was a sharp quick crash, and a heavy rumbling, and prolonged, soul rending shriek from 500 lungs. The main western stringer of the north span of the bridge broke like a reed, tipping 300 persons into the stream, and falling fifty feet with crushing weight upon them. The fall dislodged the stays from the abutments; the shock ran along the whole length of the bridge like a flash of electricity, and span after span was drawn from the piers and sunk sagging to the water's surface, till the whole five were coiled up like massive bags, holding a bruised, bleeding, frightened, frantic mass of men, women, children, and horses. The imagination can scarcely conceive of a more terrible calamity. The situation was so terrible, the chances of escape so few, the sources of aid so scanty that it is merely marvellous that the loss of life is comparatively so small.

The water runs in swift, frothy currents over a dam not more than 100 yards above, and it was so swollen by recent rains that its depth was about twenty feet. Not only those who were precipitated with the falling span went under the water, but many on the other spans were either thrown by the shock into the stream or plunged in themselves to escape being crushed by the crazy crowd. The scene cannot be described. The fancy cannot picture it. The eyes of those who witnessed it were blinded with horror, and the whole crowd on the banks stood paralyzed for a moment, unable to think, speak, or move till the mind could catch a faint comprehension of the awful situation. An old man who sat on a log near the bank when the bridge went down says, "I heard the crack, I saw a swaying, rolling line; I heard voices, and then my head was dizzy, and whirled till the sky looked black." As soon as the fact was felt in the crowd on the banks there was a rush to the water, strong men plunged in to rescue those who came to surface, boards and planks were thrown in to their relief, and a number of boats which were at hand, were sent immediately to the aid of the wounded. Few of those who were saved can tell who rescued them, and most of those who were most instrumental in saving life are unable yet to recall what they did or whom they helped in the moment of frenzy. There were stretchers still clinging to the abutments, which were not loosened by the fall, and to these were clinging persons desperate for life. The air is thick with stories of miraculous escape, and deeds of brave rescuers. Mr. Henry T. Noble, a prominent citizen and manufacturer, was standing in the center of the span with his wife and Dr. and Mrs. Hoffman, holding little Gracie Smith in his arms. He says, "I felt the bridge tremble, then came a crash, and we all went down. I clasped the child closer, and while in the air made a desperate effort to plunge. I struck the water feet down, and felt the bottom. I gave a spring and was almost instantly at the surface. The child was apparently insensible and clinging to my coat and hair, I threw her body over my shoulder and struck out for the shore. It was hard swimming, for the water was full of iron, planks, and bodies. Just as I was fairly gaining progress a man whose head and face were bleeding terribly seized me by the left arm, and almost took me under. I tried to free myself, but his grasp was as that of strong steel, and giving up all hope I broke the hold of the child, and holding her out of the water, threw her with all the force of my right arm toward the shore. A man in a boat caught her before she sank, and took her in. I went to the bottom again with the wounded man, and although I took in a good deal of water, I saved my strength, disengaged myself, from him, and finally got to the shore. I don't know who the man was but I think he went down the stream." Mrs. Noble and Mr. Hoffman were crushed by the falling iron and drowned. Their bodies were recovered during the afternoon terribly bruised and mangled. Dr. Hoffman was struck by a falling bar and fell into the water. He was rescued by a young man named William Daly, who worked with noble energy and saved several lives. Mr. Hoffman now lies in a critical condition at the Nachusa House, and his situation is a very sad one. His wife who was buried this afternoon from the residence of her father, Mr. Mead, was young and beautiful, and they had been married only a few months. He has friends in Pittsburg, Chicago, and other cities who telegraphed him assurances of their sympathy. Several relatives are on their way to this place, but the condition of the body of Mrs. Hoffman compelled an early burial.

As soon as the observers fully comprehended the horrors of the situation messengers ran over the city to the hotels and churches where Sunday schools were in session, and for the rest of the day the town was one grand chaos. Men were working and women were weeping at the bank of the river; mothers rushed frantically into the crowd half crazed with anxiety, and calling frantically for their children; little ones terrified into stup or stood mutely still until found by their parents, or taken to places of safety. There were scenes of joy and scenes of anguish, and as the crushed and pallid bodies were brought to the shore the air was rent with wails of sorrow from broken hearts robbed of their dearest treasures. Husbands and wives were clasped in each other's arms. There were cries of thankfulness and curses of despair. Weak women fainted, and strong men bent down and wept. Each lifeless body brought to light, rent some heart anew, and each one rescued alive caused a shout of joy. Mourning and rejoicing were general and universal for the ties of kindred were hidden in the closer relationship of sorrow.

ABROAD.

—Garibaldi is reported alarmingly ill.

—The slave trade has been suppressed on the Arabian coast.

—In many European cities it is believed the Pope is dead.

—The Turkish government has ordered four thousand rifles in the United States.

—On May 7th a railroad accident occurred near Testh, Hungary, in which twenty-one, persons were killed and twice that number injured. Six carriages were completely demolished.

—The Switzerland Federal Council has issued an order forbiding the residence of the Duchess of Madrid in Switzerland, and instructing the police authorities to expel all Carlist agents from the country.

—The Pope was so ill that he could not leave his bed, and the Pope received a large deputation of French pilgrims, and made them a long speech. Such are the contraditions of one day's health-bulletins from the Vatican.

—The idea of a formal proclamation, at an early day, of a conservative republic as a permanent form of government in France, absorbs public attention and is gaining ground every where.

—A vessel which arrived at Queenstown, May 6th, reports that while in latitude 23 degrees 31 minutes north, longitude 41 degrees west, she passed a large American ship on fire and apparently abandoned. Her name was not ascertained.

—Canada threatens to follow Prussia in the expulsion of the Jesuits. This sect has been engaged in violent political strife with the Liberal Catholics, and has gone so far in its intrigues against the Archbishop of Quebec that the Pope has reprimanded them.

—The trouble between the Latin and Greek monks at Bethlehem has subsided, and order has been restored. The Porte leaves the guilty unpunished, but Russia demands their punishment. Hopes are expressed that the Great Powers will now settle the dispute about the custody of the holy places out of which this scandal arose but they hesitate to approach a question of so delicate a character. Later.—It is probable that there will be war between Turkey and Russia.

Experience.

BY FANNY PARSONS.

My companion and myself, in the year 1842, under the faithful labors of Bro. L. C. Collins, heartily embraced the Advent faith. Thank God, I firmly believe it to-day, although I am a lonely pilgrim in every sense of the word. Twelve years ago my companion fell asleep in Jesus. I took the hand of my dear boy, fifteen years of age (all I had left of my precious family), and we knelt by the bed of death, and I most earnestly prayed to God in my great sorrow that he would be a Father to the fatherless, and the widow's God. I told my blessed Saviour that he must be my help, my strength, and my all in all. I sensibly felt his loving arms around me, and heard a sweet voice saying, I will be your companion. I could not have believed it more fully if he had been there personally and clasped me in His arms; and from that time to this he has wonderfully sustained me, and been a present help in every time of need. I praise the Lord with all my heart that he heard and answered my prayer.

I was obliged to leave my once happy home and seek a living elsewhere. My dear boy then loved Jesus and His coming, but, losing a faithful father, and going away from home influences, he lost his interest in eternal things, and oh, how my heart bled for him! One Wednesday I prayed all day for him. He was in New London, Ct. He felt that day that he must see his mother. He came to Meriden, where I was, and said to me, "Oh mother, how I have longed to see you." I replied, "I have been praying for you." He went with me to my chamber, and there he talked, wept and prayed. God heard and answered prayer, and he once more loved Jesus. He left me on Friday at four o'clock. He started to go and came back, again and again, and put his arms around me and kissed me, saying, "Good by, mother, I will love Jesus and meet you in the kingdom." Little then did I think it was the last time I should hear his voice on earth, yet so it proved. Saturday morning, when we bowed around the family altar, my dear son came up before me. Oh, how earnestly I plead with God for him. I was astonished at the expressions I uttered, dictated by the Spirit of God, I knew. I told, the Lord if he would watch over my dear boy that day, protect and keep him from doing or saying anything wrong, I never would ask the Lord again for him. I was surprised when I uttered it. Oh, how many things come to us, and we know not what they mean until they have passed by; and so it was in this case. How short sighted we are. At two o'clock Saturday night I heard a rap at the door. I knew in a moment that there was tidings from my dear boy. I hurried down stairs and met Bro. Peck from Westville. I said, "My son is dead." He hesitated a moment. I said, "Tell me, is it not so?" He said, "There has been a terrible railroad accident between New Haven and New London; eleven have been killed and Edgar is one." He was nineteen years of age. I expected he would be a comfort and help to me while I was waiting for the coming of Christ, but it was ordered otherwise, and I submit and find strong consolations and comfort in the certainty of that coming.

Think you not, my dear brethren and sisters, that I praise God for hearing and answering prayer, and that he has been a Father to the fatherless and the widow's God? If my blessed Saviour had not been to me all the word of God promises he will be, I know that my reason would have been dethroned; but the blessed hope has been like an anchor to my soul both sure and steadfast, and I expect, by the grace of God, to be kept until Jesus comes, and then I shall meet my precious family in the kingdom, never to be broke up again, for death cannot enter that holy, happy place. My heart cries out, "O come, and take thy waiting people home." Amen and amen.—Herald of Life.

Wanted—A Minister.

Thriftyville wants a minister. They are looking far and near to find one; but they want the "right man." Thriftyville is not one of your old effete, worn-out places. It is a place grown up quickly, on Rapid River, in the beautiful valley of Eureka. It is a very important place—standing directly over the centre of the earth, so that if a hole were dug and a stone dropped into it, it would pass through the very centre of this great world. It has a population, and boasts of "a circle of very intelligent people." Moreover, it seems to be "the centre of a great moral influence," and it now wants a minister second to none. They want to get the society out of debt, to repair the old wastes which time has already made in their half-built sanctuary, to gather in the young, to "draw" a full house, and to make the concern every way prosperous and respectable, and easy to support.

Now for the qualifications desired. They are so few and so simple that "the right man" probably stands at your elbow.

He must be a man mature in intellect, and ripe in experience—and yet so young that all the young people will rush after him.

He must be quick, ardent, flashing, nervous in temperrment, so that he can kindle quick and burn bright; prompt, ready and wide awake—and yet a man of the most consummate prudence, whose nerves will be never unstrung nor out of tune.

He must be a man of great, burning zeal, so that he can startle, and arouse, and kindle, and move the congregation—and yet so cautious, so cool, that he is always safe, calm, self posessed, unperturbed.

He must have the power to awaken and arouse the church—and yet let them be quiet and look on while he does all that is done for Christ.

He must urge and move men, and lead the whole people to salvation, and get them all into the church—and yet be so judicious that he can make a difference between the wheat, and the chaff and let none but real converts into the fold.

He must be strong and original in pulpit, and bring but beaten oil there—and yet be at leisure to receive any call, any interruption, be prepared for every occasion, and like the town pump, never lacking for water, or give out dry.

He must be a workman who shall go down deep into mines of truth, and quarry out its pillars and set them up and make men come and wrestle around them—the most gifted man in light conversation, on all that floats in the every-day world around him.

He must have health so that his body never wearies, his nerves never quiver—a real specimen of muscular Christianity, and yet be a hard, severe thinker, a close reasoner, and a most diligent stduent, getting his books from any quarter.

He must be poor in this world's goods, to show that money is not his object, and so that he can sympathise with the poor, and so that he can't help feeling humble and dependent—and entertain more company than any other in town; his children must be second to none in education and training: they must be respectably dressed; he must give away more, and more cheerfully, than any man in the place, not even excepting Esquire Rich himself; and his family must be models, in all respects, for the community.

He must be a man who can remain three years, and his congregation must hear the same voice, on the same subject, several times each week—and yet he must come every time as original, as fresh, as glowing as if it were done but once a year.

He must be able to live in a glass house, always acting in public, coming in contact with all sorts of men and of prejudices, so original that all will respect and fear him—yet never odd or eccentric, morose, repulsive, or awing in manners. He should have the attributes of an angel, with the sympathies, the gentleness and softness of a little child.

He must be always ready, lofty, keyed to the best public pitch—and yet so calm in spirit, and word, and look, that nothing can disturb his repose.

He must never preach so that the people are not proud of him when they have a stranger in their pew, or so that the echoes of his sermon shall not come back when he goes abroad—and yet every sermon must be so beautiful that all the young people will admire it and wonder over it, and the little child can carry it all home, and repeat it to its grandmother.

His wife must be the model of all models. She must be so young and handsome, but not indiscreet or vain. She must be worthy of the admiration of all the people, and yet think she is the humblest of all. She must watch and discipline, prune, and lead, and make her husband the embodiment of all excellence; but she must never be aware of her power, lest she become overbearing. She must be the model of a lady, have a fair face and white hands, though compelled to do all the work of her family. She must be ready to meet every body with a smile, take her hands from the flour at any moment, wear a checkered apron, and still be dressed like a lady. Her face must never be otherwise than cheerful, her head must do its achings in secret, and she must give none occasion to call her extravagant or to call her mean. She must be able to alter the same dress four times, turning it thrice, and fitting it to a smaller child each time. She will be expected to be the very life of the Dorcas Society, the most zealous member of the All-labor Society, the very backbone of the maternal association, the warm leader in the female prayer meeting, the head and mover in the reading circle, and the visitor-general of the poor.

The minister must be of sound doctrine, able to lay his hands on the naked foundations of truth, to fortify and defend the hill of Zion—and yet must never preach the old-fashioned doctrines. They are not spicy. They are not taking. They will never "draw" a full house.

It is rather desirable that he should be a pious man, and one who loves his Master—and yet, as this article, piety, has not acquired great value in Thiftyville, it would be well for him not to make that too obtrusive.

Such, in a few words, is the the man they want for Thriftyville. If they can light on him they will pay eight hundred dollars annually! and not run behind unreasonably. This is not, to be sure, half what their clerks receive, but they think that the minister, if he be the "right" man, can "manage" to live on it. Who is ready?

N. B.—All applicants must put an extra stamp in the letter, or it will receive no attention.

P. S.—A lady who heard this document read before it was sent to press reminds me of one most important omission, the absence of which would spoil all the above. He must not only preach better than any man in town, "our enemies themselves being judges," but he must visit from house to house from morning to night like Mr——, of our town, who, everybody knows, has nothing else to do, and who is thankful to any gossip-monger who will assist him "then give time a shove."—Sel.

'Jesus and the Resurrection.'

BY C. C. M.

Not long since a leading Baptist weekly published an elaborate article, showing, or trying to show, that the true theme of a gospel minister, was "Jesus and Him crucified", and that this did not only in the most distant and conservative sense include His resurrection. In other words the gospel was "good news" of death. The next issue contained a most able and convincing reply, from which I make the following extract: It rejoices my heart to think that a Baptist editor has independence enough to treat his readers with so wholesome a dish of gospel food.

The text and context reads thus: "Now when Jesus was risen early, the first day of the week, He appeared first to Mary of Magdala (out of whom He had cast seven demons); and she went and told them that had been with Him, as they mourned and wept. And they, when they had heard that He was alive, and had been seen of her, believed not. After that He appeared in another form unto two of them, as they walked, and went into the country, and they went and told it unto the residue; neither believed they them. Afterward He appeared unto the eleven, as they reclined at table, and upbraided them with their unbelief and hardness of heart, because they believed not them which had seen Him after He was risen; and He said unto them, go ye into all the world, and preach (keerusate) the gospel (euanggelion) to every creature."

Words are used to convey ideas; consequently, it is of primary importance that the preacher should use such words, and such words only which he is sure the whole of his congregation fully understand. There are two words of doubtful meaning in the text. The word "preach," which in the original is keerusate, from keerux—a herald, public crier—and the word "gospel," which, in the original is euanggelion, from angel, messenger, and eu—good. The text may be rendered then, "Go ye into the world and proclaim the good messenger or glad tidings." The glad tidings of the text is, beyond successful contradiction, "The Lord is risen indeed," or "Jesus and the resurrection;" and the first public act of the disciples was to choose one in place of Judas, to witness with them to the good news of the resurrection.—(Acts 1: 22). "Auditor" asks, "But are we to dwell pre-eminently on the resurrection in preaching the gospel?" Let his own proof texts (which he has furnished to prove that death not life, "is the focal fact where every ray of truth converges") answer his own question. His first proof text is Acts 2: 23, 24: "This man (Jesus)....ye slew, crucifying Him by the hands of lawless ones, whom God raised up" (from the dead). Let the candid reader say if the 23d verse is not bad news, viz: the news of the murder of Jesus, while from the 24th verse to the 36th inclusive, is good news, viz: the news of the resurrection of Jesus. Acts 3: 15, "But the author of life you killed, whom God raised from the dead." Which is the good news—the killing, or the making alive.

Acts 4: 10—"Be it known to you all.... that by the name of Jesus....whom ye crucified, whom God raised up from the dead, by Him does this man stand here before you whole." .... 33d verse, "and with great power the Apostles gave the testimony to the resurrection of the Lord Jesus." Which is the good news here—the killing or raising. Acts 5: 30—"The God of our fathers raised up Jesus, whom ye slew, hanging Him on a tree"—(sulon, a post, cross, gibbet). Acts 7: 52—which of the prophets did not your fathers persecute? And they slew those who announced beforehand concerning the coming of the Just One; of whom ye have now become the betrayers and murderers. ....Verse 56—"Behold I see the heavens opened, and the Son of Man standing [alive, though you slew him] at the right hand of God." "Auditor," is the slaying, the hanging on a cross, the betraying and the murdering of the Just One, the good news, or is it not rather that God raised Him from the dead, and that Stephen saw Him alive at the right hand of God? Acts 8: 32—35:

He was led as a sheep to the slaughter;
And like a lamb dumb before his shearer,
Even so—he opens not his mouth:
In his humiliation his judgment was taken away;
And his generation who shall fully declare!
For his life is taken away from the earth.

Verse 35—"And Philip opened his mouth, and beginning from this Scripture, made known to him the good news of Jesus"—evidently the good news of His resurrection from the dead. Acts 10: 39-41, "And we are witnesses of all things which he did, both in the country of the Jews, and in Jerusalem; whom ye slew, hanging Him on a tree [sulon-cross), Him God raised up [from the dead] on the third day." Acts 13: 28-31—"And though they found no cause of death, they demanded of Pilate that He should be slain: ...but God raised Him up from the dead....and we declare to you glad tidings of the promise made to the fathers; God has fulfilled it to us, their children, in raising up Jesus" (from the dead).

Acts 17: 18—"And certain philosophers of the Epicureans and of the Stoics, were disputing with Him, and some said: 'What would this babbler say?' and others, 'he seems to be a proclaimer of foreign gods,' because he made known to them the good news of Jesus and the resurrection." Acts 18: 3—And setting forth that Christ must suffer, and rise again from the dead Acts 26: 23—That Christ should suffer, and that He should be the first that should rise from the dead. "Auditor," allow me to ask you one question, were you in earnest when you offered these texts to prove that death, not life, is the grand gospel theme? Paul testifies that Jesus, the Messiah, "Hath conquered death," and "hath brought life and immortality to light by the good news." "If there be no resurrection of the dead, then is Christ not risen, and if Christ be not risen, then is our preaching vain, and your faith is also vain. ....Now this I say, brethren, that flesh and blood cannot inherit the Kingdom of God. ....Behold I show you a mystery, we shall not all sleep, but we shall all be changed, For this corruptible (body] must put on incorruption, and this mortal [body] must put on immortality, and when this corruptible shall have put on incorruption, and this mortal shall have put on immortality, then shall be brought to pass the saying that is written: "Death is swallowed up in victory; O death, where is thy sting? O grave, where is thy victory? Thanks be to God who giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus, the Messiah."—1 Cor. 15.

The case of the prodigal son forcibly teaches sinners to come to Christ just as they are. If the prodigal had waited to have clothes and food before going to his father, he never would have gone.

Ridicule that is not true, has no particular power.

Correspondence.

W. Mo. A. C. Conference.

The brethren of the Third District of S. W. Iowa and N. W. Mo., met at Empire Prairie, March 27, and after due consideration, proceeded to the organization of a conference to be called The Western Missouri Conference. Brn. A. F. Dugger, J. F. Nicholson, and T. H. Griffith were appointed a committee to draft a constitution, and reported the following articles, which were adopted:

Article 1. This Conference shall be called The Advent Christian Conference of Western Missouri.

Article 2. The members of this Conference shall consist of ordained and licensed ministers, and delegates from the different churches.

Article 3. The officers of the annual conference shall be a president, vice president, secretary, and treasurer: to be chosen at each annual session.

Article 4. The standing and character of each minister shall be investigated at each annual conference, and, if worthy, shall receive a certificate of a recommendation signed by the president and the secretary of said conference.

Article 5. Every minister is required to be present at the annual session in person or by letter.

Article 6. Ministers are to be received into this conference without a dissenting voice.

Article 7. This constitution may be amended by the conference, at any of its sessions, by a two-thirds majority.

Article 8. Any church calling for the setting apart of any one to the work of the gospel ministry by a two-thirds vote of its membership, it shall be the duty of this conference to attend to this matter at any of its annual or quarterly sessions.

Article 9. This conference shall hold at least four quarterly meetings and one annual each year.

Article 10. Each church in this conference shall be entitled to two delegates, and two only.

Article 11. This conference shall maintain a unity of faith on the first principles of the gospel, defined: faith, repentance, and baptism.

The following officers were elected for the ensuing year: Brn. A. F. Dugger, President; Scarce, Vice-President; Rivens, Treasurer; H. Billmire, Secretary.

H. BILLMIRE, Sec'y.

The Time Council at Charlestown.

According to notice, a goodly number of the brethren believing that Jesus will make his second Advent this year, assembled at Charlestown, Mass., Wednesday, April 23d, to devise the best means of spreading this blessed news.

The meeting was called to order at 10 A. M. Bro. S. W. Bishop, was elected chairman, and R. B. Swan, secretary. The object of the meeting was then stated by the chairman, and the meeting opened for business. A motion was then made and seconded that we hold a series of camp meetings in the New England and other states, commencing in June and continuing through the summer. After some little debate as to whether tent-meetings or camp-meetings, would be most effectual in promotion of our object, it was unanimously voted to hold the camp-meetings. Adjourned to 1:30 P. M.

Afternoon session.—Met according to adjournment. The first business brought before the meeting, was the location of the several meetings, which were finally appointed in the vicinity of the following places, on motion of brethren residing there: Enfield, Conn., Vernon, or Brattleboro, Vt., Wolfboro, N. H., Lynn, Mass., Belfast, Me., Rochester, N. Y., Farmingdale, N. S., and in some place left for future decision, in the Lehigh Valley, Pa. It was then voted that the time of each meeting shall be as follows: Enfield, June 8-15, Lynn, June 22-29, Rochester, July 7-13, Lehigh Valley, July 20-27, Farmingdale, Aug 3-10, Vernon, Aug. 17-24, Wolfboro, Aug. 31, to Sept. 7, Belfast, Sept. 14-21

The dates named for the commencement and end of each meeting are inclusive.

Voted: that there be nominated by the chairman, a general committee of nine, who shall call to their aid a local committee for each of the above meetings; and the definite locality of each meeting shall be decided upon by them. The following were elected: Geo. W. Brown, for Maine; E. G. Colby, for N. H.; D. W. Miller, and Anson Gage, for Western Mass. and Vt.; C. Thompson and J. Thomas for R. I., and Eastern Mass.; C. C. Barker for Conn.; Wm. E. Brown, for N. Y.; S. W. Bishop, for N. J. and Pa. Voted: That Bro. C. Thompson, of Providence, R. I., be appointed to receive money for a camp-meeting fund.

The following preamble and resolutions were offered and adopted: "Whereas; Believing as we do, that the great dispensational truth, the immediate advent of the Messiah is paramount to all other considerations, therefore, resolved; that in our work, in the campaign of 1873, we still consecrate ourselves exclusively to the proclamation of Christ's speedy coming, and to urging a preparation for that event. Voted: That a copy of the minutes of this meeting be sent to all the Advent papers

A feeling of union, upon the last, great crowning truth of the gospel, prevailed; every one acquiesced in what the majority thought the best course to be pursued in warning the world of a coming judgment, in order to call out a people willing to be pilgrims and strangers looking for a city to come.

R. B. Swan.

Iowa Christian Mission Campmeeting.

Pursuant to notice, brethren met at New Hartford, Saturday evening, April 26. The meeting was called to order by the president, P. S. W. Deyo. The secretary being absent, J. W. Burroughs was elected secretary pro tem.

The subject of setting trees on the campground was taken into consideration, and the trees donated. Other preliminary arrangements being made, the meeting adjourned to meet on the campground the following Monday.

Monday, April 28. A goodly number of brethren met on the old campground to carry into effect the previously arranged plan.

Trees were brought from all directions by the brethren, until one hundred nice shade trees were set out in circular rows, around the preaching tent.

Then the business meeting was called to order, and it was decided to commence the yearly campmeeting on Friday, June 6, and hold over the 15th.

It was further agreed that there should be a large fifty foot tent furnished on the ground for the accommodation of brethren coming from a distance and not having tents, that may be accommodated by bringing cords, and extra sheets or blankets to divide it into appartments, and thus make themselves comfortable lodgings.

Note.—Now brethren, you have no excuse for not coming—a tent free! Bring your coarse clothes and bedding. Come to this "yearly feast." Come early. Be at the commencement. No reserved room in the big tent. First come first served. Come one come all, irrespective of sect or party. Bring your unconverted friends with you. Time is short. [illegible] is a sacrifice. Prepare for the kingdom of our Lord.

J. W. Burroughs, Sec'y pro tem.

From P. Holler.

I fear some of our brethren are not concious of the mistake they make in that they forget they have work to do themselves in helping on the cause, but are ready to complain and criticise after hearing one of the pop gun preachers, and say, "O if you could only hear one of our big guns, they would raise you right out of your seat." God help such to go to work in earnest to save men, and no time will be found for complaining.

Wake up brethren, get out of the brush, let your light shine; too many are asleep waiting for the cannon preacher to come along and wake them; before that can be, the trump of Gabriel may wake you. We want more earnest devoted men and women, not only in preaching but in every day life. No time to be idle: look at yourself from another stand point, perhaps you will appear quite different from what you have supposed. We have some earnest workers at Asceria, and I trust we shall soon have more. They are not waiting for the big preachers, but are earnestly engaged in their Master's cause. They are getting good pay, and their joy is full.

It reminds me of the times we used to have in Buchanan. Buchanan used to be called Jerusalem, how is it now? We feel as if we were having a little Jerusalem at Asceria Center, formerly called Sodom. Truly the Lord can take the weak things to confound the mighty.

From Lemuel Record, Lancaster, Ind.

I would like to give more to help free the Association from debt if I was able, for it looks to me like freeing a fettered missionary, and giving him the opportunity to go into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature. Surely there is great need of doing all in our power to spread the good news of the Kingdom of God. Yes, to persuade men to be ready for the coming of our Lord, to reward His saints, and punish the wicked. O, when we look around and see the wickedness that prevails, the crimes that are perpetrated, and think of the dreadful punishment that must come upon sinners, it is enough to make the heart ache. Ah, is it not enough to stimulate us to do all in our power to warn the world of its danger? In view of what God has done for us that we might be saved, should we not exert ourselves to lead others to the "Lamb of God that taketh away the sin of the world?" Yes, "God so loved the world that he gave His only begotten son, that whosoever believeth on Him should not perish, but have everlasting life." Now if sinners can be induced to believe this and embrace Jesus as their Savior, they may become heirs of God, fitted for eternal life. The time is coming and almost now is, when the "Lamb of God" will take away the sin of the world, when he will thoroughly purge his floor, gather the wheat into His garner, and burn up the chaff with unquenchable fire. Yes, the time is not far away, when all who are not baptized with the Holy Spirit will be burned up, root and branch. The Lord grant that we may be ready for that day.

From S. C. Wellcome.

I would like to say a few words to the brethren and sisters through the columns of our paper in regard to the meeting of the Western Association in June, at Norwood Park, Ill. It is a meeting we are all interested in; we want our paper to prosper, and in fact we feel that we cannot now live without it. We want everything to work harmoniously and in love, and, in order for this, I have thought it would be well to have a grand rally from every part of the West to this meeting; form our acquaintance with each other and with the management of The Times, interchange views and be able to give our brethren at home in our several states an insight into the business matters of the Association. For this purpose delegates have been requested from each conference working in harmony with the Association. Now the question comes up, How can our delegates attend? In our own state the cause is new, and we live at a distance. We have no conference funds to furnish preachers, who should attend such meetings as delegates, and our preachers are poor, and yet the brethren want these meetings to be attended.

Now I propose a plan by which the brethren can assist and hardly feel it. It is this: Let every brother and sister who is interested in the cause, forward to our several delegates, by the first day of June, the amount you feel it your duty to give, and God will bless you for it.

May God help us to wake up to the subject of taking the burden off our preachers, and all take hold together throughout this western country and have a grand rally for the truth. Time is short, and what is done must be done quickly. The delegates from Minnesota are G. W. Miller, Monticello, Wright county, and S. C. Wellcome, of the same town and county, and Philip Ramer, Winona. Who will respond?

P. S.—Our expenses will be from $35.00 to $40.00 each.

From P. W. Hough.

I rejoice that I live in these last days. If Jesus pronounced a blessing upon his disciples because their eyes saw and ears heard what wise men and prophets desired to look into, but died without the sight, much more blessed are we who live in this age, when we may know just as surely as the budding fig tree tells the coming summer that Jesus is at the door. In view of our great privilege let us quit ourselves like men.

From J. L. Carey, Vallejo, Cal.

The Advent cause is in a prosperous condition in this place. Zion is putting on her strength, and making final preparation for the last great drama to close up forever her sorrows. Br. Grant has been with us two weeks preaching every evening and the result of his labors with the blessing of God is seen in the deep conviction that is settling down on the people, in the reclaiming of backsliders, and the conversion of stout-hearted sinners.

These meetings were commenced in one of our large public halls, but the pastor of the M. E. Church, Rev. A. K. Crawford, very kindly offered Br. Grant the use of his church which was very thankfully accepted and highly appreciated, as Br. Grant was allowed the fullest liberty to preach whatever he deemed to be for the best interest for the great work in hand.

The Methodist pastor with a large portion of his flock went in with us and heartily engaged in the good work of saving perishing sinners.

Great harmony and brotherly love prevailed. It soon became apparant that a deeper work than usual was inaugurated.

Br. Grant held up the Bible doctrine of holiness (without which no man can see God) with power never before felt here. Many professors were in doubt upon this very important question among whom was the writer. We were "halting between two opinions," and the sole cause of this indecision was the imperfect manner in which it was understood. The words of the prophet, "cast up, cast a highway; gather out the stones; lift up a standard for the people," have been fulfilled. Every doubt has been removed and every eye opened to see the King's highway of holiness, and oh what a longing to walk therein. And by the help of God many here came out and boldly declared their determination to seek this higher life and all have been blessed. Br. Grant's preaching was with the spirit and power of God.

The Advent cause has a deeper hold upon the people than ever before. Many are earnestly inquiring concerning these grand truths and seed is now being sown that will yet bring forth fruit in the last great day. Our church is upon a firmer basis than ever before and we feel greatly strengthened and encouraged. Br. Grant will be with us one week more and we expect great things during that time. May God bless him more abundantly in this great work.

From C. C. Marston, Amboy, Ill. Apr. 21.

Yesterday closed my second year with the church at this place. The day was fine and we had a large attendance and a good interest in the meetings. My relations with the people have been quite pleasant and attended with the accomplishment of some good. I shall long remember Amboy, as being the place where I preached my first "Advent sermon." During my stay a goodly number were converted and baptised; and the Lord visited us at times with copious showers of his grace. Having commended the dear ones there "to God and the word of his grace," as Paul did his Ephesian brethren, I now go, as the Lord has seemed to direct to another field of labor. Dear Brethren at Amboy, let me say, stick together, pray much, and for each other, and live in peace. And may the God of peace make you that ye be neither barren nor unfruitful. My address is Elida, Ill.

From Mrs. J. Rinehart, McKean, Ill.

I am still striving to live so that I may be a partaker of the heavenly feast which the saints will enjoy when Jesus comes. I long for that rest but will patiently wait to hear my Savior's call. I do hope some good brother will be led this way to preach the truth to poor perishing sinners. I have great reason to praise my heavenly Father for sparing my life through several years of very poor health. Oh, I do praise him, and my prayer is that I may continue to receive his gracious smile till Jesus comes. I am alone among strangers, none to say a cheering word, and I ask the prayers of God's children that I may wear the bright crown of glory in the kingdom of God.

From John Tousley.

Dear brethren and sisters in Christ, the season for tent meeting being at hand, we expect the Lord willing, to start by about the 20th of May, with the New Pennsylvania Missionary Tent, and therefore hope that all who have subscribed for the same, will be prompt in paying their subscriptions; we also need yet about fifty dollars. I hope that the good Lord will open the hearts and purses of the friends to help in this matter, so that the tent will start out free.

Pray for us that the spirit of Christ may be with us, and attend us in our labors, and send such men to assist in proclaiming the gospel as shall be for the glory of God. Yours in hope.

Where Baby Joy Comes From.

BY S. R. CALTHROP.

As I sat by my study table,
With my sermon strewing the floor,
My little sixteen-month darling
Came full-sail through the study door.
He first bore away to the window,
Then veered to the bright hearth-stone;
But soon in the furthest corner
Cast anchor all alone.

First he rattled the quills in my pen box,
And then with the carpet he played;
Then he washed his hands in the sunshine,
And caught at the shadows they made.
One thing was as good as another,
For each gave a new surprise;
And the light of his childish gladness
Kept shining on out of his eyes.

As I wondered where all the joy came from,
This thought fell from heaven on me;
That, when God and a babe are together,
A little fountain of glee
Must needs bubble up in the child's heart,
Because those waters are given
And ever renewed by the joy tides
Of the great cheerful heart in heaven.

I had quite forgotten my sermon,
And my baby upon the floor
Was tearing the papers to pieces,
That were strewed from window to door;
But I knew that the thought he gave me
Was more than his hands could destroy—
For the love of the Father in heaven
Had come to me through my boy.

Kittie's Mistake.

It was babys' birthday; and papa brought home a toy dog—a white, woolly one, just about the size of Minnie's gray kitten. Baby cooed, and jumped, and played with it till he grew sleepy. Mamma fed him, and put him in his cradle; and Minnie, who had waited patiently, began playing with the little dog. It was on wheels: and as she pushed it gently over the carpet it really looked as if it were alive, and running along of its own accord. This was plainly the view Miss Pussy took of the matter; for she started up from the rug where she had been dozing, rounded her back, spat furiously and gave the little dog a savage cuff as he passed her.

Doggie, of course, took it all quite coolly, which seemed not what pussy expected, while Minnie and her mother laughed heartily at her show of spirit. When she found she could not drive him away, she turned quickly, and springing to baby's cradle, took refuge under it. There she felt safe; but she could not feel satisfied to let the dog alone, and every few seconds she would peep out and spit or growl.

When papa came in to tea Minnie told him about it. "What a silly little puss she is to make such a fuss about a bit of wool and plaster? Don't you think so, papa?"

"Anger is always foolish," he replied, "and often the best way to treat it is to take no more notice of it than baby's woolly dog does. Puss will soon leave off when she finds he does not growl or hurt her in return. The soft answer of gentle words, a kind act or silence, are the best reproofs of bad temper."

Obituary.

CONKLIN—Died at Seneca Falls, N. Y., February 22 1873, Sr. Catherine E. Conklin. Aged 64 years.

She has buried her husband and several of her children, and as a devoted child of God was sustained under her many trials.

She lived a cheerful, hopeful life, and exerted a happy influence both in the Advent Christian Church of which she was a member, and in the community at large. She was greatly beloved and is much missed, but her work is done, and she sleeps in Jesus in hope of immortality at the resurrection. J. V. HIMES.

Notices.

Notice.

My address after May 1st, will be changed from Morgan Street, to 536 Washington Avenue; reached by Randolph street Horse Cars to Ashland Avenue at Union Park, then three streets North to Washington Avenue, and the first house on the left.

Michigan State Campmeeting.

As the time is drawing near for our State Campmeeting, I would say in behalf of the Committee that due arrangments will be made in season and particulars published. Let all the friends of the cause prepare to turn out to the yearly meeting.

The meeting will probably be on the line of the Ft Wayne, Jackson and Saginaw Railroad, north of of Jonesville. If any church not more than thirty miles from Jackson, wants the meeting at their place, write me at once, at Algansee, Branch Co., Michigan, and we will consider your place in comparison with our present site. J. H. PRESTON, Sec'y.

Notice.

The subscribers to Dr. Tafel's Interlinear Translation of the Sacred Scriptures are herewith informed that the second number, containing the first 24 chapters of the Gospel of St. Matthew, is ready for distribution and will be forwarded by return mail on receipt of two dollars. Subscribers are requested to forward the money at once and oblige, L. H. TAFEL, No. 603 Arch Street, Philadelphia.

E. H. BURRINGTON, Sec'y.

The "Union" Chapel, recently erected seven miles east of Anna Station, Union county, will be dedicated on the fourth Sunday in May, which will be the 24th. Elder J. V. Himes has consented to be with us on that occasion; let the brethren from Southern Illinois rally once more, to partake of a rich feast of the Lord. Let the Equality church, especially, send a full delegation.

At that meeting it is proposed to revive our conference and work with a will for the cause of truth. Come, brethren and sisters, let us lay aside secular labor and attend to the Lord's work.

ANSON BROWN.

Our State Campmeeting will be held at Merrimack, Sauk county, beginning Sunday, June 1, holding over two Sundays. Tents will be put up on the Saturday preceding. Let us have such a rally as Wisconsin has never witnessed before.

In addition to the big tent, which we have had on former occasions, Br. Hough will bring his large tent, in which special meetings can be held.

Merrimack is on the Northwestern R. R., (Madison division), and only ten miles from Sauk, where our meetings have been held for several years past.

Br. L. C. Collins will be with us, and it is probable that Br. Grant, on his return from California, will also be present to help us, besides several other preachers from other states have signified their intentions to come and enjoy the feast with us. We hope for a meeting that will be full of Gospel light and salvation. Let all come to work for God.

O. S. Knapp, T. Barker, P. W. Hough, E. P. Graves, Wm. Sheldon, Committee.

The Annual Conference will hold a session in connection with the State Campmeeting, at Merrimack, Sauk county, which begins June 1. Let all the churches send delegates, or report by letter, and let all ministers who cannot be present send letters to the secretary.

The first meeting will probably be held on Wednesday morning, June 4, so as to finish up business in time to give all a full chance to enjoy the campmeeting. WM. SHELDON, Sec'y.

Springville, May 4, and every two weeks until further notice.

Dudley S. H., May 11, and every four weeks until further notice.

Prayer meeting every Thursday eve., at the residence of the pastors, 213 Broadway, nearly opposite Town Hall.

WM. A. & M. L. DURAND.

Brn. G. W. Brown, of Orrington, Me., and Chas. C. Barker, of Meriden, Ct., will, the Lord willing, commence a series of prophetic lectures in Rochester, New York, on Sunday, May 18, and continue over Sunday, the 25th. The sole object of the meeting is to bring out the Bible and historical evidences of the coming of the Lord in 1873, and so give this great and solemn truth (as we regard it) such a prominence among us as a people, and make it such a living force before the world as to, if possible, greatly forward and vitalize the work of preparing a people made ready for the Lord.

The ministering brethren of Western New York are especially requested to arrange to attend the meeting as far as possible. They shall all be freely entertained, and all others will be heartily welcomed and provided for. Come and listen candidly and decide for yourselves what are the the duties of the hour. For the brethren,

A BOOK ON SPIRITISM
BY ELD. C. C. MARSTON.

"Modern Spiritism: an examination of its origin, character and tendency."

The immoral tendency and corruption of the systems as shown by the statements of its own most noted advocates, fully developed, clearly proving that Spiritism is calculated in its very nature to undermine and destroy the morals of all good society.

THE FOUNDATION OF THE SYSTEM IS FALSE.

It is shown that Satan's great falsehood, first propagated in Eden, is the main pillar upon which the system rests. The spirit and fruits of Spiritism are shown to be Anti Christ and Anti-Christian by copious extracts. In short, suffice it to say, without giving an extended analysis of the work, that it brings out in its true colors the prominent feature of modern Spiritism.

It will be read with interest and profit by all who desire an intelligent understanding of this subject.

The work contains 60 pp., neatly bound in paper covers and will be sent post paid for 15 cts.; per dozen, $1.50; per hundred, $6.00.

Pre-existence of Christ.

BY WM. BRANCH.

While the majority of Christians at the present day believe that Christ lived or existed prior to his birth at Bethlehem, there are some in whose minds doubts arise concerning that which is commonly termed his pre-existence.

We wish to examine a few passages of Scripture on this subject.

In Eph. 1:4, we are told that God hath chosen us in him [Christ] before the foundation of the world." Christ must have existed before the earth was created: "Who verily was foreordained before the foundation of the world [kosmos] but was manifest in these last times for you." (1 Pet. 1: 20,)

Some may claim that Christ then existed as an ideal being in the mind of God, who, in devising a means for the salvation of mankind, had connected with the plan, this ideal Savior who should afterward be brought into a living existence. "And now, O Father, glorify thou me with thine own self, with the glory which I had with thee, before the world was." (John 17: 5.) We here notice that Christ is speaking not of the glory which the Father had with him, but that which he experienced with the Father. Could an ideal Savior, who had no real existence enjoy or experience glory? We think not. If the one who thus had glory with the father, was simply an ideal in the mind of God, it follows that God was simply glorified in his own mind, or,—pardon the expression—"left alone in his glory." Is this what Christ desires when praying God to glorify him [Christ] with the same glory which he had before the world was? This would imply private, individual glory for God, and no glory, at all for Christ, whereas Christ prays "glorify thou me." His prayer is for a repetition of an event which had heretofore transpired. This event includes the glorification of both God the Father, and Christ the Son.

Again, in Rev. 3: 14, we find him called, "The beginning of the creation of God," and must admit Christ to have existed in reality prior to the creation of man, or else deny that man was "of the creation of God." Shall we deny that "the Lord God formed man"? If so what was his origin? Shall we accept the damnation theory and trace our origin back to the oyster, or perhaps even farther than that, to the minutest form of animal life called animolcule?

Do any still claim that Christ was the will of God, existing only as connected with the plan of salvation, we would invite them to a brief examination of John 6: 38. "For I came down from heaven, not to do mine own will, but the will of him that sent me." A number of truths are taught in the verse, viz: 1. Christ came down from heaven. 2. He was sent. 4. He was sent by a living being designated by the personal pronoun "him," hence a person. 4. Christ speaks of himself as a person that came down from heaven, using the pronouns "I" and "me." 5. The person thus spoken of has a will. 6. The one by whom he was sent also had a will. 7. Christ did not come to perform his own will; and 8. he did come to perform the will of another by whom he was sent.

If God sent a will into the world, was it his own, or did it exist as a separate one in heaven? If it was his own, did he have any left? If not there would be but one, whereas Christ speaks of two, and also there would be left in heaven no God at all, or else a God having no will. Whence came these two wills? Was that of God divided, the one part to be set aside, and the other to be performed, or were there two in the first place? If the latter idea be correct it follows that either God's own will was divided against itself, or else there were two living beings in heaven, each possessed of a will, for there can be no will without reality of living existence.

But some may ask, "How, or in what form did Christ exist before coming into the world." We answer he is alluded to as the one "Who being in the form of God, thought it not robbery to be equal with God, but made himself of no reputation, and took upon himself the form of a servant, and was made in the likeness of men." (Phil. 2: 6; 7,) we here learn that prior to his birth into the world, he was in the form of God;" and although it was no robbery upon his part to be in this exalted condition, yet his form was changed to that of a servant, and by the reason of this change which he took upon himself, he was "found in fashion as a man."

But it may be asserted by some that he existed in the moral form of God. The word "form" in vs. 6 and 7 is from the same original word [morphe] and consequently if the "form" in v. 6 is a moral form, that in v. 7 must be the same; hence we would understand that Christ was changed from the moral form of God to the moral form of man. This I understand to be impossible; or even were it possible, Christ would have been morally corrupt, for this is man's condition: "The carnal mind is enmity against God."

Again, can a moral form exist without there be a literal, tangible form or existence upon which it is dependent? I answer no. We know there must be a literal—perhaps we might say physical—existence, upon which the moral is dependent, and without which, there would be no moral existence or form whatever hence even if Christ existed in the moral form of God there must have been a literal existence also. The word "morphe" is found in but one other place in the Bible. "After that he appeared in another form (morphe) unto two of them as they walked and went into the country. ("Mark 19: 12.) This signifies that there was a literal, visible form, and the same word is used in Phil. 2: 6, in speaking of the form of God and of Christ, previous to the time when he "took upon him the form of a servant" and "was made in the likeness of men," and was "found in fashion as a man." "For it became him, for whom are all things and by whom are all things, in bringing many sons unto glory, to make the captain of their salvation perfect through sufferings." (Heb. 2: 10.) "For by him were all things created that are in heaven, and that are in earth, visible and invisible, whether they be thrones, or dominions, or principalities, or powers, all things were created by him and for him. And he is before all things, and by him all things consist." (Co 1: 16, 17.) Even the "visible" things "that are in the earth" were created by him. Upon what ground then shall we say that he did not exist as a being before he was born into the world, unless it be that we seek to join hands with the Spiritists, and claim that he was nothing more than a human being? This would prove his teachings an imposition, and rob us of a Savior, and the possibility of a life beyond this fleeting existence. We should thus be "of all men most miserable."

Some claim that Christ must have been human or divine. That divinity can not die, therefore if Christ pre-existed we have no sacrifice for sins, for Christ, the real pre-existent Christ, could not have died being divine. But this would lead us to conclude with equal fairness that we have only a human sacrifice, and some other of God's creatures could have atoned for us just as well, or perhaps we can each one atone for ourselves. The position that a being must be either human or divine is a false assumption which will lead us to error.

Are the angels of God in heaven human or divine? If human perhaps they are the ones who once lived on earth. Perhaps David is up there. If divine there is certainly a plurality of God's in heaven. Also, concerning the fallen angels. If they are human, perhaps our friends can and do communicate to us through Spirit mediums.

But if they are divine, divinity, is now claimed in tartarus, will be judged at the last day, and probably destroyed!!

We do not understand that Christ was or is the Eternal God, being his own Father and his own Son also, but we do hold forth that there were two beings and two wills. One was that of God the Father, the other that of Christ the Son who came down from heaven not to do his own will but that of the Father.

He did not send himself but the Father sent him, and he never could have been sent from heaven had he not been there. Let us take the word of God in preference to our own peculiar notion and ideas. Let God be true.

"To the Age."

BY E. C. BRONAUGH.

In John 11: 26 we read: "And whosoever liveth and believeth in me shall never die." It is claimed by those who believe that man exists in a conscious, intelligent being, in spirit form, between death and the resurrection, that this and similar passages of Scripture manifestly sustain their position; because, as they argue, it is evident that Christians do die, that is, the physical man dies, and that, therefore, unless the inner or spirit man continues to exist independently of the body it cannot be said of those who believe in Jesus that they "never die."

I saw, a short time since, in your columns a letter, in which the writer apparently intending to meet the force of this argument, endeavored to maintain that the Savior in the passage cited had reference to believers who should be alive at his coming, "at the last day," to which Martha had just alluded in verse 24, "and who shall be caught up to meet the Lord in the air"—as we are taught they will be in 1 Thes. 4: 17. The writer of the letter paraphrased our Savior like about in this manner—"And whosoever liveth at the last day and believeth in me shall never die, for all such persons shall be caught up alive to meet me in the air at that time, they shall not sleep, but shall be changed, and shall put on immortality without dying—"as we see in 1 Cor. 15: 51; 54.

But what are we to do with John 8: 51; 52,—"verily I say unto you if a man keep my sayings he shall never see death. Then said the Jews unto him, now we know that thou hast a devil, Abraham is dead, and the prophets, and thou sayest, if a man keep my sayings, he shall never taste of death." There is no reference in the context, nor other opportunity offered for the attempt to construe this saying as having reference to believers who will then be living. [illegible] is evident that these Jews und[illegible] Jesus to mean that they who [illegible]ould keep his sayings should n[illegible] die in any sense, whether physical, or otherwise, and it is equally evident that the Savior did not mean any such thing. What then did he mean? Upon consulting the original Greek, and the literal translation of it, in the "Emphatic Diaglott," I find that Jesus said, "If any one keep my word he will by no means see death [eis ton aiona] to the age." And the Jews said to him in reply: "Now we know that thou hast a Demon, Abraham died, and the prophets, and thou sayest if any one keep my word he will by no means taste of death [eis ton aiona] to the age." And John 11: 26, reads: "And no one living and believing in me shall die [eis ton aiona] to the age."

Now the question presents itself, what is meant by "die to the age," which is rendered "shall never die"? And what is meant by "shall not taste of death to the age," which is rendered shall never taste of death," in our common version of Scripture? On refering to the appendex of the Diaglott I find age (aion) defined as follows: "An indefinite period of time, past, present or future. This is the proper translation of aion, which in the common version is often improperly rendered world, always, and forever, eternal or everlasting as generally understood is an improper translation of aionios, in fact we have no proper equivalent in the English language. Being an adjective and derived from the noun aion it can not properly go beyond its meaning." Still, having no English equivalent, these "improper translations" are a necessity, as the nearest approach we can make to the correct idea intended, wherefore we read, (John 12: 34,) "We have heard out of the law that Christ abideth [eis ton aionta into the age] forever." In Luke 1: 33, we read: "And he shall reign over the house of Jacob [eis tons aionas, to the ages] forever." In John 6: 51, we read, "If any men eat of this bread he shall live [eis ton aiona, to the age] forever."

In all these passages the expression "to the age" is translated forever, and has the sense of "an indefinite period of time," or time without limit of duration, or of eternal duration. In John 4: 14, we read: "But whosoever drinketh of the water that I shall give him shall not thirst [eis ton aiona, to the age] never thirst." In John 15: 8, we read: "Peter saith unto him thou shalt never [eis ton aiona, to the age] wash my feet."

In these last two passages "to the age" is rendered never as it is in (John 11: 26, and 8: 51; 52.) As I make no claim to understand the Greek, I wish to inquire, of those who do, if there is any sound reason, grammatical or otherwise, why the expression "to the age" in the last two passages cited, to wit, John 11: 26, and 8: 51; 52, may not as well be rendered forever as never? If it may be, then our Savior is to be understood as saying, "And whosoever liveth and believeth in me shall not die forever that is shall not eternally die;" and again: "If a man keep my saying he shall by no means see death forever or eternal death," just as he said in John 3: 15; 16, "that whosoever believeth in him should not perish," instead of understanding him to say that, "whosoever believeth in him shall never die," as we have it in the common version. Will the Editor of THE TIMES enlighten an inquirer?

He is faithful that Promised.

"I will come again, and receive you unto myself, that where I am, there ye may be also." (John 14: 3.)

A glorious reunion. If the meeting of a long absent friend or brother on earth, be a joyous event, what must be the joy of the union with this brother of brothers, this friend of friends! "I will come again!" Oh! what an errand of love, what a promised honor and dignity is this!—His saints to share, not his kingdom only, but His immediate presence. Where I am, there ye shall be also!" "Father, I WILL (it was his dying wish, a wondrous codicil in that testamentary prayer) those whom thou hast given me be with me where I am." Happy reunion! Blessed savior, if thy presence be so sweet on a sin-stricken earth, and when known only by the invisible eye of faith, what must be that presence in a sinless world, unfolded in all its unutterable love-lines and glory! Happy reunion! it will be a meeting of the whole ransomed family—the head with all its members—the vine with all its branches—the Shepherd with all his flock—the Elder Brother with all his kinsmen. Oh! the joy too of mutual recognition among the death divided, ties snap asunder on earth, indissolubly renewed—severed friendships reunited—the triumph of love complete—love binding brother with brother, and friend with friend, and all to the Elder Brother! My Lord what thinkest thou of this world? Remember who it is that Jesus says shall sit with Him upon his throne,—"Him that overcometh."

A Pioneer Dog.

In Belfast, Maine, after one of the late heavy snow falls, a young girl was endeavoring to make her way along the street to a house at which she was employed, when a strange dog, a large Newfoundland, came to her aid. He kept ahead of her, breaking a path, until he saw her turn in at her destination, when with a satisfied wag of the tail he trotted back.

Never see any one entering into temptation or indulging in sin without praying for him.

Built Upon a Rock.

My anchor is within the vail;
  Whatever may my soul betide,
Against me nothing can prevail,
  For God the Lord is on my side;
Though heaven and earth shall pass away,
My trust shall still unshaken stay.

The Rock of Truth I now have found,
  Here shall I ever stand secure;
I safely anchor in the ground
  That shall forevermore endure;
When all the things of earth are fled,
With joy shall I lift up my head!

Nor waves nor storms can bring me harm,
  While on this Rock I place my trust;
My strength is the Almighty arm—
  The shield and refuge of the just;
Here shall I dwell, and dwell serene,
Amid life's every chequered scene.

Though fiends of hell against me rise,
  Their looks of wrath I will not fear;
While on the Lord my soul relies,
  He shall for my defence appear:
He is my fortress and high tower,
My helper in the evil hour.

My house I build upon this Rock,
  Which shall forever be my stay;
To fire, nor flood, nor tempest shock,
  Shall its foundations e'er give way;
But here shall stand forever fast,
Long as eternity shall last.

A Sketch of a Sermon,

Delivered at Burr Oak, Iowa, in the Methodist church, upon a funeral occasion.

BY WM. T. BURSELL.

Verily, verily I say unto you, the hour is coming, and now is, when the dead shall hear the voice of the Son of God; and they that hear shall live. (John 5:25.)

This text may be looked upon as having a two-fold application without doing any injustice to the Scriptures.

First, a death in trespasses and sins, which we understand signifies to be under condemnation to death on account of sin. It is true that this is the case with all mankind, and we have an abundance of testimony upon this point. Paul says, in his epistle to the Ephesians, "And you hath he quickened who were dead in trespasses and sins, wherein in time past ye walked according to the course of this world, according to the prince of the power of the air, the spirit that now worketh in the children of disobedience, among whom, also, we all had our conversation in times past, in the lusts of our flesh, fulfilling the desire of the flesh and of the mind, and were, by nature, the children of wrath, even as others. But God, who is rich in mercy, for his great love wherewith he loved us even when we were dead in sins, hath quickened us together with Christ.... And hath raised us up together, and made us sit together in heavenly places in Christ Jesus." We see, by Paul's testimony, that the Ephesian brethren had been dead; they had walked according to the course of this world; they fulfilled the lusts of the flesh; they were the children of wrath. And what was true of the Ephesians is true of the whole human family. They have all wandered from God, they have all disobeyed his law; hence, they are subject to death for this disobedience.

The true weight of this expression —death—may be seen more vividly by looking at one of our fellow-men who has been so unfortunate as to commit murder; he is taken and tried; the evidence is arrayed against him, and the jury bring in a verdict of guilty, and the penalty is death; the judge pronounces that penalty—that in thirty days he shall be executed for the crime that he committed. The whole assembly concur at once in the saying he is a dead man. Why do they say he is dead? Because the penalty of death is pronounced upon him on account of his transgression of the law.

So it is with man. He has committed crime by the transgression of God's law, and for this crime he is now subject to death; hence we say, he, prospectively, is dead.

In this condition we find the human family. They are sleeping and slumbering in sin; moving onwards in one great column towards the place of execution. Oh, how dreadful the sight! Suppose you stood upon an eminence and saw this mighty army moving slowly but surely toward a yawning gulf, lying at the bottom of a most dangerous precipice, and the shades of night were gathering around them; the last rays of sunlight were rapidly disappearing in the west, and soon night —dark, black night—would be their only covering! Yet they move on, and on; and you know that before the rising of another sun they will have gone over the precipice, and sunk in the gulf to rise no more! Would you not cry mightily to them to stop and procure lights by the aid of which they might avoid the dangers before them? So we hear a voice; yea, even the voice of the Son of God, saying: "Awake, thou that sleepest, and arise from the dead, and Christ shall give you light!" "See, then, that ye walk circumspectly, not as fools, but as wise." They were walking as fools, having no light; but he offers them light, and says to them "Be wise; take the light; awake from your slumbers; look around you; see the danger; avoid the awful precipice before you, and be saved from death! The time not only has been, but now is, when they can still hear the voice of the Son of God by his spirit, saying: "Awake! Come to Christ that you may have life! Shake yourself from the dust and darkness of sin, and walk no more according to the course of this world, fulfilling the lusts of your flesh, and be no longer children of wrath, but be ye children of God by walking in the light and obeying his commandments." We would inquire what is the result after the pealing notes of the voice of the Son of God have been heard all along the lines of this great army? A moment of suspense follows—a moment fraught with the greatest of consequences—life and death are pending. They have heard the voice; and decisions are being made; confusion is visible in the ranks, and soon we see a few breaking from their former associates and forming themselves into a new company, with their lights burning, marching in another direction, toward the heavenly city.

Second: We come now to the second application of our text. We not only believe that it applies to a death in sin, but we believe it refers to a literal death of the whole man. In proof of this, see the Savior's language: "Marvel not at this, for the hour is coming in the which all that are in the graves shall hear his voice, and shall come forth." But, says the objector, if you make this literal, how can you dispose of the statement "now is"? Has the Savior fulfilled this part of the work? Go with me, if you please, to Bethany. There we find a little family group of three—two sisters and one brother. Jesus loved this family; there was a three-fold chord that bound them together which could not be easily broken. One out of this circle is taken sick and dies. They informed Jesus of his sickness, and he told his disciples that Lazarus was dead, and he must go to awake him from his slumbers. See the Savior as he goes to perform this work. Look at Martha on her way to meet Jesus—what confidence in the Savior's power! "If thou hadst been here my brother had not died. But I know, that even now, whatsoever thou wilt ask of God, God will give it thee." In reply, Jesus says to her. "Thy brother shall rise again." Said she, "I know he shall rise again in the resurrection at the last day." Martha believed firmly in the resurrection at the last day; but she hardly expected that that brother they had laid away in the grave should be restored to their family circle so soon! She expected to have to wait until the last day. Pause a moment here: Jesus is left alone while Martha goes and tells Mary that the Master has come! How glad she was! No company could keep her from her Master. The Jews that had come to comfort her thought that she had gone to the grave to weep, and they followed her. Look at Mary with Jesus! see her weeping! No wonder she weeps; it shows how dearly she loved him. Jesus is affected by the scene, and also weeps. His tears are mingled with Mary's; and the Jews say How dearly he must have loved him! Jesus breaks in on the solemnity of this scene by saying, "Where have ye laid him"? He follows them to the grave. He commands them to take away the stone. Oh! look at the Son of God! Now we are standing upon hallowed ground! The grave is uncovered! Let all be hushed into silence! Look at Jesus! See him lifting his eyes to heaven! Listen! What is he saying? "Father, I thank the that thou hast heard me."....And after he had thus spoken he cried with a loud voice "Lazarus! come forth"!! He heard the voice of his Master and obeyed! Here Jesus manifested his power. Here he showed that, even then the dead could hear the voice of the Son of God and come forth. Who heard the voice? Lazarus. Where was Lazarus when he heard the voice? In the grave. What condition was he in when he heard the voice? He was dead. He says nothing about what he heard or saw during those four days No; nor could he: for there is no work, nor device, not knowledge, nor wisdom in the grave. Thus how plainly has the first part of our second application been fulfilled!

Third: We would inquire where are the saints that died ages ago? And what are the promises concerning them? Our text says the time is coming when the dead shall hear the voice of the Son of God, and they that hear shall live. Who are to hear the voice?

"The dead." Where are they when they hear? "In the graves." What is the result? They live. There is no promise to any part outside the grave. If the soul has taken its flight on angel wings to elysian fields, it is never called back; the voice does not reach such. It is the "dead" that the voice reaches, and not the living. It must also be the accountable part of man that hears and obeys. But, to satisfy your minds upon this point, let us go and look into the resting places of our forefathers, and see whether any chane has taken place. But where shall we go? Let us go to the resting place of Abraham, the "Father of the Faithful." We read in Genesis 25:8 that "he died in a good old age.... and was gathered to his people." We have a work now before us. We want to ascertain where Abraham is. As we enter the field which he bought with his own money in which to bury his beloved wife out of his sight, a feeling of solemnity comes over us, and as we approach the cave of Machpelah the thoughts of the past crowd into our minds. The first interment made here was of a beloved companion when Sarah was laid away to rest. Abraham retires from the place as a mourner. Let us now remain at this grave and watch the work of the enemy. Soon we see another funeral procession, and when they approach the grave we inquire who is dead. They answer, It is Abraham. Now he rests by the side of his wife. We yet wait: we are in no hurry to leave the place. It is so sacred—we love the spot; and although year after year passes before this place is visited again, yet we wait knowing that death is on its march, and some of our fathers will soon have to yield to the monster. Soon we hear the footsteps of men bearing the body of another. We inquire who has fallen now? They tell us Isaac. And while we linger still around this grave another is brought — Rebekah, his wife, and laid away; and then Leah, Jacob's wife, and then Jacob himself. They are all laid away together to rest from their work. They confessed, while they were living, that they were seeking for a country, a heavenly one. Abraham sought a city which had foundations, whose builder and maker was God. But, says the objector, have they not entered that city, and have they not taken possession of that heavenly country? Hear Paul. "These all died in the faith, not having received the promises but having seen them afar off, and were persuaded of them and embraced them, and confessed that they were strangers and pilgrims on the earth." Here they remain in the cave of Machpelah, not living, but dead. Here they are resting in hope. Now we are prepared to leave this secluded spot, where we have seen so many laid away, and go to stand by other graves. But where shall we go? Let us go to David's tomb, and uncover it, and see if we can learn anything there concerning the condition of the dead. And as we look upon the pale face and the closed lips of the inmate of that tomb, we wish that those lips could be unsealed for a time, and we could hear their testimony. But have not those lips spoken something when alive that will answer the question? Yes, from a gushing heart he says, "Praise the Lord O my soul; while I live will I praise the Lord....Put not your trust in princes nor in the son of man in whom there is no help. His breath goeth forth: he returneth to his earth; in that very day his thoughts perish." Hezekiah also testifies upon this point: "The grave cannot praise thee: they that go down into the pit cannot hope for thy truth." Peter also testifies on the day of pentecost concerning the inmate of this tomb: "Men and brethren, let me freely speak unto you of the patriarch David, that he is both dead and buried, and his sepulcher is with us unto this day....For David is not ascended into the heavens." Paul, while preaching at Antioch, also said, "For David, after he had served his own generation, by the will of God, fell on sleep, and was laid unto his fathers and saw corruption." We will visit one more tomb before we leave the chambers of the dead. The one we have selected is Job. Before his death we hear him say, "Man dieth and wasteth away; yea, man giveth up the ghost and where is he?" Job asks the question, then he answers it himself: "As the waters fail from the sea, and the flood decayeth and drieth up, so man lieth down, and riseth not: till the heavens be no more they shall not awake or be raised out of their sleep." Then he wishes to be hid away, until God's wrath should be past. But where does he wish to be hid? Let him answer: "O that thou wouldst hide me in the GRAVE!" Then he asks the all-important question: "If a man die, shall he live again?" Where shall we search for an answer to this question? It is a question upon which our future life hangs, for Paul has said, "If there be no resurrection....then they also which have fallen asleep in Christ are perished." A belief in Christ will not save us; a belief in immortality will not save us if these bodies that are now silent in death do not live again.

Oh! what a sad picture is now before us! The dark pall of death is now spread over the whole earth; not a spot that is not overshadowed by its sombre folds. One after another falls a victim to the cruel foe, and now a cloud thick and dark is settling down upon the dead, and we are wondering what will become of them. We hear a voice! It is the voice of Jesus, answering Job's question, that had been asked more than a thousand years before: "If a man die shall he live again"? "He that believeth in me, though he were dead, yet shall he live"! This is the same voice that said to Lazarus, "COME FORTH!" The same voice that is in the future to pierce the grave and wake the sleepers there.

Let this dark cloud withdraw that has been hiding the future from our eyes, and let us listen to the hope of the sleeping ones expressed before their death. Hear David: "As for me, I shall behold thy face in righteousness: I shall be satisfied when I awake with thy likeness!" David knew very well that he would sleep, but not forever. He looked forward to the awakening time on the other side of the valley. We are glad to have David's testimony. Now let us hear others. Let Job speak: "All the days of my appointed time will I wait till my change come." Where did we leave Job? In the tomb. How long did he expect to remain there? All his appointed time. What did he expect to hear at the end of that time? A voice. "Thou shalt call and I will answer thee." What did Job expect the final result would be? He expected a change. Hear Paul upon this point: "Behold I show you a mystery; we shall not all sleep, but we shall all be changed!" How Job and Paul agree! But wait a moment more, and hear Job testify again before we dismiss him from the stand. He says, "I know that my Redeemer liveth, and that he shall stand at the latter day upon the earth, and though after my skin, worms destroy this body, yet in my flesh shall I see God, whom I shall see for myself, and mine eyes shall behold, and not another! Let us question Job before we dismiss him. Where do you expect to see your Redeemer? On the earth. When do you expect to see him? In the latter day. Do you expect that your body will be raised? Yes, although worms destroy this body, yet in my flesh I shall see God. But will not it be the immortal soul that will be permitted thus to see God? No! my own eyes shall behold him, "and not another." What confidence is here expressed! Are we willing to believe it? But let us introduce another witness. Let Isaiah speak. "Thy dead men shall live, together with my dead body shall they arise! Awake and sing, ye that dwell in dust, for thy dew is as the dew of herbs, and the earth shall cast out the dead!" We pause yet a moment in awe, for God speaks! "I will ransom them from the power of the grave! I will redeem them from death! O Death, I will be thy plagues! O Grave, I will be thy destruction!"

We need not doubt any longer concerning our dead. Their lips are sealed now, but the promise is, they shall sing. Their eyes are closed, but they will not remain closed forever. We may press our lips upon the marble brow, and look upon the cold form of our loved ones, and in the anguish of our hearts cry out, Oh! my son, my son, canst thou not open thine eyes and look once more upon thy parent whose heart-strings are breaking with grief? Canst thou not speak just this once ere we lay thee away in the tomb? But all is in vain; we cannot wake him from his slumber. Then we have to turn to the promises in God's Word and derive comfort from thence. All other comfort fails. It is in the resurrection we hope now for a reunion. The grave has gained the victory for a time, but it is short. Wait till Jesus comes "from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangel, and the trump of God," then "the dead in Christ shall rise first"; then shall all the saints hear the voice. Abraham and Sarah, Isaac and Jacob, David and Job shall come forth with all the scattered ones along down the stream of time. And our loved ones that we have laid away in sadness we shall meet again. Oh! what a hope is ours! Jesus will finish the work he has commenced! Glory be to his name!!

"Oh! could we speak the matchless worth!
Oh! could we sound the glories forth
  Which in our Savior shine;
We'd soar and touch the heavenly strings,
And vie with Gabriel while he sings,
  In notes almost divine!

"Oh! the delightful day will come,
When Christ our Lord will bring us home,
  And we shall see his face!
Then, with our Savior, Brother, Friend,
A blest eternity we'll spend,
  Triumphant in his grace!"

The Abomination of Desolation.

BY H. V. REED.

Writers upon prophecy have experienced much difficulty in explaining the abomination of desolation spoken of by the Prophet Daniel, and yet our Lord, in referring to this prophecy says: whoso readeth let him understand, which places it within the reach of our comprehension. Peter also makes a similar statement, "no prophecy of the Scripture is of any private interpretation." In the light of these plain testimonies it appears that we have full scriptural authority to inquire into the subject named at the head of this article. In treating of this question we shall present what we have to say under the following heads viz:

1. What is the abomination?
2. Where was it set up?

In answer to the first inquiry, it may be observed, that any system of religious worship which stands opposed to God and his truth, is an abomination. This statement is sustained by the uniform testimony of the Prophets. The various religions of the different nations which surrounded Israel, during the time from Moses to Christ were called abominations. And whenever those nations established their religions in Jerusalem, in place of the temple service, it was not only a desecration of the sacred altar but pronounced by the the Prophets an abomination. We will here quote from 2 Kings an example, which will fully demonstrate what we have said. In speaking of the wicked reign of Manassah, it is recorded. "And he did that which was evil in the sight of the Lord, after the abominations of the heathen, whom the Lord cast out before the children of Israel. For he built up again the high places which Hezekiah his father had destroyed; and he reared up altars for Baal, and he made a grove as did Ahab King of Israel; and WORSHIPPED ALL THE host of heaven." 2 Kings 21: 2, 3. Of Josiah's good reign it is recorded; "Moreover the workers with familiar spirits, and wizards, and the images and the idols, and all the ABOMINATIONS, that were spied in the land of Judah, and in Jerusalem, did Josiah put away that he might perform the words of the law which were written in the book that Hilkiah the priest found in the house of the Lord." 2 Kings 23: 24. These quotations are sufficient to show that all systems of religion which embrace in their modes of worship, images, idols, familiar spirits, and the hosts of heaven, are abominations in the sight of the one only true and God. It follows therefore that the abomination of desolation spoken of by Daniel must be some form of false religion, or idolatry, which should be set in up place of the temple service, and would prevail in place of the true worshipot God even unto the consummation. This brings us to the second point.

When and where was this abomination set up?

Many writers have of late years endeavored to apply this prophecy to the Catholic church, but it appears to us that such a view is in direct conflict with the simplest rules of prophetic interpretation. Christ has told us where this abomination was to be placed, and we are not left without an explanation. He says: "When ye therefore shall see the ABOMINATION OF DESOLATION spoken of by Daniel the Prophet, stand in the HOLY PLACE, (whoso readeth let him understand.) THEN let them which be IN JUDEA FLEE UNTO THE MOUNTAINS; let him which is on the housetop not come down to take anything out of his house." By reading Luke we get a further explanation. "When ye shall see JERUSALEM compassed with armies, then know that the desolation thereof is nigh. Then let them which are in JUDEA flee unto the mountains," etc. These testimonies show unmistakably that the abomination refers to Jerusalem, and Judea, when the Roman armies invaded the Holy Land, and destroyed Jerusalem, suspended the daily sacrifice, and carried the Jewish people away captives. Then was fulfilled to a certain extent, the prophecy of Daniel' which we will here quote: "And after three score and two weeks shall the Messiah be cut off, but not for himself, and the people of the prince that shall come shall destroy the CITY, and the SANCTUARY, and the end thereof shall be with a flood, and unto the end of the war DESOLATIONS are determined." Dan. 9: 26. Of this same power it is further said, in verse 27, "And in the midst of the week he shall cause the sacrifice and oblation to cease, and for the overspreading of ABOMINATIONS he shall make it DESOLATE even until the consummation, and that determined shall be poured upon the desolate," (desolator,—margin.)

Daniel's whole inquiry was with regard to his people, Israel, and the sanctuary. He was anxious to know how long his people and city were to be trodden down—how long the daily sacrifice was to be suspended, and how long the little horn, which waxed exceeding great, should prevail.

It seems to us impossible for any one to argue that the Catholic church set up this abomination in Rome, when the whole scope of the prophecy is JEWISH, and the terms used, such as "daily sacrifice," sanctuary," and "the Holy City,"—are all literally true of Daniel's people, who were then in captivity. See Dan. 8: 10—14, also verses 23 24. The Catholic church came into power some time in the sixth century, and can in no way be viewed as the power which destroyed the city of Jerusalem; took away the daily sacrifice, and scattered the Jewish host. All this was accomplished before the Catholic power arose; and was the work of Pagan Rome. It is plain, then, that the desolation, and tribulation are Jewish, and the power which brought on these calamities was Roman. Titus, the prince, did literally take away the daily sacrifice, and the work of desolation commenced with the destruction of Daniel's city and nation; but the setting up of the abomination of desolation is another point distinct from the taking away of the daily sacrifice. The events are widely different; the one is taken away, and the other is put in its place. As long as the daily remained, the abomination could not be set up. As to the length of time which intervened between the removal of the one and the setting up of the other, we are not informed.

Some distinguished expositors point to the Emperor Adrian] who built a temple in Jerusalem, and dedicated it to Jupiter Capitolinus, A. D. 136 Others point, and with some plausibility, to the Mohammedan power, which became established in the Holy City in 634, when the Mosque of Omar was built, and the Christian churches were turned over to the religion of the Koran. It appears to us, that whatever power has trodden down Jerusalem, instituted false worship, and desecrated the land of promise, is contemplated in the prophecy, but more particularly the Mohammedan scourge.

The duration of this power is to be for "a time, times and an half," which covers the whole period from the setting up of the abomination to its final overthrow, or to the removal of the Mosque of Omar and the transfer of the land of Judea from the power of the Gentile, back into the hands of the Jews. If we date the twelve hundred and sixty days from the time Mahomet organized his government at Medina, 620—22, the power of the Moslem will cease in 1880, seven years from the present time. If we date from 634 when Omar set up the religion of the Koran, we are carried forward to 1894, only twenty years. That we are reaching an important epoch in the affairs of the East, there can be no doubt. The sixth trumpet ends with the complete destruction of the Turkish empire, and the beginning of the time of the end, during which the seventh angel sounds, and in whose days the mystery of God shall be finished, as he hath declared to his servants the Prophets. Events are rapidly crowding into a narrow space of time, and the times of the Gentiles are near their close.

The ten kings of the fourth beast, whose body is to be given to the burning flame, are making ready for the grand conflict. The old Roman earth will present the last phase of human power. The judgment will set, and all antichristian confederations will fall. The day of heaven's visitation upon the wicked apostate powers of Eastern and Western Rome cannot be far away. Disloyalty, wickedness in high places, and general scepticism now pervade the world. Earth's problem will soon be solved by the inauguration of the King of kings. May we be ready.

Failing Faith.

BY F. B.

The days in which we live are peculiar ones in the Christian dispensation, in that faith fails from among men. Not that men lack the Word of God, nor that they lack knowledge, for there never was a time when these were so diffuse as now. But men's hearts, with regard to the Bible, appear to be calloused, and with the increase of knowledge men reject the life of faith which God requires as a means of coming to him.

Infidelity and skepticism are not confined entirely to those who make no profession of Christianity. There is a vast amount in the professed church of Christ. And it is two-fold in its character. In one form it is made manifest in a denial of "present truth" as found in the Bible; and in another form it is shown in a failure to consecrate all to God, and thus to "dwell" in him.

Among the great amount of general truths that God has given to his people, there are certain particular items that are called "meat in due season," which are to be given to the household at the present time, and these constitute what is called "present truth." And to reject these truths is to reject what God has ordained as a means through which he manifests himself to the world.

Prominent among these is the doctrine of the nearness of the second advent of Jesus as taught in all the prophecies; and intimately connected with this is the doctrine of eternal life only through Christ. The first, when duly regarded, tends to regulate the lives of men with regard to the outward economy of God in relation to this world. As with a tree: not only must it be healthy in its nature, but it must be trimmed and regulated in its outward conditions in order to usefulness and fruit-bearing. So the child of God needs not only inward grace, but he also needs the influence of truths that bear upon him from without, so that he may be continually prepared for changes in God's dispensational economy.

As Noah must believe the coming flood, and Lot the coming overthrow of Sodom, and the disciples the coming destruction of Jerusalem, in order to have the righteousness and salvation that comes by faith, so Christians are warned now of a coming judgment and a failure to believe it, and to live as if expecting it, produces a corresponding failure of righteousness and present salvation.

But that day will come suddenly and unawares upon an ungodly world and a slumbering and faithless church, for faith in it is failing from among men. And because of this failing of faith, the church wanders from the narrow path of Zion's pilgrimage, and is heaping up riches, and engaging in idolatrous services, and seeking for worldly pleasures, and when the day of the Lord shall come, it shall find them as opposers to God, and their portion shall be with hypocrites and unbelievers.

But there is another form of failing faith at the present day, seen in the lack of seeking that inward purity and indwelling spirituality that is taught in the Scriptures, and by which men become holy before God and among men. And so far in this respect has faith failed from the earth that sects and denominations are in existence whose great distinguishing features are the utter denial of an inward religious experience by which men become partakers of the "divine nature." And everywhere the church is filling up with legality instead of faith. Men are taught to "do and live," instead of "live and do." Outward obedience and outward confession of truth is taught as the all-important requisite to salvation, and men are taught to be satisfied with these, and to indulge hope because they have done this part of the work. Thus the letter, which "killeth," is exalted above the spirit which "giveth life."

But it is certainly the privilege of the people of God, at this hour, when faith is failing, and when ungodliness is towering Goliah-like, and defying God's Israel, it is the glorious privilege of those who "do know their God," to stand out as children of light, and advocate holiness and truth, and unfurl the banner of Jesus as a perfect Savior and a coming glorious King. These are perilous times, and well is it for the humble child of God to watch unto prayer—to "be filled with the spirit"—to keep the light of divinity within the heart, and the lamp of God's truth shining brightly without.

"Speaking the Truth in Love."

(EPHESIANS 4: 15.)

BY E. A. BOYNTON.

2 Tim. 2: 25 reads as follows: "In meekness instructing those that oppose themselves; if God, peradventure, will give them repentance to the acknowledging of the truth." It is our duty to present the truth in meekness and love to all men, even though we sometimes meet with bitter opposition. I think some of our brethren err in this respect. I have sometimes listened to sermons delivered by Advent ministers and I occasionally read articles in our papers containing good, sound arguments in proof of what we understand to be Bible truth. But the spirit in which the evidence was presented was more or less unkind and uncharitable, and the style such as to make the opposite views appear ridiculous. I think such a course has a tendency to drive people away from the truth. They take offence, become impatient, and will not take the trouble to investigate the truth.

We should endeavor to speak to the heart as well as to the understanding when we attempt to hold up the truth before our brethren of other denominations; cheerfully recognizing them as Christians whom we believe to be laboring under a misunderstanding of some portions of Scripture, and whom we would instruct in the way of the Lord more perfectly. When we do this they will be likely to give us a candid hearing; and if our views appear to them to be Scriptural, they will embrace them. If not, they will still feel kindly towards us, ready for further investigation. I know there are some who reject the doctrines we advocate in a spirit of bitterness, and even hatred. Such should be dealt with plainly, but kindly, and never in ridicule or sarcasm. May God help us to be "wise as serpents and harmless as doves." And may we be so sanctified through the truth that all can readily see its happy effect upon our lives. And when once they see its beauty and consistency they will be constrained to fall in love with it, embrace it, and rejoice in it.

Hades

BY H. CONSTABLE.

Allow me to to say a few words relative to Mr. Rotherham's observations on my chapters on Hades.

1. I am sorry that he does oot approve of the method I have taken in commencing my subject with an inquiry as to what Scripture tells us of human nature. I can only say that a great many readers of the Rainbow approve of the method which I have followed.

2. With respect to Mr. Rotherham's charge that I have avoided the "direct evidence" of Scripture on the nature of Hades, I beg to state that Mr. Rotherham is here incorrect. I do not think that he could have read my ninth and tenth chapters. I certainly have not passed in review each of the seventy-six places in which Mr. Rotherham tell us the word occurs; but any one who has read what I have written will see that I have examined a great many of those passages, and these are what appeared to me the most important.

3. Mr. Rotherham seems to think that he has made a wonderful point against me rendering Luke 14: 23, by "and in the grave he lift up his eyes being in torments," &c. As his point, however, depends in his opinion upon its making "no difference" whether Lord here "opened his mouth in a parable," I do not think his point to be of much weight. I would only recommend Mr. Rotherham to study a little more than he has done the nature of parables. It does make all the difference in the world whether language be that of parable or narrative. Trees are said in the Bible to have spoken (Judges 9: 8; Is. 14: 8). Surely Mr. Rotherham will not say that it makes no difference whether such descriptions be those of narrative or parable.

I will here say no more. Mr Rotherham and your readers will soon have an opportunity of reading my view of the parable of Dives and Lazarus, to which Mr. Rotherham refers. I have given to it a chapter in my forthcoming book on Hades. When my whole views are placed before the public, and when men really know what I have to say, I will invite the closest scrutiny, friendly and hostile alike.—Rainbow.

Recognitions.

I was at a recruiting meeting in 1862, in little town down in the Prairie State, when there strolled into town an old drummer with his drum and his gifts. He was remarkable in the skill with which he whirled his sticks in the air while drumming. Soon a crowd gathered about him, among the rest an old fifer who lived in the town. It was soon arranged for some music. These old musicians were introduced, passed the ordinary salutation, and went to work. They were old and gray and bowed; and as I looked at them I thought of Scott's minstrel who was "infirm and old." Soon the drummer dropped his sticks, faced square around before the fifer, rubbed one hand over his own eyes, and with the other pushed up the fifer's cap, then peered into his eyes, saying, "John, didn't you play that at Lundy's Lane as we charged the British when the sun was setting? I drummed it there by your side." The fife and drumsticks fell together, and the two old soldiers were in each others arms. It had been nearly half a century. Time had hacked at their bodies till they were covered and seamed with scars. But there was something in the music that had defied all changes. Here we lose our friends. As we journey in the Master's service one child slumbers on the bank of some Western stream, another over the mountains in a quiet village graveyard, and another may wait in the soil of the sunny south. But we shall be all gathered by and by. I can't tell how it will be, but somehow, yonder, there will be something in the voice, in the accents in the form, in the way the head is carried, or in flash of the eye, something that will tell the wonderful secret, for we shall know even as we are known.—Fowler

FAITH.

The Scriptural importance of faith is often lost sight of. The Bible makes faith the pivot on which all its promises turn. Whatever is not of faith is sin. Without faith it is impossible to please God. He that cometh to God must believe that he is, and that he is the rewarder of all them that do diligently seek him. It is indeed made the one grand condition of salvation; so that, as one has well said, "Whatever a man may have, if he have not faith, he cannot be saved; and whatever a man may lack, if he have faith he cannot but be saved." "Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ and thou shalt be saved." "For God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son that whosoever believeth in him should not perish but have everlasting life." Christ, and the apostles after him, plainly taught the doctrine of salvation by faith. Faith he commended, and unbelief reproved. The Savior's language to us is, "only believe." "All things are possible to him that believeth." "According to thy faith, so be it done unto thee." Faith alone in Christ is the ground of our justification with God. "Therefore, being justified by faith, we have peace with God through our Lord Jesus Christ." "By him all that believe are justified from all things from which they could not be justified by the law of Moses," or of works. And so of our inward renewal and sanctification—it is by faith. Peter says of the Gentile converts, that God put no difference between us and them, purifying their hearts by faith. And as it is by faith that we receive Christ Jesus the Lord, so it is by faith that we are to live and walk in him. St. Paul says "I am crucified with Christ; nevertheless I live, yet not I, but Christ liveth in me, and the life which I now live in the flesh, I live by the faith of the Son of God, who loved me and gave himself for me." The Christian man can live in no other way. "The just shall live by his faith." "We stand by faith, and we walk by faith," says Paul, "not by sight." Exceeding great and precious promises are given to all those who overcome. But it is only by faith we can overcome. "This is the victory that overcometh the world, even our faith."

Of no avail are all our professions of discipleship without faith. Without faith no man is a fit subject to be baptized in the name of Christ. Philip made this a test in the case of the eunuch—"If thou believest with all thine heart, thou mayest."

People are apt to be alarmed lest in preaching up faith we should overlook works. But good works should be regarded in no other light than the natural fruits of living faith. It is impossible for a man to have faith without them. A faith which does not produce good works is dead and worthless. The great error is, we get works before faith. Our minds center on doing constantly, instead of believing constantly. And we are failing ever in doing, ever in bondage to the law, and ever condemning ourselves for our shortcomings, feeling our duty is to do more, when our great fault and sin is, that we do not believe more. We go about to establish our own righteousness, in place of submitting to the righteousness which is of God by faith.

Faith is the root of all true religion; both love and obedience follow as its fruits. "Abraham believed God, and it was accounted to him for righteousness." And from the believing Abraham, we have the after faithful obedient Abraham:

Faith simply believes God; it trusts in him entirely, and submits to him absolutely. It has nothing to do with feeling, nothing with emotion; these in the nature of things follow as results. Some make faith a mysterious, inexplicable grace, when it is but the simplest of all ideas. God made promise to Abraham, and Abraham believed what God said—this was faith. God told Noah that he would drown the world with a flood; and Noah believed that God would do it, and this was faith. The belief of these patriarchs was to them perfect knowledge. Noah knew there would be a flood, because God said so; and his building the ark was the result of this faith. He did not believe the flood would come because he built an ark; but he built the ark because he believed the flood would come as God had said. Here we have an illustration showing clearly the relation that faith and works bear to each other.

And it is just so when we come to the gospel. He who believes in Christ as the Savior of men, as the great Life Giver, as man's only hope of pardon, and everlasting life; receives Christ as such, confesses him as such, and yields to him as such. It is as impossible for a man to believe wholly in Christ without being morally changed and reformed by his faith, as for Noah to have believed in the coming flood without the corresponding effects produced upon him.

Faith, in a word, is religion. Love and all the Christian virtues are but its manifestations—all springing from this one root of faith in God. "We love God because he first loved us." And this element of love springs up in our hearts when we believe God loves us and gave his Son to die for us.

Nor could anything be more reasonable, than this very system of salvation by faith. It was right here that man parted with God; and in being reinstated he is thus brought back again to the very point where he diverged. As a test of man's loyalty to his maker, he was not to eat of the forbidden fruit. God told him if he ate of it he should die. The tempter came questioning God's truthfulness, and telling the man he should not die. Now which will he believe, God or the devil? Which did he believe? He disbelieved God, and believed the devil! And thus came death, and all our sin and woe. Right here is the issue. And God's plan of atonement is such as leaves no other way for man but to repent and come back upon the very ground where he fell, and believe God, that he may live.

That a man is justified by faith is a wholesome doctrine, and very full of comfort. Our peace must come by believing. Victory and joy are its fruits. Faith in God will carry us through every trial. By faith we lean upon the promises, and find blessed rest, when everywhere else are tribulation and sorrow. "Abraham believed God and it was accounted unto him for righteousness." By faith he became the friend of God and father of the faithful. May the reader believe God, be a child of Abraham by faith, and thus an heir according to the promise.

POSSESSORS OF THE KINGDOM.

That the Bible points out a kingdom of unlimited felicity and interminable happiness to be enjoyed by some class of holy intelligences, is a conceded truth among all believers in the Holy Scriptures. But what kind of inhabitants will the kingdom contain? In other words, will the kingdom be peopled by a race of disembodied saints, or by saints with bodies made immortal and glorified like the body of Christ? Let the plan of God be what it may, it will be in harmony with itself, instead of being a vacillating system. If he has planned to save men in a disembodied state, he will never supplant his own plan by introducing physical saints into the kingdom with resurrected bodies; for this would not only involve a change in the divine plan, from the immaterial principle to the material principle of salvation, but would require the depopulation of the kingdom once occupied by disembodied subjects, that they might find their material bodies scattered over the earth; besides this, a supposition that the promised kingdom is now occupied by disembodied saints, is a virtual repudiation of a coming judgment—for what need of a judgment after men have entered into the kingdom?

Let the plan of God concerning the occupants of the kingdom be whatever it may, it will undergo no change, for it is right without any alteration; and when once the saints enter the kingdom, whether in a disembodied state, or as physical beings made immortal, they will "possess the kingdom forever, even forever and ever." If God has a plan for saving men in a disembodied state, he will save them in no other state; and consequently there can be no such a thing as saving men in a resurrected state without an abrogation of the divine plan. But, upon the other hand, if God's plan is to save men in a resurrected state, with bodies immortalized and glorified, then the theory of a kingdom for disembodied men is untrue. These two theories are irreconcilable. The one gives the kingdom to its possessors independent of the resurrection, while the other gives it to resurrected subjects who shall have experienced the "redemption of the body." The one theory gives a passport into the kingdom prior to the judgment, while the other allows only judged ones to enter. Both of these conflicting theories cannot be right, so we appeal to the Scriptures for a decision as to whether material or immaterial saints are to people the kingdom of God. As a preparatory step, we inquire at what epoch of time do the saints enter the kingdom? If they gain an entrance at death, it must be evident to every intelligent person that they must enter in a disembodied state, and consequently as immaterial subjects; but if they do not enter till the resurrection, it is evident that they must enter bodily, or as material beings changed to the immortal state.

1. That they do not enter the kingdom at death, is evident from various considerations:

First, The Bible contains no promise of an entrance at that epoch; and, if this were the plan of God, such a promise would not have been wanting.

Second: It is affirmed by the Apostle Paul that Christ is "dwelling in the light which no man can approach unto." (1 Tim. 6: 16.) Christ is officiating as our High Priest, in which capacity he has never been seen by man, and never can be, for his priesthood will be terminated before his judgeship begins; after this he will be seen by every eye, coming to judge the race.

Third: It is affirmed of the Psalmist, "David is not ascended into the heavens." (Acts 2: 34.) If death really transports saints to heaven, why was David left behind? He is classed among those who "died in faith," and was as really entitled to glory as any other man; but death was not the time to enter glory.

Fourth: Paul specifies a long list of ancient worthies, and then affirms: "These all died in faith, not having received the promises....God having provided some better things for us, that they without us should not be made perfect." (Heb. 11:13, 39.) If death had been the time for saints to enter upon their reward, Paul would not have made this affirmation, nor would he have located the perfecting of all the saints at one and the same time.

Fifth: The positive affirmation is made, "No man hath ascended up to heaven but the Son of man which is in heaven." (John 3:13.) This statement is not in harmony with the claim that heaven is filled with immaterial saints.

Sixth: Christ thus addressed his sorrow-stricken disciples: "As I said to the Jews, Whither I go ye cannot come, so now I say unto you." (John 13: 33.) They were not to be escorted to Christ by the "enemy" death, but he informed them that he would come again, and then receive them unto himself.

The foregoing considerations clearly show that death does not transport saints from earth to heaven, leaving us to conclude that the hour of death cannot be the epoch of entrance into that heavenly kingdom.

2. The Scriptures teach that the saints will enter the kingdom when Christ comes to raise the dead; consequently, instead of entering it in a disembodied state, they must enter it with resurrected and immortalized bodies.

First: Christ thus speaks on this point: "When the Son of man shall come in his glory, and all the holy angels with him, then shall he sit upon the throne of his glory, and....then shall the King say unto them on his right hand, Come ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom." (Mat. 25:31, 34.) As the resurrection takes place at the coming of Christ, the saints will enter the kingdom bodily; for there can be no disembodied state after the resurrection, even if there had been previously.

Second: The time of entrance into glory is thus specified by Paul: "When Christ, who is our life, shall appear, then shall ye also appear with him in glory." (Col. 3: 3.) If the saints are not to enter glory till Christ comes, since the resurrection is due when he comes, it is evident that they must enter as physical beings, and not as immaterial men.

Third: Christ thus speaks upon the same point: "So shall it be in the end of this world.... Then shall the righteous shine forth as the sun in the kingdom." (Mat. 13: 40, 43.) When we reach "the end of the world," and not till then, will the saints enter into the kingdom—not in a disembodied state for at that epoch the resurrection is due.

Fourth: The time of gaining a passport into the kingdom is thus alluded to by Jesus: "I go to prepare a place for you. And if I go and prepare a place for you, I will come again and and receive you unto myself, that where I am there ye may be also." (John 14: 2, 3.) As the resurrection is to take place at his coming, if Christ is then to receive the saints unto himself, he must receive them in their resurrected state, and not as disembodied beings. Then we shall experience "the redemption of our body." Then "mortality shall be swallowed up of life," for "this mortal shall put on immortality."

Thus, without inquiring into the geographical location of the promised kingdom—whether beyond the clouds, or to be located on this globe—it is an incontrovertible fact that its inheritors, instead of being disembodied souls, must be resurrected saints, immortalized; for the time when the saints enter the kingdom, being not at death, but at the resurrection, all can plainly see that there will then be no such thing as a disembodied state, even if there had been previously.

Reason, as well as Scripture, lends its sanction to the theory of a kingdom occupied by physical beings instead of immaterial men, as the King has a body which once was dead; and it would look more harmonious to have the subjects as literal as the king; and besides this, Paul affirms that Christ "shall change our vile [or corruptible] body that it may be fashioned like unto his glorious body." (Phil. 3:21.) Then the saints will have material bodies, rendered deathless and glorious? In harmony with this Jesus testifies: "But they that shall be accounted worthy to obtain that world, and the resurrection from the dead....neither can they die any more; for they are equal to the angels, and are the children of God, being the children of the resurrection." (Luke 20: 35, 36.) The statement "neither can they die any more", cannot refer to a deathless class but to material beings; so the inheritors of the world to come will be a class who once were a race of dying men. The Revelator likewise speaks of the future inheritors of the coming kingdom as a class once subject to death: "And there shall be no more death, neither sorrow, nor crying; neither shall there be any more pain, for the former things are passed away." (Rev. 21:4.) The very class who have felt pain here, and experienced death in this world, will there be exempt from pain, and die no more.

God will save physical men, by an exercise of his power changing them to a deathless state. The prevalent theory of the salvation of disembodied men is entirely out of harmony with the Bible. God's plan is to save real men, and that, too, after the judgment arrives, when the slumbering dead shall be called out of their dark beds of repose, both in land and sea, to be judged, not for deeds done in the soul, but for deeds done in the body. God holds the physical man accountable for the deeds done, and will judge the physical man, awarding him either the second death, or eternal life in the kingdom of God. May we be accounted worthy of that kingdom.

TWENTY-SEVEN BODIES IN HEAVEN.

A writer in the Christian Advocate thus expresses his opinion:

> One of the evangelists, detailing the extraordinary occurrences of the crucifixion, says: "The graves were opened, and many bodies of the saints which slept arose, and came out of the graves after his resurrection, and went into the holy city and appeared unto many." Jesus was himself the first fruits of them that slept, and the resurrection saints, who came out of their graves after his resurrection, were forerunners of the general resurrection of all who sleep in Jesus. They were known to their acquaintances on their reappearance in the holy city. Some have thought that their bodies quickly returned to the repose of the grave, but others maintain that in their resuscitated bodies they are incapable of death and have ascended to heaven with Christ, and are "elders" from the dead, as Christ was the first-born of the dead. It is maintained that these glorified men live in their risen bodies, in the blessedness of heaven; that theirs is that "new song" which could be sung only by the redeemed: "Thou was slain, and hast redeemed us to God by thy blood out of every kindred and tongue and nation and people." If this conjecture be correct, then there are not fewer than twenty seven human beings in heaven in their conjoined existence of soul and body; Christ, Enoch, Elijah, and the four-and-twenty elders. Twenty four of these have died and risen again, as Christ died and rose again, and they are patterns like him of what all the saved will be. It is not certain that they and all other risen and glorified saints may converse and commune together and with all the bright inhabitants of the angel world? These four-and twenty "elders," whom John saw sixty years after the resurrection, wore white robes, emblematic of their purity; their harps were symbols of joy, and their crowns were symbols of triumph. They had battled with sin, suffering and death, and had overcome all through the blood of the Lamb. "He that overcometh shall inherit all things." He will "have right to the tree of life, and enter in through the gates into the city."

While the apostle affirms that Christ was the "first-fruits of them that slept," he thus speaks of the harvest to which the first-fruit stands related: "Christ the first-fruits; afterward they that are Christ's at his coming." (Cor. 15:23.) So as Christ was the first one raised to immortality, and as those who were to rise "afterward" were to rise "at his coming," there is no chance for an intervening resurrection to immortality; hence it is certain that "the many bodies of the saints" which "came out of their graves after his resurrection," must have come forth in their mortal state; else Paul was mistaken in saying that those who should rise "afterward" on the same principle of Christ's resurrection, were to come forth "at his coming.

If the twenty-four elders are really twenty-four resurrected saints, it would sorely puzzle our friend to tell how they could have been redeemed out of "every kindred and tongue and people and nation," seeing there were so many kindreds and nations. Besides, if they they are really living and singing in heaven, they will need to change the last part of the song which they are said to sing, which affirms "We shall reign on the earth." Or do they contemplate vacating heaven?

If the disembodied state is really a blessing, why are these twenty-four made an exception to the rule? Or if death is a sleep, why are they made an exception? How came these to be made immortal before the judgment while others wait?

But the whole assumption falls before these affirmations: "No man hath ascended up to heaven but he that came down from heaven, even the Son of man which is in heaven." (John 3: 13.) "Dwelling in the light which no man can approach unto." (1 Tim. 6: 16.) Christ is the only earth-born resident of heaven.

WHAT WE NEED.

We have the truth, and are prepared to measure words with the lovers of tradition. But still, to some extent there is a lack among us. We need a higher toned Christianity in our midst, not a new religion, but a deeper experience. The truth must not be undervalued, or smothered; but in connection with the truth we need more of the vitalizing powers of the Holy Spirit, to fit us for the great work assigned us as ministers, of Christ. The disciples of Christ in Peter's day, "Preached the gospel with the Holy Ghost sent down from heaven;" and although we may not claim to be inspired at the present day, we claim that the Spirit "helpeth the infirmities," in preaching as well as in prayer.

A holy ministry will lead the church on to holy ground. A holy church is the light of the world. But if the light which is within us is suffered to become darkness, "how great is that darkness.

As ministers of Christ, let us range higher than truth loving theologians. Let us have Christ in us by the Spirit, and then we can proclaim the truth in the melting, moving, winning, spirit of the Master, instead of presenting it in the contentious, irritating spirit of calamity. Always let the message of God be delivered in the spirit of love, and never in a combative, censorious spirit. With a heart fully under the control of the divine spirit, this will be necessary.

FEET WASHING.

BROTHER SHELDON:—Will you please explain through THE TIMES that portion of the 13th chapter of John which relates to "feet washing." Your brother in Christ,

CHAS. ECKHART.

The question is often asked: "Do you believe in feet washing?" Yes; it is a healthful practice. It is also an act of cleanliness, and should not be disregarded. It was practiced many centuries before Christ came into the world, and was continued after he came. But some honest Christians have blundered into the incorrect conclusion that it was instituted by Christ as an act of worship. This is a double mistake. First: Christ did not institute feet washing at all, but simply patronized an old practice. Second: He never used it as an act of worship, but took the place of a servant, and washed his disciples' feet to teach them a lesson of humility, admonishing them to follow his example; and the principle is not restricted alone to feet washing. Aside from this allusion the practice is but once mentioned in the New Testament, and is then ranked in a catalogue of good works; but is never presented as an act of worship.

WHERE ARE THEY?

I saw in THE TIMES, of April 1, a question asked concerning Enoch and Elijah, and I want to ask another: Where did God take Enoch and Elijah to? If none have ascended to heaven but Christ where are Enoch and Elijah? Please give me some information on this subject through the paper.

Yours in hope, J. G HUNTINGTON.

It is much easier to tell where they are not, than to tell where they are, from the fact that the Bible is silent upon the question as to where they now are, but clear in its affirmation concerning the heaven in which Christ dwells, that "no man" hath ascended to that heaven but Christ. Enoch and Elijah were taken up into the atmospheric heaven, on their way to some locality which God has not revealed to us. Elijah went up by a whirlwind into heaven: and the only heaven visited by whirlwinds is the atmospheric heaven, which is alluded to in speaking of the "clouds of heaven," the "fowls of heaven," and the "winds of heaven." It would do no good to conjecture that they were taken to the moon, Mars, or Venus; but there are a thousand places where they might have gone without going where the Bible tells us "no man" has gone.

BY AN oversight an article entitled "The Judgment," went into our last issue without comment, containing the idea that the judgment day begins when a man dies. We have no warrant from the Scriptures to place the judgment day prior to the advent of Christ, when he will judge the world in righteousness. Men are to be raised from the dead to be judged. This one Bible fact is sufficient of itself to settle, not only the question of going to heaven or hell at death, but also the state of man in death. The dead know not any thing, neither have they any more a reward. The sea, death, and the grave are to deliver up their dead, that are in them, when all will be judged and rewarded; and not before.

CORRECTION.

EDS. TIMES:—We notice in a recent number of THE TIMES, a caution to the brethren to beware of one Moses Greenough as an impostor, and we would say to all that if it is Moses Greenough of Rockport, recently from Maine, he is conceded by all to be a good and worthy Christian.

Please in justice to him correct the statement.

R. D. TERRY, GEO. W. SMITH.
Gloucester Mass.

A GOOD MONTHLY.—The fact is everywhere conceded that the Bible Banner, published by H. A. King, New York, is doing a good work. It it is carrying the truth into many new fields, and dispelling the theological speculation. Those of our readers who wish to subscribe for a monthly in addition to taking a weekly paper, will do well to try the Banner, which can be obtained for $100, per year, with the present of a book, by addressing H. A. King, 14 Murray St. New York.

CALLED.—During the week brethren D. Mathewson, W. Sheldon, and F. Burr called on us, and we hope had a pleasant visit. Others, while passing through the city, would take some trouble to call on us if they knew what strength and courage their visits inspire into our feeble efforts.

RETURNED.—Elder Grant has returned from the Pacific Coast in good spirits. A good work has been done there. He will not attend the Campmeeting, as we had hoped; but Elders Collins, Clark, and others, besides our own ministers, may be expected.

WISCONSIN CAMP MEETING.—Let timely preparation for this meeting be made. We shall try to get fare reduced on the Madison division of the Northwestern R. R., but may not succeed. If we do, we will give notice in our next issue.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

AT HOME.

—Prof Charls. L. Ives, of Yale College, leaves for Europe, May 29th.

Lusignani, who murdered his wife for her marital infidelity, was hanged Thursday at Morristown, N. J. Friday, Nixon, of New York, and O'Neil, of this state.

—The two missing bodies of Mrs. Kentner and the child of Mrs. Hendricks, of the Dixon horror have been just recovered. This includes all that are known to be lost.

—According to a Washington special, negotiations are progressing there to turn over the lands granted by Texas to the Parisians who purchased the El Paso Railroad bonds, and thus relieve General Fremont from the judgment of the French courts.

—General Sherman, in conversation with Senator Casserly, not only expressed his opinion that there need be no apprehension of a general Indian war, but he also said that he had no fears of anything like a general outbreak, even on the Pacific coast.

—The conscience fund of the Treasury is assuming respectable proportions, growing out of the salary steal. Up to this date twenty-seven Representatives and Senators have turned their swag into the Treasury. The total amount thus far turned in is $111,222.97.

—Five Indians attacked the house of James Harrison, eight miles from Walla Walla. He refused to give them tobacco, and the Indians knocked the door down, Harrison defended himself and daughter, and with a hatchet knocked down two and struggled with a third, when the daughter came to his rescue and knocked the Indian down with an ax. The neighbors heard the outcries and came to their relief. Harrison got three Indians into jail, but two escaped.

—If Columbia, S. C., which stood in the line of Sherman's march to the sea, and was burned during the War, was fired by our troops, our Government is responsible for the destruction of several millions dollars' worth of cotton belonging to British subjects. If the Confederates were the incendiaries, then the Confederacy was responsible. The owners of the cotton, who have filed a claim against the United States, eschew the idea that the bankrupt and defunct Confederacy is responsible, and have brought Gens. Wade Hampton and Beauregard before the Mixed Claim Commission to swear positively that the flames were started by "Sherman's Bummers." Gens. Sherman, Howard, and Logan swear just as firmly that it was done by the other side.

—Dispatches from San Francisco, Cal., of the 12th, state that couriers from the lava-beds bring news that Captain Hasbrouck's command was attacked by a party of Modocs, and four soldiers and one Warm Spring (friendly) Indian were killed, and six soldiers and one Warm Spring Indian were wounded. The attack was sudden, and the troops were taken completely by surprise. After the first fire of the Modocs, Capt. Hasbrouck rallied his men and charged, and the Modocs retreated into the woods, scattering in all directions. Several volleys were fired upon them, but it is not known whether any were killed. The troops captured twenty-five horses belonging to the Modocs. Capt. Hasbrouck also captured six boxes of carbine cartridges, which had been captured by the Indians a short time ago, while they were being sent to the front. There were 33 Modocs in the fight, commanded by Capt. Jack, wearing the uniform of Gen. Canby. When the last courier left, Gen. Davis' camp and troops were between the lava-beds and the Modocs, who were entirely out of their lava stronghold. The artillery will be moved to the side of the lake to prevent the Modocs returning to the lava-bed, and the balance of the troops will immediately follow and exterminate them. It is the opinion of Capt. Hasbrouck that the Modocs are almost entirely out of ammunition. The bodies found by the expedition that went in search of Lieut. Cranston's party were those of Lieut. Cranston, Sergt. Ely, Corporal Mooney, bugler Doran, privates Albin and Bloem. Some were badly mutilated. Lieut. Cranston was scalped, as was also one of the others. Lewis Webber, who was buried on the 20th ult., had been dug up and the tendons of his legs taken out. All the bodies which were buried on that date had been burned more or less. The latest dispatch from Yreka says the Modocs are 25 miles from the place of the fight, hotly pursued by the troops and Warm Spring Indians.

—The disappearance of Dr. York, a brother to Senator York, who exposed the Pomeroy bribery, caused the first vigorous investigation into the cause of numerous similar disappearances that had occurred in a section of Kansas not far from Independence. Dr. York was missed about the middle of last March, and, a short time ago, Senator York organized a party to scour the country in search of some trace of him. Dr York was known to have taken the route between Independence and Osage Mission, and the scouring party came across a house situated about half way between Drum Creek and Big Hill, in a dismal expanse of prairie-land. This house was a sort of half-way stopping place, combining a grocery and eating-house, where travelers usually halted for lunch. The house was kept by a family named Bender, consisting of the old man and a young man, said to be father and son, and an old woman and a young woman, said to be mother and daughter. Both couples were supposed to be married, but the young woman, who professed to be a spiritualistic medium, to tell fortunes and to cure diseases, had a bad reputation in the neighborhood. When the object of Senator York's, search became known to these people, the young man offered to assist the party, and the young woman desired to make an appointment with Senator York, when she promised, she would reveal the manner of his brother's disappearance through the aid of the spirits. Little attention was paid to these offers, and Senator York and his party went on. They were obliged to return at last without having discovered any clue to the mysterious disappearance. Senator York then employed a detective named Beers, who went to work at the case. After some days, Beers' attention was drawn to the Bender house, and, when he went there, he found that it had been deserted The whole family, warned by Senator York's search, had fled. Their absence increased the detective's suspicion. Search was instituted at once, and traces of the missing York were soon discovered. The first convincing evidence of foul play in the house was found when Beers lifted a trap-door in the floor, and the sickening stench of decomposing remains came rushing through the opening. This satisfied Beers that Dr. York had met with a violent death on these premises, and he prosecuted his search still further. A patch of ground at the back of the house had been newly plowed over, and Beers carefully examined it in search of a disturbance or sub-soil. Having found a spot which looked as though earth had been thrown up, he took a wagon-rod, plunged it in the ground, and, at a depth of four feet, it pierced what was subsequently found to be the remains of a human body. Men were set to work to dig, and a body was found, which was subsequently identified as that of Dr. York.

The finding of York's body induced a search for others, which resulted in the finding of nine bodies in all, several of which were identified as those of persons who had suddenly and mysteriously disappeared within a few months back. It was discovered that there had been a regular system of burial. Each body had been deposited near a tree, which was then pruned in a manner to indicate that one burial had been in that spot, so that there would be no danger of digging a grave where one body already rested. This systematic arrangement showed that the murderers seriously and deliberately counted upon filling up the patch of ground with corpses, making a church-yard without a church, a cemetery without a tomb. The bodies were all deposited after a regular system:—the right arm folded across the breast and the left stretched down the side. There was a disposition to economize ground, as if it was feared that the burial place would not accommodate all the victims, for some of the bodies were placed on the side in narrow ditches, and some doubled up in a squatting position Three more bodies were discovered day before yesterday, making twelve in all. The search still continues, and it is impossible to say how many more may be brought to light. The wounds on the head, which are identified in all the bodies that have been unearthed, and the arrangement of the house, have indicated the manner in which the victims met their death. They were all travelers who stopped at the house for refreshments. They were seated at a table in the back room, near which hung a curtain. One or more persons, whether male or female, were concealed behind this curtain, and struck the traveler on the back of the head with a hammer. The victim was then seized and dragged to the trap-door, his throat cut, and the body was dropped into the cellar below, where it was allowed to remain until night came. It was then taken out and buried without attracting notice. All the bodies were marked in the same manner, except that of a little girl who had accompanied her father, and who is supposed to have been thrown into the grave while alive, as her body shows no marks of violence. The spoils of the Bender family, engaged in this traffic in human lives, must have been small, as none of the murdered travelers are known to have had any considerable sum of money with them. It is supposed, however, that the Benders had confederates posted along the road to inform them of favorable opportunities, and many arrests have already been made. The detective, Beers, had tracked them to St. Louis at last accounts, and it is not probable that they will be harbored in any quarter of the globe. This account was taken from the Chicago Tribune of May 14th. The Bender family have since been captured in Texas.

ABROAD.

—The Pope is reported very feeble, and his condition is rather worse, showing excessive exhaustion. On his eighty-[illegible] birthday, his holiness was unable to g[illegible] to the deputations which called [illegible] can to tender their congratulations

—During the sitting of the Italian Chamber Deputies, on the 10th, a crowd numbering 200 persons marched to the Quirinal, making riotous demonstrations on the way, and shouting for the complete abolition of religious corporations. The police made a stand against the mob, and prevented it from entering the palace.

—Russians have intersected their country with a vast web of railways, the completion of which is now only a matter of a few months, and by the aid of which they will be able with startling rapidity to concentrate the whole strength of their Empire in in any direction where it may be required. Fortifications have been rebuilt or repaired; they have been mounted with the best and heaviest guns and communication with them is rapid and easy. Among other means of offense and defense it is worthy of mention that the Caspian sea swarms with Russian war steamers, and a scheme has been set on foot to connect that lake with the Black sea by a canal. The navy, too, has received much attention. It is beyond doubt that for the last seventeen years Russia has been making preparations for war. Her present weakness lies in her finances; but it must be remembered that war is sometimes a lucrative speculation.

—The Pope still turns the key of the Vatican upon himself, and refuses to be considered as anything but a prisoner. He is visited almost daily both by Catholic and Protestant strangers, among whom there are more than the usual proportion of American ladies. To all these he complains of his treatment, and sometimes prophesies a speedy and splendid triumph. One rumor states however, that he is very tired of his isolation, and would gladly be reconciled with the Italian Government, if it could be done with dignity. I cannot guess how much truth there may be in this, but there are some stradge, and yet true stories in circulation. That the son (Ricciotti) of Garibaldi and the daughter of Cardinal Antonelli shougd have fallen desperately in love with each other, is a conjunction which would hardly have occurred to a novelist; yet it is a still more extraordinary circumstance that some of the Cardinal's money should have been used to support a violent democratic journal in Rome.

—Captain Charles F. Hall's Arctic expedition, in the steamer Polaris, which was fitted out by our national Government with all necessary scientific men and means, and which sailed from New York in June, 1871, has been unfortunate. Captain Hall, under whose superintendence the expedition was organized, and who was in command of it, died of apoplexy in November, 1871. A year later the main portion of the exploring party became separated from the Polaris, and, after great deprivations, sufferings and narrow escapes on the ice of the Arctic sea, were finally, after months of peril, rescued by the steamer Tigress, and recently reached St. John's, N. F., in safety. The fate of the Polaris and those on board is not known, and probably will not be for some time. The public generally, and especially the friends of science, will learn with deep regret the death of Captain Hall, and the failure of his expedition, from which so much was anticipated toward the final and definite settlement of the question of an "open polar sea."

—An explosion took place at Halifax in Drummond colliery, in Picton county. Dunn the manager, his assistant manager, and forty other men are in the pit. The slope is on fire, and there is no means of egress from the mine. Great anxiety is felt for the safety of the men. At half past eleven a shot in the coal set fire to the slope, and half an hour afterward a fearful explosion took place, caused by the accumulation of gas during the time the mine was closed. About two o'clock a second explosion occurred, coming up the slope air shaft, an old trial shaft, with terrible force, and it is believed, killing every one in the mine, variously estimated at from forty to one hundred, including men and boys. Soon after the first explosion cries were heard at the foot of the air-shaft. Men were immediately lowered with ropes, and four of those below brought up. Two men were going down the air-shaft to render assistance, when the second explosion occurred, and were blown to pieces. There was such a small supply of water that little could be done to quench the flames, which are still raging fiercely. Dense masses of smoke are pouring out at all the openings, and threatening to destroy all the surface buildings. No hope of saving any of those now below, as all escape was cut off by the explosion. Many of the lost are married men with families.

FEET WASHING.

Brother Sheldon:—Will you please explain through The Times that portion of the 13th chapter of John which relates to "feet washing." Your brother in Christ,

Chas. Eckhart.

The question is often asked: "Do you believe in feet washing?" Yes; it is a healthful practice. It is also an act of cleanliness, and should not be disregarded. It was practiced many centuries before Christ came into the world, and was continued after he came. But some honest Christians have blundered into the incorrect conclusion that it was instituted by Christ as an act of worship. This is a double mistake. First: Christ did not institute feet washing at all, but simply patronized an old practice. Second: He never used it as an act of worship, but took the place of a servant, and washed his disciples' feet to teach them a lesson of humility, admonishing them to follow his example; and the principle is not restricted alone to feet washing. Aside from this allusion the practice is but once mentioned in the New Testament, and is then ranked in a catalogue of good works; but is never presented as an act of worship.

WHERE ARE THEY?

I saw in The Times, of April 1, a question asked concerning Enoch and Elijah, and I want to ask another: Where did God take Enoch and Elijah to? If none have ascended to heaven but Christ where are Enoch and Elijah? Please give me some information on this subject through the paper.

Yours in hope, J. G Huntington,

It is much easier to tell where they are not, than to tell where they are, from the fact that the Bible is silent upon the question as to where they now are, but clear in its affirmation concerning the heaven in which Christ dwells, that "no man" hath ascended to that heaven but Christ. Enoch and Elijah were taken up into the atmospheric heaven, on their way to some locality which God has not revealed to us. Elijah went up by a whirlwind into heaven: and the only heaven visited by whirlwinds is the atmospheric heaven, which is alluded to in speaking of the "clouds of heaven," the "fowls of heaven," and the "winds of heaven." It would do no good to conjecture that they were taken to the moon, Mars, or Venus; but there are a thousand places where they might have gone without going where the Bible tells us "no man" has gone.

By an oversight an article entitled "The Judgment," went into our last issue without comment, containing the idea that the judgment day begins when a man dies. We have no warrant from the Scriptures to place the judgment day prior to the advent of Christ, when he will judge the world in righteousness. Men are to be raised from the dead to be judged. This one Bible fact is sufficient of itself to settle, not only the question of going to heaven or hell at death, but also the state of man in death. The dead know not any thing, neither have they any more a reward. The sea, death, and the grave are to deliver up their dead, that are in them, when all will be judged and rewarded; and not before.

CORRECTION.

Eds. Times:—We notice in a recent number of The Times, a caution to the brethren to beware of one Moses Greenough as an impostor, and we would say to all that if it is Moses Greenough of Rockport, recently from Maine, he is conceded by all to be a good and worthy Christian.

Please in justice to him correct the statement.

A Good Monthly.—The fact is everywhere conceded that the Bible Banner, published by H. A. King, New York, is doing a good work. It it is carrying the truth into many new fields, and dispelling the theological speculation. Those of our readers who wish to subscribe for a monthly in addition to taking a weekly paper, will do well to try the Banner, which can be obtained for $100, per year, with the present of a book, by addressing H. A. King, 14 Murray St. New York.

Called.—During the week brethren D. Mathewson, W. Sheldon, and F. Burr called on us, and we hope had a pleasant visit. Others, while passing through the city, would take some trouble to call on us if they knew what strength and courage their visits inspire into our feeble efforts.

Returned.—Elder Grant has returned from the Pacific Coast in good spirits. A good work has been done there. He will not attend the Camp-meeting, as we had hoped; but Elders Collins, Clark, and others, besides our own ministers, may be expected.

Wisconsin Camp Meeting.—Let timely preparation for this meeting be made. We shall try to get fare reduced on the Madison division of the Northwestern R. R., but may not succeed. If we do, we will give notice in our next issue.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

AT HOME.

—Prof Charls. L, Ives, of Yale College, leaves for Europe, May 22d.

Lusignani, who murdered his wife for her marital infidelity, was hanged Thursday at Morristown, N. J. Friday. Nixon, of New York, and O'Neil, of this state.

—The two missing bodies of Mrs. Kentner and the child of Mrs. Hendricks, of the Dixon horror have been just recovered. This includes all that are known to be lost.

—According to a Washington special, negotiations are progressing there to turn over the lands granted by Texas to the Parisians who purchased the El Paso Railroad bonds, and thus relieve General Fremont from the judgment of the French courts.

—General Sherman, in conversation with Senator Casserly, not only expressed his opinion that there need be no apprehension of a general Indian war, but he also said that he had no fears of anything like a general outbreak, even on the Pacific coast.

—The conscience fund of the Treasury is assuming respectable proportions, growing out of the salary steal. Up to this date twenty-seven Representatives and Senators have turned their swag into the Treasury. The total amount thus far turned in is $111,222.97.

—Five Indians attacked the house of James Harrison, eight miles from Walla Walla. He refused to give them tobacco, and the Indians knocked the door down, Harrison defended himself and daughter, and with a hatchet knocked down two and struggled with a third, when the daughter came to his rescue and knocked the Indian down with an ax. The neighbors heard the outcries and came to their relief. Harrison got three Indians into jail, but two escaped.

—If Columbia, S. C., which stood in the line of Sherman's march to the sea, and was burned during the War, was fired by our troops, our Government is responsible for the destruction of several millions dollars' worth of cotton belonging to British subjects. If the Confederates were the incendiaries, then the Confederacy was responsible. The owners of the cotton, who have filed a claim against the United States, eschew the idea that the bankrupt and defunct Confederacy is responsible, and have brought Gens. Wade Hampton and Beauregard before the Mixed Claim Commission to swear positively that the flames were started by "Sherman's Bummers." Gens. Sherman, Howard, and Logan swear just as firmly that it was done by the other side.

—Dispatches from San Francisco, Cal., of the 12th, state that couriers from the lava-beds bring news that Captain Hasbrouck's command was attacked by a party of Modocs, and four soldiers and one Warm Spring (friendly) Indian were killed, and six soldiers and one Warm Spring Indian were wounded. The attack was sudden, and the troops were taken completely by surprise. After the first fire of the Modocs, Capt. Hasbrouck rallied his men and charged, and the Modocs retreated into the woods, scattering in all directions. Several volleys were fired upon them, but it is not known whether any were killed. The troops captured twenty-five horses belonging to the Modocs. Capt. Hasbrouck also captured six boxes of carbine cartridges, which had been captured by the Indians a short time ago, while they were being sent to the front. There were 33 Modocs in the fight, commanded by Capt. Jack, wearing the uniform of Gen. Canby. When the last courier left, Gen. Davis' camp and troops were between the lava-beds and the Modocs, who were entirely out of their lava stronghold. The artillery will be moved to the side of the lake to prevent the Modocs returning to the lava-bed, and the balance of the troops will immediately follow and exterminate them. It is the opinion of Capt. Hasbrouck that the Modocs are almost entirely out of ammunition. The bodies found by the expedition that went in search of Lieut. Cranston's party were those of Lieut. Cranston, Sergt. Ely, Corporal Mooney, bugler Doran, privates Albin and Bloem,. Some were badly mutilated. Lieut. Cranston was scalped, as was also one of the others. Lewis Webber, who was buried on the 20th ult., had been dug up and the tendons of his legs taken out. All the bodies which were buried on that date had been burned more or less. The latest dispatch from Yreka says the Modocs are 25 miles from the place of the fight, hotly pursued by the troops and Warm Spring Indians.

—The disappearance of Dr. York, a brother to Senator York, who exposed the Pomery bribery, caused the first vigorous investigation into the cause of numerous similar disappearances that had occurred in a section of Kansas not far from Independence. Dr. York was missed about the middle of last March, and, a short time ago, Senator York organized a party to scour the country in search of some trace of him. Dr York was known to have taken the route between Independence and Osage Mission, and the scouring party came across a house situated about half way between Drum Creek and Big Hill, in a dismal expanse of prairie-land. This house was a sort of half-way stopping place, combining a grocery and eating-house, where travelers usually halted for lunch. The house was kept by a family named Bender, consisting of the old man and a young man, said to be father and son, and an old woman and a young woman, said to be mother and daughter. Both couples were supposed to be married, but the young woman, who professed to be a spiritualistic medium, to tell fortunes and to cure diseases, had a bad reputation in the neighborhood. When the object of Senator York's, search became known to those people, the young man offered to assist the party, and the young woman desired to make an appointment with Senator York, when she promised, she would reveal the manner of his brother's disappearance through the aid of the spirits. Little attention was paid to those offers, and Senator York and his party went on. They were obliged to return at last without having discovered any clue to the mysterious disappearance. Senator York then employed a detective named Beers, who went to work at the case. After some days, Beers' attention was drawn to the Bender house, and, when he went there, he found that it had been deserted The whole family, warned by Senator York's search, had fled. Their absence increased the detective's suspicion. Search was instituted at once, and traces of the missing York were soon discovered. The first convincing evidence of foul play in the house was found when Beers lifted a trap-door in the floor, and the sickening stench of decomposing remains came rushing through the opening. This satisfied Beers that Dr. York had met with a violent death on these premises, and he prosecuted his search still further. A patch of ground at the back of the house had been newly plowed over, and Beers carefully examined it in search of a disturbance or sub-soil. Having found a spot which looked as though earth had been thrown up, he took a wagon-rod, plunged it in the ground, and, at a depth of four feet, it pierced what was subsequently found to be the remains of a human body. Men were set to work to dig, and a body was found, which was subsequently identified as that of Dr. York.

The finding of York's body induced a search for others, which resulted in the finding of nine bodies in all, several of which were identified as those of persons who had suddenly and mysteriously disappeared within a few months back. It was discovered that there had been a regular system of burial. Each body had been deposited near a tree, which was then pruned in a manner to indicate that one burial had been in that spot, so that there would be no danger of digging a grave where one body already rested. This systematic arrangement showed that the murderers seriously and deliberately counted upon filling up the patch of ground with corpses, making a church-yard without a church, a cemetery without a tomb. The bodies were all deposited after a regular system:—the right arm folded across the breast and the left stretched down the side. There was a disposition to economize ground, as if it was feared that the burial place would not accommodate all the victims, for some of the bodies were placed on the side in narrow ditches, and some doubled up in a squatting position Three more bodies were discovered day before yesterday, making twelve in all. The search still continues, and it is impossible to say how many more may be brought to light. The wounds on the head, which are identified in all the bodies that have been unearthed, and the arrangement of the house, have indicated the manner in which the victims met their death. They were all travelers who stopped at the house for refreshments. They were seated at a table in the back room, near which hung a curtain. One or more persons, whether male or female, were concealed behind this curtain, and struck the traveler on the back of the head with a hammer. The victim was then seized and dragged to the trap-door, his throat cut, and the body was dropped into the cellar below, where it was allowed to remain until night came. It was then taken out and buried without attracting notice. All the bodies were marked in the same manner, except that of a little girl who had accompanied her father, and who is supposed to have been thrown into the grave while alive, as her body shows no marks of violence. The spoils of the Bender family, engaged in this traffic in human lives, must have been small, as none of the murdered travelers are known to have had any considerable sum of money with them. It is supposed, however, that the Benders had confederates posted along the road to inform them of favorable opportunities, and many arrests have already been made. The detective, Beers, had tracked them to St. Louis at last accounts, and it is not probable that they will be harbored in any quarter of the globe. This account was taken from the Chicago Tribune of May 14th. The Bender family have since been captured in Texas.

ABROAD.

—The Pope is reported very feeble, and his condition is rather worse, showing excessive exhaustion. On his eighty-first birthday, his holiness was unable to g[illegible] to the deputations which called [illegible] can to tender their congratulations

—During the sitting of the Italian Chamber Deputies, on the 10th, a crowd numbering 200 persons marched to the Quirinal, making riotous demonstrations on the way, and shouting for the complete abolition of religious corporations. The police made a stand against the mob, and prevented it from entering the palace.

—Russians have intersected their country with a vast web of railways, the completion of which is now only a matter of a few months, and by the aid of which they will be able with startling rapidity to concentrate the whole strength of their Empire in in any direction where it may be required. Fortifications have been rebuilt or repaired; they have been mounted with the best and heaviest guns and communication with them is rapid and easy. Among other means of offense and defense it is worthy of mention that the Caspian sea swarms with Russian war steamers, and a scheme has been set on foot to connect that lake with the Black sea by a canal. The navy, too, has received much attention. It is beyond doubt that for the last seventeen years Russia has been making preparations for war. Her present weakness lies in her finances; but it must be remembered that war is sometimes a lucrative speculation.

—The Pope still turns the key of the Vatican upon himself, and refuses to be considered as anything but a prisoner. He is visited almost daily both by Catholic and Protestant strangers, among whom there are more than the usual proportion of American ladies. To all these he complains of his treatment, and sometimes prophesies a speedy and splendid triumph. One rumor states however, that he is very tired of his isolation, and would gladly be reconciled with the Italian Government, if it could be done with dignity. I cannot guess how much truth there may be in this, but there are some stradge, and yet true stories in circulation. That the son (Ricciotti) of Garibaldi and the daughter of Cardinal Antonelli shougd have fallen desperately in love with each other, is a conjunction which would hardly have occurred to a novelist; yet it is a still more extraordinary circumstance that some of the Cardinal's money should have been used to support a violent democratic journal in Rome.

—Captain Charles F. Hall's Arctic expedition, in the steamer Polaris, which was fitted out by our national Government with all necessary scientific men and means, and which sailed from New York in June, 1871, has been unfortunate. Captain Hall, under whose superintendence the expedition was organized, and who was in command of it, died of apoplexy in November, 1871. A year later the main portion of the exploring party became separated from the Polaris, and, after great deprivations, sufferings and narrow escapes on the ice of the Arctic sea, were finally, after months of peril, rescued by the steamer Tigress, and recently reached St. John's, N. F., in safety. The fate of the Polaris and those on board is not known, and probably will not be for some time. The public generally, and especially the friends of science, will learn with deep regret the death of Captain Hall, and the failure of his expedition, from which so much was anticipated toward the final and definite settlement of the question of an "open polar sea."

—An explosion took place at Halifax in Drummond colliery, in Picton county. Dunn the manager, his assistant manager, and forty other men are in the pit. The slope is on fire, and there is no means of egress from the mine. Great anxiety is felt for the safety of the men. At half past eleven a shot in the coal set fire to the slope, and half an hour afterward a fearful explosion took place, caused by the accumulation of gas during the time the mine was closed. About two o'clock a second explosion occurred, coming up the slope air shaft, an old trial shaft, with terrible force, and it is believed, killing every one in the mine, variously estimated at from forty to one hundred, including men and boys. Soon after the first explosion cries were heard at the foot of the air-shaft. Men were immediately lowered with ropes, and four of those below brought up. Two men were going down the air-shaft to render assistance, when the second explosion occurred, and were blown to pieces. There was such a small supply of water that little could be done to quench the flames, which are still raging fiercely. Dense masses of smoke are pouring out at all the openings, and threatening to destroy all the surface buildings. No hope of saving any of those now below, as all escape was cut off by the explosion. Many of the lost are married men with families.

The Christian Life.

"Beloved it is the Last Time."

BY ALICE E. RATHBUN.

To the scattered ones, I say be pure in heart, holy in life, earnest and persistent in your work, and faithful to the end. The work we are doing now is our last work. The decisions now made are decisions for eternity. Soon we will no longer have opportunity to beseech our loved ones to accept eternal life. Soon the last prayer will be offered, the last invitation given, accepted or rejected; the last sermon preached, the last warning uttered, the last kind or loving word spoken, the last act of mercy performed, the last dollar given to God and to the work of saving sinners, and the hoarded thousands perish in the flames of judgment; then seeing the last of earth's scenes and toils are soon to be forever past, and only a little while and "He that shall come will come, and will not tarry;" yea, will come speedily to judgment and reward: Shall we not do with all our power whatever good our hands find to do? Seeing such momentous consequences, hang on the decisions of now, shall we not strive our utmost to have them right decisions? Shall not our appeals that may be last ones, be given with the beseeching earnestness of Christ in his cry, "O, Jerusalem, Jerusalem"? Shall our prayers be dead, formal, these last prayers, or shall they be full to overflowing of agonizing travails for souls? Shall our invitations go burning forth freighted with anxious, earnest, tender yearning? Shall our sermons be prosy and dry, doing no execution, or shall they be quickened and powerful swords having their polish keen edge, and melting winning tenderness, from lying long at the feet of Jesus, communing much with the infinite Father, and in the depths of humility sending forth to him our cries for help which he cannot deny. Oh! that God would give us all a baptising of love, perfect love and with it deep, anxious earnestness to save, seeing it is the last time shall not all our words be kind and loving in spirit, all our acts right acts, our free will offerings to God, free, indeed and bountiful?

Sinners the last pleadings of mercy's voice sounds out to you lingeringly. O, I beseech you, hear, heed, obey, ere the storm of God's wrath bursts on your defenseless heads with its destroying fury. Wealth, splendid fire proof mansions, and worldly honor cannot shield you then; neither will rocks and mountains hide you, but you must fall before the blazing light of God's eyes fall to rise no more. Will you perish? Rush to ruin over the blood and body of Christ? God, Christ, angels and all good people are earnest for your salvation. All evil spirits and wicked men are working for your ruin and condemnation. Choose ye. Be in earnest. Now is God's time, to-morrow, by and by, the Devils. One and all hear! hear! "Behold I come quickly, and my reward is with me to give to every man according as his work shall be." "Be ye also ready." Toil on weary ones, the darkness is fleeting, before the near resplendent glory of our new earth home.

Oh! the bliss of life eternal;
  Oh! the long unbroken rest,
In the golden fields of pleasure,
  In the regions of the blessed:
But to see our dear Redeemer,
  And before his throne to fall;
There to hear his gracious welcome,
  Will be sweeter far than all.

How God Provides for His Children.

Some years ago, and before my residence was in the city of New York, a clergyman in very trying circumstances, was living near me. His case was much like that of John Rogers, the martyr, for he had a wife and nine small children, and though not going to the stake, he was passing through a furnace of affliction more severe than the fagot and flame. Poverty with children is grevious to be borne, for it takes a greater amount of grace or philosophy to be contented and poor with nine hungry children, than without. A moderate measure of faith and patience will keep one up, with a wife to help and no children to suffer and wring his heart. That was divine and beautiful love that dictated the Savior's remark; (Mat. 24: 19, 20.) The misery of the sufferers would be mightily augmented if they were mothers.

He was not a pastor but was in the employ of an institution that allowed him a salary just large enough to starve upon. He broke down in health. No wonder he did. As the future stared him in the face and the present was sad and bad enough, he fell sick and was laid aside. This state of things came to my knowledge through the children, who were daily hungry and came for food where they always got what they needed. For months together the butcher supplied them with meat charged it to—some one else. By and by the case of the good man became desperate, and it was thought a surgical operation might save his life. Money was raised by a few friends to employ an eminent city surgeon to come out and perform the operation. He came and the good man died under his hands.

A more pitiable sight was never before me, than the widow and this helpless brood of children by the side of the cot on which the dead husband and father lay. I was with them vainly offering words of consolation, at last with more frankness than tenderness I said to her, "You will be better provided for than if he had lived." This was to her as incredable as the angel's prophecy to Abraham at which his wife laughed.

As the procession was walking with his remains to the graveyard, a word of invitation was passed along to the clergy, of whom many were in attendance, asking them to meet at the close of the services. Then the state of the family was laid before them, and a committee was appointed to devise ways and means for their relief. In a few days three boarding schools freely opened their doors to receive the elder children; a house was provided for the widow and little ones; they were well cared for, and before the year was out, a handsome sum of money was invested for their permanent aid. Years rolled away. One day a handsomely dressed lady called upon me and introduced herself as the eldest daughter of this family, and the wife of a flourishing and honored citizen. She told me of the others; all had prospered; all were well educated, not one had gone to the bad. They were doing well, and the mother lived with one and another of them, finding a welcome home, and every comfort, with any one of her children. Afterward I met the eldest daughter and her husband in Paris, useful, prosperous and happy.

The man of Uz was happy when he could say, "The blessing of him that was ready to perish came upon me, and I caused the widow's heart to sing for joy." So God provides. He gives to one and another of his children, not to all alike, but they are of one family, and whoso seeth his brother have need and shutteth up his purse-strings against him, the love of the Father dwelleth not with him.

And so God giveth his beloved rest.
—Irenæus, in the N. Y. Observer.

Faith.

I am sure I can never forget it. This act of faith was done so simply, heartily, immediately, in this case, that ever since, the incident has fastened itself in my memory as one of the clearest illustrations of the way of salvation by simple faith. It was one night at our inquiry meeting. I was waiting by a man to help him if I might.

Said he, "I know I am a sinner. I feel the burden of my sin. I want to be a Christian, but I don't know how to be. I am like a man feeling around in the dark. I don't know where to step."

Said I, "Do you believe that the Lord Jesus tells you the truth, and will never deceive you?"

"Certainly I do," he answered. "I haven't the slightest doubt about that."

"You are absolutely sure," I asked again, "that the Lord Jesus cannot lie?"

"Absolutely sure," he said.

"Well now," I replied, "since you are so certain that Christ never can deceive you, why don't you take him exactly at his word? He tells you this word any way, 'Him that cometh to me I will in no wise cast out.' Now coming is just the yielding up of your sin, forsaking it, and consecrating your soul to him. Don't you suppose that if you do your part of it, it is perfectly certain that Christ will do his part—receive you—never cast you out?"

"I think it must be so," he answered.

"Well, now," I asked again, "as far as you know yourself, do you thus come?"

He waited a minute, and then said solemnly, "As far as I know myself, I do."

"Can you not then," I answered, "just believe that promise, let your faith fasten on that word as a word for you, 'I will in no wise cast out?' "

There was absolute stillness for a moment, then the man looked up suddenly and exclaimed, "Why, is that all?"

"That is all," I answered.

"Why," said he slowly, as if speaking to himself, "Then—I think—I must be—a Christian."

"My brother you are a Christian," I answered joyfully. And so it was that he was saved by faith. He just took hold of the Word of Christ and trusted it.

As some one else said about himself, "He just lay down on the promises," and that is faith.

Can we not all do that and thus be saved?—Christian Weekly.

Work for Every Christian.

What our churches most need (next to the baptism of the Holy Ghost) is the development of all the members. So much is thrown on the ministry that some of us can hardly catch a spare hour for our own family and fireside. The Spurgeons and John Halls and Guthries are being ground to death by over work. A city pastor is often expected to prepare three sermons or lectures, to visit the flock, to see the sick, to bury the dead, and to act on a dozen committees, and to make two or three speeches all in a single week! The church becomes Dr. Tyng's church or Mr. Beecher's church, or Dr. Crosby's church, or some other man's church—instead of being the people's church with some gifted man as its overseer and pastor.

Now I love to work exceedingly; but not one whit more than I love to see my congregation work. And no man in my flock has any more right to turn his spiritual work over to me, than he has a right to send me to market for him. He needs his work as much as I need mine. In revival times the whole church is alive and busy. But where and when did the Master ever give a "furlough" to threefourths of our people to quit the ranks just as soon as a revival campaign is over?

A Christian who is keen for work will soon find his place. If he is "apt to teach," he or she will soon gather the Sabbath school class, and will be there, Bible in hand, every Sunday, even though the rain is spattering on on the pavements. Commend me to the teacher who wears a "water-proof" and always consults conscience sooner than the barometer!

Whoever has the gift of song should join God's great choir, and sing at every religious service. The owner of a good voice must give account for that voice at the day of judgment. We never shall have genuine congregational singing until every redeemed child of Christ sings from duty, and consecrates the gifts of music to the Lord. Those who expect to sing in heaven had better practice here.

Tract distribution is going too much out of fashion. It is a heavenly honored agency for doing good. Every one who has some spare time and a tongue and a little pious tact, can go out with a bundle of tracts to the abodes of ignorance and irreligion.

Those who cannot exhort, or teach in a Sunday school, or distribute tracts can at least live for Jesus at home and come and join in the prayers of the prayermeeting. The oldest, the timidest, the least gifted can do surely as much as this. Every one, too, can give something when the contribution box is passed. Every one whom Jesus saves has a place assigned to him in the vineyard.

Friend! have you found your place?

Correspondence.

From I. Boutell, Chelsea, Mass.

DEAR OLD ADVENT TIMES: We wish thee prosperity in boldly speaking the truth as it is in Jesus—that truth adapted to arouse the people and apprize them of the perils as they are thickening around us.

Let the voice of warning be made emphatic. The Lord is coming! The sickle must soon be put in; the harvest of the earth is ripe. The tares and wheat grow together till the harvest; and the harvest is the end of the world. The harvest gathers and disposes of both crops; all done before we reach another age. That age will commence with new heavens and a new earth. We find the end of perdition the last end in this age. Peter's unquenchable fire is in the age that now is, and when past every creature which is in heaven and on earth are heard swelling the heavenly chorus saying, "Glory and honor and power be unto him that sitteth upon the throne, and unto the Lamb forever and ever!"

No work for the devil here; he has done all his wicked work this side of the fiery ordeal! That puts an everlasting stop to his going about seeking whom he may devour.

Some of our best brethren see this literal old destroyer in the 20th of Revelations; but I see nothing but a symbolic dragon, devil, and Satan there, which represents wicked governments, and all of which are to be destroyed by the brightness of Christ's coming. How glorious, how blessed that Christ makes clean work at his appearing!

Not an intimation can I find in the Bible that that old liar from the beginning, the prince and power of the air, the one to resist steadfast in the faith, is to be bound even for a week till Jesus comes, then his destruction is sure. Amen! The seventh angel sounds: The final blow is struck! The kingdoms of this world have become the kingdom of our Lord and his Christ and he shall reign forever and ever, "and the time of the dead that they should be judged." "The hour is come in the which all that are in the graves shall hear his voice and come forth." "And all whose names are not written in the Book of Life are cast into the lake of fire; this is the second death.' This brings us to our long-sought-for rest! Now comes the eternal age of glory—the age of life and immortality! The age of rest that remains for the people of God!

From E. N. Bliss, Kansas.

I thought it might be interesting to the dear friends to learn what the Lord has done since I came here. I have been into four counties and held meetings. At West Creek I organized a church of eleven members, two others that are to be baptized will join us. There has been much opposition to us from the churches, but the truth has triumphed, thank God, and the little band is doing quite well.

March 1 I went to Athens, taking with me Br. Thorp, (whose heart is warm in the work) to hold a series of meetings. I there found six dear ones looking for the coming of Jesus who had been praying that the Lord would send some one to preach to them the blessed truths of the Bible. So God had opened the way for us to work, and we entered at once upon it, though weary and foot-sore from near a two days' walk to get there. We commenced our meetings the night of the great storm. In returning we lost our way, and had many fears that we should be left out all night, and, if so, we must have slept the sleep that knows no waking till Jesus comes. But thank God, we reached home at last, and could not help thinking how good it will be when we all reach our final home in the kingdom! Thank God, if we are faithful, we shall soon be there.

We soon had fruit of our meeting, and the good work continued until eighteen had been baptized and a church organized of twenty-nine members. Twenty three of them were direct from Satan's ranks, and some of them noted as the most wicked in the place. The good work was still going on when we left, as we were compelled to leave on account of other engagements.

I have been in many revival meetings, but in none so still and quiet and deeply interesting as this. There was a young man at our meeting from the Christian church who warned the people to beware of us, for, said he, their doctrines are dangerous. Two of his sisters becoming interested in the meetings, he openly admonished them to be careful. But, notwithstanding this they both joined our little church, and, what is still more surprising, he himself since has, and is now, the clerk of it! It was indeed a most blessed meeting. We expect to return soon, and see others put on Christ in baptism. But here, as elsewhere, we met with considerable opposition.

May God bless you all at the office. I thank you for the extra papers sent. They have gone on their errands of mercy to the poor.

From Elizabeth Holgate, Buchanan, Mich.

I have for some time been thinking that I would like to write a few lines to the brethren and sisters scattered abroad. I am glad to say that the church in Buchanan is still alive and prospering in the Lord. Some have been added to our number, such as I trust may be saved in the day of the Lord Jesus. We, as a church, have passed through very great trials, but a noble band has stood side by side and the ark has moved steadily on. Blessed be God who has been our refuge and a very present help in time of trouble. I believe we all feel truly thankful that, in the providence of God, he has sent us an under-shepherd, Br. Mathewson, who goes in and out before us in all faithfulness and fidelity, breaking unto us the Bread of Life, and letting his light shine before those who say, "Where is the promise of his coming"? Dear brethren and sisters, do we not all feel that we are passing through a waste, howling wilderness? We have trials and temptations to endure, but Jesus, our great High Priest, hath been tempted in all points like as we are yet without sin, so we may boldly say he is our Helper. Then let us lift up our heads and rejoice, knowing that our redemption draweth nigh. I do believe that very soon Jesus will come with the voice of the archangel and the trump of God! Then the elements will melt with fervent heat: the earth and the works that are therein shall be burned up; then seeing that we look for such things what manner of persons ought we to be in all holy conversation and godliness!" Then let us set the Lord always before our face so that we shall not be moved away from the faith and that glorious hope that when "he who is our life shall appear, we also may appear with him in glory."

What I Heard.—No. 3.

BY P. W. HOUGH.

A minister attending the funeral of a child chose for his text: "Suffer little children to come unto me for of such is the kingdom of heaven."

He made some appropriate remarks about their relation to life, as being helpless and harmless, and their relation to God as innocent, and therefore entitled to God's kingdom in heaven; but, said he, they are the ones that Jesus pronounced a blessing upon when he said "Blessed are the meek for they shall inherit the earth." (Mat. 5: 5.) "Where," said he, "can we find any so meek as children? Therefore they inherit the earth now, and, when they die, they are received into the kingdom of heaven."

I thought this application of Scripture rather novel, and would give the Christian an opportunity to see how far worldly-wise men can be blinded, and walk and talk as blind men. I concluded it was an additional evidence to us of the last days; and yet many love to believe such things, and in consequence thereof turn their ears away from the truth and live upon fables! When I hear such things it makes me very thankful that I ever learned the truth as it is in Jesus; very thankful that I love it above all earthly treasures. May I always honor it. Let us all cling fast to the promise—"soon we shall reap if we faint not."

Worldliness in the Church.

The following timely article appears as an editorial in a recent issue of the Methodist Home Journal. The reference to Paul's prediction in 2 Tim. 3: 1–5 is undoubtedly to the point: "This know also, that in the last days perilous times shall come: for men shall be lovers of their own selves....lovers of pleasure more than lovers of God; having a form of godliness, but denying the power thereof." The "last days" here are explained by Fausset, in the "Critical Commentary" recently published, as meaning those "preceding Christ's second coming: 'the latter times' (1 Tim. 4: 1) refer to a period not so remote as 'the last days'—viz. the long mediæval times of Papal and Greek antichristianity." And Dean Alford says "the period referred to here is, from all New Testament analogy (compare 2 Pet. 3: 3; Jude 18) that immediately "preceding the coming of the Lord." If this be true and the statements of the Home Journal are correct, it is high time the editor of that weekly often and earnestly called the attention of his readers to their proximity to the second coming of our Lord Jesus Christ. We would commend to his attention Ezek. 33: 1–9; Mat. 24: 45–51. Here is the article referred to:

"The days foretold by the Holy Ghost, when men should be lovers of pleasure more than lovers of God, have come. It has taken possession of almost the entire Christian church, and has so far negatived the Sabbath and week day instruction of the clergy that they are overwhelmed with the gigantic evil that confronts them. Now when they see and measure its strength they know not what to do with it. It is not the private members alone, who are guilty, but elders, stewards, trustees, and class-leaders. If a pastor preaches to the young against dancing he is, as an eminent minister in New York recently remarked, 'wasting his ammunition on too small game.' The children dance because their parents encourage them both by precept and example. If the minister speaks against billiards, he denounces that which many professing Christians have in their houses, and which they believe to be an innocent amusement. So also of chess, checkers, backgammon, and a host of other social amusements. The progress of the Bible is impeded by these influences wherever they exist. The clergy are divided on the relative degrees of moral guilt or innocence of these several forms of pleasure and pastime, and hence, they fear to get into a snarl, not only with their congregations, but with one another. Still they seem extremely anxious in many cases, by some means or other, to overcome the worldly spirit in their churches and congregations. But how to do this without painful conflicts and divisions, they know not.

"The fact is, the church is too materialistic in its tendencies. When a church is to be built the question asked is, Where can we find a favorable location?—not with a view of doing the most good possible, but of reaching the wealthiest and most respectable people, be they few or many: and for this purpose, from a quarter to half a million dollars is expended in the erection of the building.

"In the selection of a minister, the material basis crops out everywhere. He is not measured by the purity of his heart and life, and by his success in winning souls to Christ, but by the number of wealthy hearers he can attract by his oratory, and his ability to hold, without offending those who are attracted. His salary is made to depend upon his success in these particulars. Too frequently the ministers themselves take this view of their own calling, and the 'one thing needful,' with too many of them, we fear, is their salaries.

"It then becomes a question of dollars and cents between the pulpits and pews. If the minister preaches against the worldliness of the churches, however that worldliness may be manifested, he will set some pew-holder against him—thereby his receipts fall off, or murmurs of dissatisfaction are heard. How or in what way these evils are to be remedied, is perhaps unsolved. We can only say to the readers of the Home Journal—wash your hands from every form of pollution now staining the church and threatening its destruction. It were better to die than to sin. Be willing, if necessary, to be singular for Christ's sake. We entreat you, be not conformed to the world in appearance or spirit. If you love Jesus, keep his commandments; and as you love your own souls, keep yourselves unspotted from the world."

Good-by.

It is a hard word to speak. Some may laugh that it should be, but let them laugh. Icy hearts are never kind. It is a word that has choked many an utterance, and started many a tear. The hand is clasped, the word spoken, we part, and are upon the ocean of time—we go to meet again, God only knows where. It may be soon; it may be never. Take care that your good-by be not a cold one—it may be the last one that you can give. Ere you meet your friend again, death's cold hand may have closed his eyes and hushed his lips forever. Ah! he may have died thinking you loved him not.

Again it may be a very long separation. Friends crowd around and give their hand. How do you detect in each good-by the love that lingers there; and how do you bear away with you the memory of those parting words many, many days? We must often separate. Tear not yourself away with a careless boldness that defies all love, but make your last words linger—give the heart its full utterance—and if tears fall, what of it? Tears are not unmanly.—Musical Million.

Russia to take Constantinople.

The idea of the conquest of European Turkey by Russia, and the seizure of Constantinople as the southern capital of the Russian empire, an event which now seems so near, and which is to furnish so startling a fulfillment of prophecy, is no conception of modern times. The following remarkable language on this point is found in Gibbon's Decline and Fall of the Roman Empire, Vol. v., p, 431. Speaking of fleets of the Russian ships that used to descend their rivers from high northern latitudes, into the Black Sea, and visit Constantinople, he says:

"The memory of these arctic fleets that seemed to descend from the polar circle, left a deep impression of terror on the imperial city. By the vulgar of every rank, it was asserted and believed that an equestrian statue in the square of Taurus was secretly inscribed with a prophecy, how the Russians, in the last days, should become masters of Constantinople. In our own time, a Russian armament, instead of sailing from the Borysthenes [now the river Dnieper], has circumnavigated the continent of Europe; and the Turkish capital has been threatened by a squadron of strong and lofty ships of war, each of which, with its naval science and thundering artillery, could have sunk or scattered a hundred canoes, such as those of their ancestors. Perhaps the present generation may yet behold the accomplish ment of the prediction, of a rare prediction, of which the style is unambiguous and the date unquestionable."

HOLD on to the truth, for it will serve you well and do good throughout eternity.

PRIZE the privilege of learning God's word, and hear with meekness, with prayer and attention.

Our Young Folks.

The Darkened Nursery.

There's room enough in the nursery now;
'Twas crowded a little before;
For when the crib in the corner sat
The rockers came close to the door;
But the light was sweet and the air was soft,
And the room was filled with cheer;
For we were charmed to the chosen spot
By the voice of the baby dear.

Where is the sunshine?
Where is the noise?
Where are the playthings gone?
What shall I do with my empty arms?
Sitting alone, alone!
What shall I do with the vacant crib?
Where shall I set his chair?
Must the little one's clothes come down?
O, let me leave them there!

Fold the little garments,
Lay them softly by;
Put away the playthings,
Check the choking sigh.

Turn thee to thy duties,
Take up life again,
Newly consecrated
By this precious pain.

Work—thy face full heavenward;
Give thy life to God:
His sweet peace shall keep thee,
If thou "kiss the rod."

A True Story.

BY JOHN W. CHADWICK.

"Greater love hath no man than this."

From a home that had two darlings
One was called and went away—
Baby Ralph; and little Willie
Missed him sorely at his play.
As one day we talked about him,
Wondering much where he had gone,
Wishing much he would not tarry,
Brother Willie was so lone—

Said the mother, so beguiling
Something of her secret pain,
"What would Willie give if only
Baby Ralph could come again?"

Drooped the little head in silence,
Thinking hard, 'twas plain to see;
Then he spoke out, strong and tender,
"Mamma, I would give God me."

A Chickens Story.

The first recollection I have of myself, I was shut up in a little dark prison-house. I didn't like it, and I pecked very hard at the walls, and somehow, I hardly know just how, by-and-by found myself free. I soon discovered that I was a very queer little fellow, with two nice legs, and two really elegant little wings. I had a very sharp little bill, too, and such cunning little feathers all over me. That was all I made out distinctly, though I nearly broke my neck and quite lost my balance trying to see what was on the top of my head. I didn't find out—never have seen it in fact—but I know there's something there.

I had five little brothers and sisters, and such a nice warm mother! I do wish you were acquainted with my mother; I am sure you would say you had never seen such a cosy little mother as she is. Two of my brothers were black, and one was white. I had a little yellow sister, and a speckled one, and I am sure I don't know what color I was; but my mother called me "Topknot." How we used to run around in the nice dirt, and under the leaves and bushes! And didn't our mother scratch for us! How she would find the worms and bugs and the little seeds for us! When she called, "Come quick, come quick," how we would all scamper! Jet was a greedy little fellow, and got more than his share; but our mother was an industrious old hen, and none of us went hungry.

Every night she cuddled us under her dear warm wings, and she wasn't at all afraid. But it was only a fence corner where we slept, and one night a rat, or something dreadful, I don't know what, came and most frightened us into spasms. He actually did carry off my little screaming brother Jet, though my poor mother lost every one of her tail feathers in our defense. But Jet was a most awful greedy chicken! Mother said we must sleep in the hen house after that. I am now a very fine chicken—can scratch for myself pretty well, and in many ways make myself useful to the family; but I shall never forget that dreadful night.—Sel.

Doing God's Errands.

Hester loved to do errands for her mother, and have her call her a faithful servant when she did them well. One day she had been talking with her mother about God, when she quickly raised her head with a bright thought in her eyes, and said, "Why, mother then God is sending us on errands all the time! I am his little errand girl, too."

"Yes, dear, he has given us errands to do, and plenty of time to do them, and a book written full to show them how. Every day we can tell him how we try to do them, and ask him to help us, so when he calls us, we will run to meet him, and give him our account."

"I like that," the child said, nestling back to her comfortable seat, "I like to be God's little errand girl."

"One of my errands is to take care of you," said her mother.

"And one of mine, to honor and obey you," said Hester quickly. "I think he gives us very pleasant errands to do."—Child's World.

"The memory of these arctic fleets that seemed to descend from the polar circle, left a deep impression of terror on the imperial city. By the vulgar af every rank, it was asserted and believed that an equestrian statue in the square of Taurus was secretly inscribed with a prophecy, how the Russians, in the last days, should become masters of Constantinople. In our own time, a Russian armament, instead of sailing from the Borysthenes [now the river Dnieper], has circumnavigated the continent of Europe; and the Turkish capital has been threatened by a squadron of strong and lofty ships of war, each of which, with its naval science and thundering artillery, could have sunk or scattered a hundred canoes, such as those of their ancestors. Perhaps the present generation may yet behold the accomplish ment of the prediction, of a rare prediction, of which the style is unambiguous and the date unquestionable."

HOLD on to the truth, for it will serve you well and do good throughout eternity.

PRIZE the privilege of learning God's word, and hear with meekness, with prayer and attention.

Our Young Folks.

The Darkened Nursery.

There's room enough in the nursery now;
'Twas crowded a little before;
For when the crib in the corner sat
The rockers came close to the door;
But the light was sweet and the air was soft,
And the room was filled with cheer;
For we were charmed to the chosen spot
By the voice of the baby dear.

Where is the sunshine?
Where is the noise?
Where are the playthings gone?
What shall I do with my empty arms?
Sitting alone, alone!
What shall I do with the vacant crib?
Where shall I set his chair?
Must the little one's clothes come down?
O, let me leave them there!

Fold the little garments,
Lay them softly by,
Put away the playthings,
Check the choking sigh.

Turn thee to thy duties,
Take up life again,
Newly consecrated
By this precious pain.

Work—thy face full heavenward;
Give thy life to God:
His sweet peace shall keep thee,
If thou "kiss the rod."

A True Story.

BY JOHN W. CHADWICK.

"Greater love hath no man than this."

From a home that had two darlings
One was called and went away—
Baby Ralph; and little Willie
Missed him sorely at his play.
As one day we talked about him,
Wondering much where he had gone,
Wishing much he would not tarry,
Brother Willie was so lone—

Said the mother, so beguiling
Something of her secret pain,
"What would Willie give if only
Baby Ralph could come again?"

Drooped the little head in silence,
Thinking hard, 'twas plain to see;
Then he spoke out, strong and tender,
"Mamma, I would give God me."

A Chickens Story.

The first recollection I have of myself, I was shut up in a little dark prison-house. I didn't like it, and I pecked very hard at the walls, and somehow, I hardly know just how, by-and-by found myself free. I soon discovered that I was a very queer little fellow, with two nice legs, and two really elegant little wings. I had a very sharp little bill, too, and such cunning little feathers all over me. That was all I made out distinctly, though I nearly broke my neck and quite lost my balance trying to see what was on the top of my head. I didn't find out—never have seen it in fact—but I know there's something there.

I had five little brothers and sisters, and such a nice warm mother! I do wish you were acquainted with my mother; I am sure you would say you had never seen such a cosy little mother as she is. Two of my brothers were black, and one was white. I had a little yellow sister, and a speckled one, and I am sure I don't know what color I was; but my mother called me "Topknot." How we used to run around in the nice dirt, and under the leaves and bushes! And didn't our mother scratch for us! How she would find the worms and bugs and the little seeds for us! When she called, "Come quick, come quick," how we would all scamper! Jet was a greedy little fellow, and got more than his share; but our mother was an industrious old hen, and none of us went hungry.

Every night she cuddled us under her dear warm wings, and she wasn't at all afraid. But it was only a fence corner where we slept, and one night a rat, or something dreadful, I don't know what, came and most frightened us into spasms. He actually did carry off my little screaming brother Jet, though my poor mother lost every one of her tail feathers in our defense. But Jet was a most awful greedy chicken! Mother said we must sleep in the hen house after that. I am now a very fine chicken—can scratch for myself pretty well, and in many ways make myself useful to the family; but I shall never forget that dreadful night.—Sel.

Doing God's Errands.

Hester loved to do errands for her mother, and have her call her a faithful servant when she did them well. One day she had been talking with her mother about God, when she quickly raised her head with a bright thought in her eyes, and said, "Why, mother then God is sending us on errands all the time! I am his little errand girl, too."

"Yes, dear, he has given us errands to do, and plenty of time to do them, and a book written full to show them how. Every day we can tell him how we try to do them, and ask him to help us, so when he calls us, we will run to meet him, and give him our account."

"I like that," the child said, nestling back to her comfortable seat, "I like to be God's little errand girl."

"One of my errands is to take care of you," said her mother.

"And one of mine, to honor and obey you," said Hester quickly. "I think he gives us very pleasant errands to do."—Child's World.

INTER-OCEAN.

THE REPUBLICAN NEWSPAPER For 1873.

Encouraged by the favor with which the INTER-OCEAN has been received, the proprietor has enlarged it to a Ten Column Folio Paper,

Forty Large Columns reading matter.

In the future, as in the past, the INTER OCEAN will continue the staunch advocate of the principles of the Republican party. During the political campaign just closed it won position as the

LEADING REPUBLICAN NEWSPAPER

In The Northwest.

And this position it will endeavor to maintain.

The INTER OCEAN will continue to be the Organ of the People in the largest sense of the word: insisting upon the preservation of the rights of many as against the few. To this end it will maintain an unceasing warfare against the abuse and extortions of all chartered monopolies; not attempting to destroy the just rights of any, but determined to bring every special privilege granted by legislative act under control of the power that granted it, believing that the public conscience is the true court of final resort in all questions affecting the relations of corporations and the people.

In Literature, General News, Foreign and Domestic Correspondence, Local Matters, and all that goes to make up a first class

Commercial and Family Newspaper

It does not intend to be excelled by any publication in the country.

The Commercial Department

Will be conducted with great care, and everything possible will be done to make the MARKET REPORTS such as the Farmers and Business men of the Northwest can RELY UPON.

The Agricultural Department

Will be edited by a gentleman of experience and ability.

The religious and moral character will be guarded with especial care, and nothing will be admitted into its columns, either as advertisement or reading, improper for the family circle.

The Daily Inter-Ocean

Obituary.

OLMSTED—Died in Cherokee, Iowa, April 10, Jessie H. wife of H. A. Olmsted. Aged 21 years.

She sleeps in Jesus. A husband and tender babe, parents, sisters and kindred are left to mourn. So sudden and unexpected was the death of my precious wife, that it seems as though only my hope in Jesus could have sustained me in that dark hour. Three days of suffering and she was gone. She gave her heart to Jesus some six years ago, and has ever remained firm in her devotion to him. Known only to be loved for her unselfish, cheerful, and hopeful ways, she was happy in life and resigned in the hours of death. In an hour of ease she talked calmly of the hope of the glories to be revealed by the soon coming of Jesus. This and kindred truths she had studied within the last year and had come to cherish. Just starting in this life's work together, our prospects seemed all bright; but how suddenly changed! May we be enabled to so live and trust as to share with her the gift of eternal life when the Savior comes to gather his saints into the kingdom where tears and partings will never come.

H. A. OLMSTED.

WISTROM—Died in Appleton, Wis., April 21, 1873, Gertrude, wife of M. F. Wistrom. Aged 42 years.

She had been in ill health two or three years, which finally resulted in dropsy, of which she died. She leaves a husband, three sons, and one daughter, whom I trust will follow the precepts and example of the departed one.

Sister Wistrom with her husband were some fifteen years since members of the M. E. Church, in Buffalo, N. Y. About ten years since, they embraced the Advent faith, in which faith she fell asleep in Jesus. The writer has enjoyed her society in prayer meetings at her house for a year or more, and expects to meet her, when Paul's crown shall be given him.

Michigan State Campmeeting.

As the time is drawing near for our State Campmeeting, I would say in behalf of the Committee that due arrangements will be made in season and particulars published. Let all the friends of the cause prepare to turn out to the yearly meeting.

The meeting will probably be on the line of the Ft. Wayne, Jackson and Saginaw Railroad, north of of Jonesville. If any church not more than thirty miles from Jackson, wants the meeting at their place, write me at once, at Alganse, Branch Co., Michigan, and we will consider your place in comparison with our present site.

ALICE E. RATHBUN.

The next Q. M. Conference of the DeKalb District, will be held with the church at Genoa, commencing May 23, and continue over the Sabbath.

Those coming by rail will please inform me by letter, and I will arrange to meet them at Sycamore. All are invited. We hope to have a good and profitable meeting.

E. H. BURLINGTON, Sec'y.

The "Union" Chapel, recently erected seven miles east of Anna Station, Union county, will be dedicated on the fourth Sunday in May, which will be the 24th. let the brethren from Southern Illinois rally once more, to partake of a rich feast of the Lord. Let the Equality church, especially, send a full delegation.

At that meeting it is proposed to revive our conference and work with a will for the cause of truth. Come, brethren and sisters, let us lay aside secular labor and attend to the Lord's work.

Our State Campmeeting will be held at Merrimack, Sauk county, beginning Sunday, June 1, holding over two Sundays. Tents will be put up on the Saturday preceding. Let us have such a rally as Wisconsin has never witnessed before.

In addition to the big tent, which we have had on former occasions, Br. Hough will bring his large tent, in which special meetings can be held.

Merrimack is on the Northwestern R. R., (Madison division), and only ten miles from Sauk, where our meetings have been held for several years past.

Br. L. C. Collins will be with us, and it is probable that Br. Grant, on his return from California, will also be present to help us, besides several other preachers from other states have signified their intentions to come and enjoy the feast with us. We hope for a meeting that will be full of Gospel light and salvation. Let all come to work for God.

O. S. Knapp, T. Barker, P. W. Hough, E. P. Graves, Wm. Sheldon, Committee.

The Annual Conference will hold a session in connection with the State Campmeeting, at Merrimack, Sauk county, which begins June 1. Let all the churches send delegates, or report by letter, and let all ministers who cannot be present send letters to the secretary.

The first meeting will probably be held on Wednesday morning, June 4, so as to finish up business in time to give all a full chance to enjoy the campmeeting. WM. SHELDON, Sec'y.

The annual meeting of the Iowa Christian Conference will be held in connection with the campmeeting at New Hartford, Butler county, commencing June 11, 1873. Our constitution requires that all ministers report either in person or by letter, and we hope to see a general attendance as there will be some important business to attend to in which we are all interested.

ALONZO RAYMOND, Pres.
N. F. EGGLESTON, Sec'y.

The Iowa Christian Mission Campmeeting will be held at New Hartford, Butler county, to commence June 6 and continue over two Sabbaths. Come one and all in the spirit of Christ to labor for him and to save men. Bring your friends and children; leave your hobby horse at home as we have neither room nor food for such animals. If you come on R. R. take the train that arrives about noon from the east and west. There will be no teams waiting for night trains. Should any come at night they will go north from the depot till the bridge is passed then turn to the right hand.

The mission tent will be on the ground as usual, and a number of family tents, also a 50 foot tent for the accommodation of those who do not come provided.

Bring bedding, also sheets to be used as curtains. Tent poles, straw, and hay will be furnished. Free tent lots, occupied last year, will not be reserved longer than Wednesday morning so those who wish them must come in time or notify us. We look for a large attendance, and the Lord Jesus Christ to be with us to bless the preaching of the Word.

M. A. NEWCOMB, Sec'y.

The Q. M. of the First District of S. W. Iowa is to be held at Greenfield, Adair Co., commencing Friday eve., May 30, and hold over the following Sunday, June 1. WM. MORPHY, Sec'y.

The second Q. M. of the A. C. C., of Iowa, Manchester District, will be holden with the church at Manchester, Delaware Co., Iowa, commencing Friday eve., June 6, continuing over the Sabbath.

Important business will come before this meeting. The tent season is upon us, and so is the Ministerial Conference, or meeting of the Association at Norwood Park. All these must be attended to. Brethren, in the name of the God of Israel, will you see to this meeting, and do it now? Let every man, woman, and child within the boundary of this conference prepare to come to this meeting. Especially let the ministers be there. Come, brethren with the spirit of Jesus to labor. God will bless us, if we do his will.

Swedenborgianism and the Lord's Coming.

[First Article.]

Our attention has recently been called to "An Appeal in behalf of the Views of the Eternal World and State, and the doctrines of Faith and Life, held by the body of Christians who believe that a New Church is signified (Rev. 21) by the New Jerusalem, etc.," by Samuel Noble, late minister of the New Jerusalem church. This work is published by the "New Church Missionary and Tract Society," as a complete vindication of their doctrines, and is, I suppose, the best defence the ingenious and able author could make.

Any one familiar with theology knows that a great variety of opinions, some adverse and contradictory, claim to be sanctioned by the Holy Scriptures; and are plausibly set forth, by their respective authors and advocates, as the veritable teachings of God's Word. But as Satan himself is transformed into an angel of light, and his "ministers also are transformed as the ministers of righteousness," so the falsities they teach may, by a mystical system of exegesis, put on the appearance of truth. Hence John says, "Beloved, believe not every spirit, but try the spirits whether they are of God; because many false prophets are gone out into the world." (1 John 4: 1.) In his Word God has given us a standard of truth by which to try all things and by it I propose to try the claims advanced in this book in reference to Swedenborg and his writings.

These claims are, that Emanuel Swedenborg was just as much divinely commissioned as was John the Baptist; and that his writings are as diversely authoritative as are those of Paul the apostle. The grounds advanced for these claims occupy about one hundred pages of this large-sized duodecimo, but are as unsatisfactory as they are labored. In the first place, a fancied correspondence is instituted between John the Baptist, as the herald of Christ's first advent, and Emanuel Swedenborg, as the herald of his supposed second advent. But this is altogether a conceit of the author, for there is really no parallel between them. The divine mission of John the Baptist was certified in a most remarkable manner.

He was the subject of prophecy. Isaiah spake of him as "The voice of one crying the wilderness, Prepare ye the way of the Lord, make his paths straight." (Is. 40: 3.) And by Malachi the Lord said, "Behold I send my messenger before thy face, which shall prepare thy way before thee." (Mal. 3: 1.)

His birth was the subject of angelic announcement. His parents were both well stricken in years, so that his birth was of an extraordinary character, and attended with extraordinary circumstances. An angel appeared to Zacharias, his father, in the temple, and said, "Thy wife Elizabeth shall bear thee a son, and thou shalt call his name John: and thou shalt have joy and gladness, and many shall rejoice at his birth. For he shall be great in the sight of the Lord, and shall drink neither wine nor strong drink; and he shall be filled with the Holy Spirit, even from his mother's womb. And many of the children of Israel shall he turn to the Lord their God. And he shall go before him in the spirit and power of Elias, to turn the hearts of the fathers to the children, and the disobedient to the wisdom of the just, to make ready a people prepared for the Lord." (Lk. 1:13-17.) And Zacharias for doubting this announcement was struck dumb and so continued until the birth of John, so that the people said, "What manner of child shall this be"? The circumstances indicated that he was to be a special messenger of the Lord of Hosts.

The training of John was in accordance with the directions of the angel; and he "grew and waxed strong in spirit, and was in the deserts till the day of his showing unto Israel," when he began his ministry under a special divine commission, to which he alludes in John 1: 33. "He that sent me to baptize said unto me, Upon whom thou shalt see Spirit descending and remaining, the same is he that baptizeth with the Holy Spirit." John was the Elias of the Israelitish national covenant as Jesus also testified saying, "If ye will receive him, this is Elias which was for to come." (Mat. 11: 14.) His work was to call the people to repentance, and take a part in the consecration of Christ to the priesthood. He had no new truths to reveal, and "he did no miracle."

In the case of Emanuel Swedenborg no such evidences of divine appointment are found. There was no prophecy respecting him. There was nothing extraordinary in the circumstances of his birth. It was not announced by an angel. He was not trained under any special divine direction; nor was his pretended commission certified by any accredited messenger of God. Evidence of John's divine appointment and ordination is abundantly sufficient to satisfy any candid mind. In the case of Emanuel Swedenborg it is entirely wanting. As to the coincidents that neither did any miracle, and that their fathers were ecclesiastics, they prove nothing, for there are thousands of persons on the same level.

In the second place, in regard to the Apostle Paul, there are evidences of his having been divinely called and ordained to the apostleship.

He was at first a blasphemer of the name of Jesus and a bitter persecutor of the Christians. And when on his way from Jerusalem to Damascus, breathing out slaughter against all who believed in Jesus, he was, by a special and extraordinary interposition of Providence, arrested in his mad career. When not far from Damascus, at noonday, a light above the brightness of the sun, shone around him and them that were with him. And when they were all fallen to the earth a voice spoke to him saying, Saul, Saul, why persecutest thou me. And he said, Who art thou, Lord? And it answered, I am Jesus whom thou persecutest; but rise and stand upon thy feet; for I have appeared unto thee for this purpose, to make thee a minister and a witness, both of the things which thou hast seen, and of those things which will appear unto thee; delivering thee from the people and from the Gentiles, unto whom now I send thee, to open their eyes, and to turn them from darkness to light, and from the power of Satan unto God, etc. And he was told to go into Damascus, where he should receive further instruction. Being blinded by the greatness of the light he was led by his companions into Damascus, where he was three days without sight, and did neither eat nor drink. Then Ananias, a disciple of Jesus, was by a vision commanded to go to Saul and restore his sight; and when he entered the house, he put his hands on him and said, Brother Saul, the Lord, even Jesus, that appeared unto thee in the way as thou camest, hath sent me, that thou mightest receive thy sight, and be filled with the Holy Spirit. And immediately there fell from his eyes as it had been scales, and he received his sight, and was baptized. Afterwards his name was changed to Paul.

Then Paul was also empowered to work miracles as well as inspired to understand and preach the gospel. The cases of Elymas the sorcerer, and of the cripple at Lystra, and others are specially mentioned; but it is also testified that the Lord "granted signs and wonders to be done by the hands" of Paul.

There was no want of evidence that Paul was called to be an apostle, and inspired of God to make known his will in the epistles he wrote. But in the case of Emanuel Swedenborg no such evidence is found, and the claim set up of being a divinely-authorized teacher is a mere pretension.

It is true that Swedenborg, in his letter to T. Hartley, says, "I have been called to a holy office by the Lord himself, who most graciously manifested himself in person to me, his servant, in the year 1743; when he opened my sight to the view of the spiritual world, and granted me the privilege of conversing with spirits and angels, which I enjoy to this day." But here we have only the word of Emanuel Swedenborg himself, that the Lord personally appeared to him, unsupported by any other testimony, and in this connection we are taught by our Savior that he that bears witness for himself his witness is not true. Neither can we admit that his converse with the spirits of deceased persons is any evidence of divine authority. On the contrary, dealing with the dead, or necromancy, is strictly prohibited in the Word of God, especially in relation to religious truth. It is set forth as a virtual abandonment of divine revelation for the puerile and generally incoherent babbling of such as peep and mutter. "And when they shall say unto you, Seek unto them that have familiar spirits, and unto wizards that peep, and that mutter, should not a people seek unto their God? for the living to the dead? To the law and to the testimony: if they speak not according to this word, it is because there is no light in them. (Is. 8: 19, 20.) Hence the evidence adduced to prove that he possessed the power of holding intercourse with the dead, by establishing the fact that he had a familiar spirit, and practiced necromancy, only proves that he could not have had the spirit of the Lord, for "no one can be partaker of the Lord's table and the table of demons." There is then not only no evidence of a divine commission but evidence to the contrary.

Christianity Put in Practice.

Last Summer I was traveling upon one of our Eastern railroads. The day was warm and sultry, and the cars were filled with the usual variety of interesting and uninteresting passengers. On the seat directly behind me was a very respectable looking woman, with two young children, one a sturdy boy of perhaps three Summers, and the other a worrisome baby. The eldest seemed good natured, and patient, and though evidently tired, he tried to amuse the little one by playing bo-peep behind his hat; and the mother, with the unselfishness which mothers only know, was trying every way to make the little one more comfortable, but all of no avail.

Directly opposite me sat a fashionable-looking party of young ladies and gentlemen, who seemed very happy among themselves, laughing and chatting in a social way. Soon I noticed that the attention of the party was drawn toward this mother and her little ones. Presently one of the gentlemen left the group—a very elegant young man, fashionably dressed, but with an earnest, serious look upon his face—came toward the woman and said very kindly:

"You seem tired, ma'am, and your little one there is tired too; let me have him a few moments that you may rest." And she gladly passed the heavy baby into his strong arms, and he danced it about and played with it till it began to feel quite bright and happy. The young gentleman, still holding the child, asked the woman if she had to travel far with the children, and if he could be of any assistance to her. She told him she had been living in the State of Maine, had left home about five o'clock that morning, and was on her way to Maryland, to join her husband, who went there to get employment, and now had a home ready for her and the children, but the journey was rather hard with the two little ones.

"O, you will find kind friends," he answered; "I will do all I can to assist you. After we reach Boston, go into the ladies' room, and I will see that you get safely to the other depot, where you can rest a couple of hours." The little child having become quiet, was given back to its mother, and the young man took his seat.

The baby was good about half an hour, when it commenced the same wearisome wail as before, and the tired mother looked quite disheartened. Then our young man again came forward to her relief. "Now let me have that baby again," he said, and he took the warm tired, child to his own seat. The young ladies each had a kind word for the little one, showed him pictures, and called the other child to them, and filled their little brown hands with cake; and the tired mother looked refreshed and truly grateful.

As we came into Boston, the young gentleman left his party in the care of a friend, and the last I saw of him he was walking beside the mother who carried the baby in her arms, while our noble friend had the stout boy looking over his shoulder, and they were making their way to the saloon.

My thoughts often revert to that noble young man, who poured the wine and the oil of true Christian sympathy into the heart of that weary woman, on her journey. The deed speaks for itself; he had, indeed, shown mercy to the lonely and friendless. Have not you and I opportunities to do similar kind acts?

Hints to Young Converts.

So the writer heads the following practical counsel. But we do not see that it is not applicable to older Christians as well:

1. Consecrate yourself to Christ completely. Time, talents, opportunities, powers of body and mind, are all to be given to him.

2. The grand daily question of life is to be, "Lord, what wilt thou have me to do?" The smallest as well as the greatest matters are to be settled by it.

3. Never pick and choose among the commandments of God.

4. To learn duty, read the precepts of the Bible in the light of an earnest piety.

5. Never let mere want of feeling hinder you from following in a plain path of duty. If duty calls, follow and let feeling alone.

6. Never be afraid to say "No."

7. Hold up your light bravely, though it be a rushlight.

8. Let nothing hinder daily reading of the Bible with prayer.

9. Do not examine your own heart and motives too closely. It is like a child pulling up a plant by the roots to see whether it is growing. Rather place your soul where the beams of the Sun of Righteousness and the dews of the Holy Spirit may fall upon it daily, and you will grow in grace inevitably.

10. Speak to the impenitent of Christ and his salvation. Remember the care, and the prayers, and the effort bestowed upon you. But remember, too, that the life is more powerful than mere words. "This ought ye to have done, and not to leave the other undone." Let the two—words and life—agree; so shall your influence be great.

12. See to it that your religion makes you a better son or daughter, a better clerk, a better student, a better friend, a better workman. "By their fruits ye shall know them."

12. Strive to show forth the "beauty of holiness," by sympathy, by courtesy, by a delicate appreciation of others' feelings, by forgetfulness of self.

13. Do not set yourself up as a standard. Shun all censoriousness, especially towards older Christians who may not look at things just as you do, remembering that each one "to his own Master standeth or falleth," and not to you.

14. "Without me ye can do nothing." Let this be the settled conviction of your soul, for without this, all else is unavailing, and all effort to grow in grace will be as useless as to build a house on the shifting sand.

Finally. Do not be discouraged if you fail greatly in everything. If you were perfect, what need would you have of a Savior? "Ask, and it shall be given you; seek, and ye shall find; knock, and it shall be opened unto you: for whosoever asketh receiveth," &c. "If ye, then, being evil, know how to give good gifts to your children, how much more shall your Heavenly Father give the Holy Spirit to them that ask him?—Sel.

These claims are, that Emanuel Swedenborg was just as much divinely commissioned as was John the Baptist; and that his writings are as diversely authoritative as are those of Paul the apostle. The grounds advanced for these claims occupy about one hundred pages of this large-sized duodecimo, but are as unsatisfactory as they are labored. In the first place, a fancied correspondence is instituted between John the Baptist, as the herald of Christ's first advent, and Emanuel Swedenborg, as the herald of his supposed second advent. But this is altogether a conceit of the author, for there is really no parallel between them. The divine mission of John the Baptist was certified in a most remarkable manner.

He was the subject of prophecy. Isaiah spake of him as "The voice of one crying the wilderness, Prepare ye the way of the Lord, make his paths straight." (Is. 40: 3.) And by Malachi the Lord said, "Behold I send my messenger before thy face, which shall prepare thy way before thee." (Mal. 3: 1.)

His birth was the subject of angelic announcement. His parents were both well stricken in years, so that his birth was of an extraordinary character, and attended with extraordinary circumstances. An angel appeared to Zacharias, his father, in the temple, and said, "Thy wife Elizabeth shall bear thee a son, and thou shalt call his name John: and thou shalt have joy and gladness, and many shall rejoice at his birth. For he shall be great in the sight of the Lord, and shall drink neither wine nor strong drink; and he shall be filled with the Holy Spirit, even from his mother's womb. And many of the children of Israel shall he turn to the Lord their God. And he shall go before him in the spirit and power of Elias, to turn the hearts of the fathers to the children, and the disobedient to the wisdom of the just, to make ready a people prepared for the Lord." (Lk. 1:13-17.) And Zacharias for doubting this announcement was struck dumb and so continued until the birth of John, so that the people said, "What manner of child shall this be"? The circumstances indicated that he was to be a special messenger of the Lord of Hosts.

The training of John was in accordance with the directions of the angel; and he "grew and waxed strong in spirit, and was in the deserts till the day of his showing unto Israel," when he began his ministry under a special divine commission, to which he alludes in John 1: 33. "He that sent me to baptize said unto me, Upon whom thou shalt see Spirit descending and remaining, the same is he that baptizeth with the Holy Spirit." John was the Elias of the Israelitish national covenant as Jesus also testified saying, "If ye will receive him, this is Elias which was for to come." (Mat. 11: 14.) His work was to call the people to repentance, and take a part in the consecration of Christ to the priesthood. He had no new truths to reveal, and "he did no miracle."

In the case of Emanuel Swedenborg no such evidences of divine appointment are found. There was no prophecy respecting him. There was nothing extraordinary in the circumstances of his birth. It was not announced by an angel. He was not trained under any special divine direction; nor was his pretended commission certified by any accredited messenger of God. Evidence of John's divine appointment and ordination is abundantly sufficient to satisfy any candid mind. In the case of Emanuel Swedenborg it is entirely wanting. As to the coincidents that neither did any miracle, and that their fathers were ecclesiastics, they prove nothing, for there are thousands of persons on the same level.

In the second place, in regard to the Apostle Paul, there are evidences of his having been divinely called and ordained to the apostleship.

He was at first a blasphemer of the name of Jesus and a bitter persecutor of the Christians. And when on his way from Jerusalem to Damascus, breathing out slaughter against all who believed in Jesus, he was, by a special and extraordinary interposition of Providence, arrested in his mad career. When not far from Damascus, at noonday, a light above the brightness of the sun, shone around him and them that were with him. And when they were all fallen to the earth a voice spoke to him saying, Saul, Saul, why persecutest thou me. And he said, Who art thou, Lord? And it answered, I am Jesus whom thou persecutest; but rise and stand upon thy feet; for I have appeared unto thee for this purpose, to make thee a minister and a witness, both of the things which thou hast seen, and of those things which will appear unto thee; delivering thee from the people and from the Gentiles, unto whom now I send thee, to open their eyes, and to turn them from darkness to light, and from the power of Satan unto God, etc. And he was told to go into Damascus, where he should receive further instruction. Being blinded by the greatness of the light he was led by his companions into Damascus, where he was three days without sight, and did neither eat nor drink. Then Ananias, a disciple of Jesus, was by a vision commanded to go to Saul and restore his sight; and when he entered the house, he put his hands on him and said, Brother Saul, the Lord, even Jesus, that appeared unto thee in the way as thou camest, hath sent me, that thou mightest receive thy sight, and be filled with the Holy Spirit. And immediately there fell from his eyes as it had been scales, and he received his sight, and was baptized. Afterwards his name was changed to Paul.

Then Paul was also empowered to work miracles as well as inspired to understand and preach the gospel. The cases of Elymas the sorcerer, and of the cripple at Lystra, and others are specially mentioned; but it is also testified that the Lord "granted signs and wonders to be done by the hands" of Paul.

There was no want of evidence that Paul was called to be an apostle, and inspired of God to make known his will in the epistles he wrote. But in the case of Emanuel Swedenborg no such evidence is found, and the claim set up of being a divinely-authorized teacher is a mere pretension.

It is true that Swedenborg, in his letter to T. Hartley, says, "I have been called to a holy office by the Lord himself, who most graciously manifested himself in person to me, his servant, in the year 1748; when he opened my sight to the view of the spiritual world, and granted me the privilege of conversing with spirits and angels, which I enjoy to this day." But here we have only the word of Emanuel Swedenborg himself, that the Lord personally appeared to him, unsupported by any other testimony, and in this connection we are taught by our Savior that he that bears witness for himself his witness is not true. Neither can we admit that his converse with the spirits of deceased persons is any evidence of divine authority. On the contrary, dealing with the dead, or necromancy, is strictly prohibited in the Word of God, especially in relation to religious truth. It is set forth as a virtual abandonment of divine revelation for the puerile and generally incoherent babbling of such as peep and mutter. "And when they shall say unto you, Seek unto them that have familiar spirits, and unto wizards that peep, and that mutter, should not a people seek unto their God? for the living to the dead? To the law and to the testimony: if they speak not according to this word, it is because there is no light in them. (Is. 8: 19, 20.) Hence the evidence adduced to prove that he possessed the power of holding intercourse with the dead, by establishing the fact that he had a familiar spirit, and practiced necromancy, only proves that he could not have had the spirit of the Lord, for "no one can be partaker of the Lord's table and the table of demons." There is then not only no evidence of a divine commission but evidence to the contrary.

Christianity Put in Practice.

Last Summer I was traveling upon one of our Eastern railroads. The day was warm and sultry, and the cars were filled with the usual variety of interesting and uninteresting passengers. On the seat directly behind me was a very respectable looking woman, with two young children, one a sturdy boy of perhaps three Summers, and the other a worrisome baby. The eldest seemed good natured, and patient, and though evidently tired, he tried to amuse the little one by playing bo-peep behind his hat; and the mother, with the unselfishness which mothers only know, was trying every way to make the little one more comfortable, but all of no avail.

Directly opposite me sat a fashionable-looking party of young ladies and gentlemen, who seemed very happy among themselves, laughing and chatting in a social way. Soon I noticed that the attention of the party was drawn toward this mother and her little ones. Presently one of the gentlemen left the group—a very elegant young man, fashionably dressed, but with an earnest, serious look upon his face—came toward the woman and said very kindly:

"You seem tired, ma'am, and your little one there is tired too; let me have him a few moments that you may rest." And she gladly passed the heavy baby into his strong arms, and he danced it about and played with it till it began to feel quite bright and happy. The young gentleman, still holding the child, asked the woman if she had to travel far with the children, and if he could be of any assistance to her. She told him she had been living in the State of Maine, had left home about five o'clock that morning, and was on her way to Maryland, to join her husband, who went there to get employment, and now had a home ready for her and the children, but the journey was rather hard with the two little ones.

"O, you will find kind friends," he answered; "I will do all I can to assist you. After we reach Boston, go into the ladies' room, and I will see that you get safely to the other depot, where you can rest a couple of hours." The little child having become quiet, was given back to its mother, and the young man took his seat.

The baby was good about half an hour, when it commenced the same wearisome wail as before, and the tired mother looked quite disheartened. Then our young man again came forward to her relief. "Now let me have that baby again," he said, and he took the warm tired, child to his own seat. The young ladies each had a kind word for the little one, showed him pictures, and called the other child to them, and filled their little brown hands with cake; and the tired mother looked refreshed and truly grateful.

As we came into Boston, the young gentleman left his party in the care of a friend, and the last I saw of him he was walking beside the mother who carried the baby in her arms, while our noble friend had the stout boy looking over his shoulder, and they were making their way to the saloon.

My thoughts often revert to that noble young man, who poured the wine and the oil of true Christian sympathy into the heart of that weary woman, on her journey. The deed speaks for itself; he had, indeed, shown mercy to the lonely and friendless. Have not you and I opportunities to do similar kind acts?

Hints to Young Converts.

So the writer heads the following practical counsel. But we do not see that it is not applicable to older Christians as well:

1. Consecrate yourself to Christ completely. Time, talents, opportunities, powers of body and mind, are all to be given to him.

2. The grand daily question of life is to be, "Lord, what wilt thou have me to do?" The smallest as well as the greatest matters are to be settled by it.

3. Never pick and choose among the commandments of God.

4. To learn duty, read the precepts of the Bible in the light of an earnest piety.

5. Never let mere want of feeling hinder you from following in a plain path of duty. If duty calls, follow and let feeling alone.

6. Never be afraid to say "No."

7. Hold up your light bravely, though it be a rushlight.

8. Let nothing hinder daily reading of the Bible with prayer.

9. Do not examine your own heart and motives too closely. It is like a child pulling up a plant by the roots to see whether it is growing. Rather place your soul where the beams of the Sun of Righteousness and the dews of the Holy Spirit may fall upon it daily, and you will grow in grace inevitably.

10. Speak to the impenitent of Christ and his salvation. Remember the care, and the prayers, and the effort bestowed upon you. But remember, too, that the life is more powerful than mere words. "This ought ye to have done, and not to leave the other undone." Let the two—words and life—agree; so shall your influence be great.

12. See to it that your religion makes you a better son or daughter, a better clerk, a better student, a better friend, a better workman. "By their fruits ye shall know them."

12. Strive to show forth the "beauty of holiness," by sympathy, by courtesy, by a delicate appreciation of others' feelings, by forgetfulness of self.

13. Do not set yourself up as a standard. Shun all censoriousness, especially towards older Christians who may not look at things just as you do, remembering that each one "to his own Master standeth or falleth," and not to you.

14. "Without me ye can do nothing." Let this be the settled conviction of your soul, for without this, all else is unavailing, and all effort to grow in grace will be as useless as to build a house on the shifting sand.

Finally. Do not be discouraged if you fail greatly in everything. If you were perfect, what need would you have of a Savior? "Ask, and it shall be given you; seek, and ye shall find; knock, and it shall be opened unto you: for whosoever asketh receiveth," &c. "If ye, then, being evil, know how to give good gifts to your children, how much more shall your Heavenly Father give the Holy Spirit to them that ask him?—Sel.

The Last Gathering.

Ocean and earth, restore
All that your arms entomb!
From every distant shore,
Come to the gathering—come!

Sages of days gone by,
Long mouldering in the tomb,
Haste to the realms in light,
Come to the gathering—come!

Warrior with laurelled brow,
Who fixed a nation's doom,
Come to the judgment now,
Come to the gathering—come!

Maiden with lips of rose,
And brow of parian stone,
Haste from thy long repose,
Come to the gathering—come.

Bright was thy dark eye's gleam,
Fair was thy cheek of bloom,
Again those charms shall beam!
Come to the gathering—come!

Mourner with tearful eye,
Haste to thy long sought home,
A peaceful rest is nigh!
Come to the gathering—come!

Loved ones of days gone by,
Haste from the grave's cold gloom;
Again we meet on high!
Come to the gathering—come!

Ocean and earth, restore
All that your arms entomb!
Myriads from every shore,
Come to the gathering—come!

"Woman's Work Among the Lowly."

BY MARTHA TRASK.

I have long thought that this was a work that our sisters ought to be interested in, and that I would bring it before them. We come to this chapter with a saddened awe—we feel as though we were brought into communication with the world to come. We gather the thoughts of a dying one who was filled with the spirit of God. When those thoughts are so in harmony with the mind of Jesus, that self can all be forgotten, and love for lost, perishing sinners absorb the whole being. Such are the last thoughts of one who has fallen asleep in Jesus. Fastidious minds may regard them as out of place—unreflecting minds may regard them as unnecessary, but we believe they will tend to correct the mistaken views of the former, and awaken the latter to the consideration of a subject that is, or ought to be, pressing itself like a mountain upon the heart of every intelligent Christian. We offer no apology to the Christian woman to whom these pages shall come for introducing this subject, for facts stern and fearful are gathering thick around us, and we must awake to meet them. Sin of every character should be met in the spirit of holy religion and overcome by the power of grace, and we present this work that it may share the labors and prayers of the women of the church. We do not design in this article to speak lengthily of the causes of this alarming social evil, or portray the wrongs that society inflicts upon the helpless ones of our sex, but simply to appeal to the Christian women of our land to reach forth the hand of sympathy and love. That this vice is prevalent and alarming in all our cities and large towns, assuming an organized form, pursued by system, and classified among the gigantic evils of the time, all are aware.

We come not to portray its vastness; its numbers reaching thousands in small cities even, and the annual deaths counted by hundreds in limited localities; the average life being only four years. We aim not to hold up to public gaze the men of our land who are the betrayers of innocence and the seducers of virtue, and who count millions, where our sisters in shame number only thousands. We shall not, with righteous indignation, shower invective upon society that admits the one with welcome hand and brands with eternal infamy the other. Nor shall we attempt to awaken sympathy by sketching the peaceful home, the happy home, the betrayer's guile. Nor seek to palliate the sin by asserting what facts justify that, in childhood's home most of these are first led astray, and others, of the lower class, are largely pressed by the stern hand of circumstances thus to sin. We disavow all purpose to relieve them of the terribleness of the crime, or to make their guilt less heinous and fearful. But, we shall, in tones of earnest pleading, urge the women of our land to rescue them from their vileness and restore them to purity and love.

We know woman has been loudest in the denunciation of these erring sisters, and to them has the portal of her tender spirit been closed. She can scarcely forgive those of her sex who bring her pure character and spotless name into disrepute, and, unlike the Master, has said, "I do condemn thee." Because of this, this class has been almost wholly without the circle of effort, and also that of faith and prayer—left to go by thousands down the steeps of death. But we believe, and the experiences of those who have labored bear witness, that peculiarly to women, Christian women, God commits this work; to her, with her loving tender sympathies, fruitful resource, and ready hand. We owe it to our womanhood that we rescue these erring ones, and wipe the foul blots from their name, and prove that none are so degraded that deep in their natures cannot be seen written in legible characters the pure name of Woman! These, our sisters in ruin, appeal to us pleadingly and almost hopelessly. If we turn coldly away despair, with raven wings, settles upon them, crushing hope.

But to save them is a peculiar and difficult work. The utter impotency of human effort without the constant, vitalizing power of the spirit, can in no work be more apparent. Depravity, in its darkest and deadliest form, is to be met with the spirit and genius of the gospel of Christ; and it requires upon the part of the instrumentalities employed, a faith in God and humanity quite beyond the ordinary range of Christian experience. If there was but the one form of vice to be met, the task would be less difficult; but with it is connected a long train of vices: idleness, recklessness of restraint, love of display, irreverence, wrangling, Sabbath desecration, profanity, lying, thieving, and drunkenness: all its legitimate attendants, serving as so many enfoldings of Satan's power, and forming a complicated network of vice, almost inextricable and interminable. The fact of permanent reform can be based only upon a radical change of the nature by the power of the Holy Spirit. Isolated cases of reformation may occur without it, but these must have favorable outward surroundings, quite unusual with this class. This work demands the "uttermost" of Christ's salvation, and taxes severely the faith and patience of those who labor. Prayer and faithful dealing, love and discipline, law and gospel, must be so combined as to require the wisdom that comes from God alone in order to give them the right application. And this thought brings us to the necessity of providing homes for those who would reform. They must not be left to the influences and associations that surround them. Reform is impossible where any contact is allowed. Temptations in every form assail them, and only by a temporary seclusion can influences surround them essential to their firmation in a desire for reform. We must adapt means to meet their want; and in no way can we meet our responsibility but by furnishing a home. The ordinary church privileges may suffice to bring others of all classes and degrees, to Christ; but they do not avail for them. They are practically shut out from our churches—their altars and privileges. Our homes are closed to them, and from every avenue of business they are excluded. Society rejects them, to sympathy and love from the good they are strangers, and their destiny is to remain in vileness and die in gloom except Christian zeal provides homes, and Christian love invites and urges them to their acceptance. And why not provide homes for every class of the unfortunate? Why send Bibles and missionaries to the heathen? Why prosecute benevolence of every form and leave this one class—of our own sex, coming from our firesides, from the teachings of our Sunday schools, and lost to all good? Are these so degraded as to be beyond hope? Thus spake not the Master, but he said, "Go thy way, and sin no more"—his work to save the perishing one. With him there is no distinction; the polished sinner and degraded criminal are alike condemned, and alike redeemed and with his people there should be only sympathy and earnest effort for all classes of society. This is our mission—we are followers of Jesus who went about doing good to all. If there are those who refuse to seek the gospel, it should be carried to their hearts and homes; if so sunken in vice as to be cast forth from home influence, wandering and perishing, homes should await them, inviting entrance. Where there are houses of ruin, there should be houses of hope. Where there are those who decoy, there should be those who save. Hard by the steps of death should be placed the guide to life. This work is demanded by the genius of our holy religion and cannot be turned aside and Christ's church be guiltless.

A door of escape should always and everywhere be open, and though all refuse or are unbenefited, still these monuments of Christian effort should stand, as the brazen serpent, amid the dying and the dead, and emblematic of the cross amid the ruins of a fallen world!

Where homes are provided, women of deep religious experience are essential to their successful operation. Love, sympathy, zeal, practical sagacity, and good common-sense combined without personal piety, would be sufficient for permanent reform. The work demands an intrepid faith in God and humanity, a constant dependence upon the Divine Spirit, and incessant personal effort to secure directly their conversion. Depravity so deep and deadly, habits so inflexible, and vice so numerous require the purifying blood of Jesus, and the instrumentalities must be those of unusual religious power. Also natural capabilities of strong mental endowment, good personal appearance, winning address, and a loving, patient heart, are more positively demanded in this work than perhaps any other within the circle of Christian benevolence. There must be marked superiority in almost every regard to secure the respect of those in whom reverence and restraint are buried so deeply.

The "honorable women" of our churches must accept this work. It does not require wealth or social position, but deep piety, intelligence, and practical sagacity.

We have given some of the reasons why this work should be prosecuted, and we have pointed out the means by which it must be done. And we ask do not the disciples of Jesus owe it to their Master and their poor, erring sisters to make the endeavor, at least, to reach these perishing ones? They are among us in vast numbers. They come from our homes, our firesides, our Sabbath schools, and we must rescue them. They appeal to us by their utter rejection from society, the helplessness of their condition, and the wretchedness of their surroundings. They stretch out their hands to us as they would to the Master, and say, "Save, or we perish!" Shall we heed them, or turn coldly away, declaring the attempt hopeless, their condition unredeemable? Shall we say God's mercy cannot reach them, or his salvation purify them? Can we do less than attempt to inspire hope, proffer help, and, with tender sympathy, point to them the sinner's Friend?

I feel that the Master is at the door, and he demands every Christian sister to be up and about his work. We all have something to do; and may we "put on the whole armor of God," and go forward in the Master's work.

Their Joyfulness.

BY CHARLES E. DARROW.

Then were the disciples glad when they saw the Lord. (John 20;20.)

We are glad when the golden sun sends his genial heat upon the earth. We are glad when the silver moon casts her reflected lustre over the curtained land. We are glad when the silent stars send forth their mellow rays to lighten the blue canopy of heaven. We are glad when gentle spring comes, unfettering the rills and rivers that sweep in creeping sadness through their icy chains. We are glad when the heated beams of a summer's sun incline the heart to seek some covert shade and quaff the pure, cool liquid of some bubbling spring. We are glad when autumn, rich with all her golden fruitage, yields up the abundance of her wealth to the sickle of her weary husbandman. We are glad when winter robes "mother earth" with his pure white mantle, and spreads his crystal shield along the glassy surface of heaven's soft reflector. If then, we are glad to see the varied beauties of nature, how would our hearts beat with the wildest transports of joy—how would they be filled to overflowing with gladness could we see Jesus!! Oh! how much there is in those words to thrill every Christian heart! "Then were the disciples glad when they saw the Lord." Well might their hearts throb with the utmost delight when they beheld their Master risen from the dead. We wonder that Mary's weeping at the sepulcher so soon turned into joy, and that Thomas was led to exclaim with the wildest enthusiasm of delight, "My Lord and my God!" There was joy in every heart when they saw the Lord! But if we would see Jesus we must be pure in heart. We must have written upon our hearts "Holiness unto the Lord." We must keep ourselves "unspotted from the world." We must bear one another's burdens, and perform every known duty. We should serve our Master from no selfish motive, but with clean hands and a full purpose of heart. We should discharge every duty that is devolving upon us with faithfulness and fidelity. And when the winds of adversity mark us for their victims and fan us with their chilling breath, or when storms gather upon life's dark waters, we must learn to be patient in tribulation if we would see the blessed Jesus.

The cross must be borne before the crown can be worn, and if we would see Jesus we must be watchful, prayerful, and faithful; "waiting for the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ," with patience, hoping in his mercy, trusting in his grace, "steadfast, immovable, always abounding in the work of the Lord." And I believe we may pray for that glad day; and I long for the coming of our Savior, remembering in all our petitions to say "thy kingdom come." "Looking for that blessed hope and the glorious appearing of the great God and our Savior Jesus Christ." Our lamps! Where are they? Let them be brought forth and filled with oil, ready for use at the Master's bidding. Where are our wedding garments? Let us have them in readiness and be waiting, for "unto them that look for him shall he appear the second time without sin unto salvation."

Christ has wrought a robe of righteousness for everyone. It was woven upon the cross, fitted for us in his death, and will be given to us at his "appearing and kingdom." Our filthy rags of fleshly lusts shall all be taken away then, and we shall be robed in garments of celestial beauty. There is nothing that animates the humble follower of Christ as the thought of seeing Jesus! There is nothing so cheering as the hope of soon hearing the precious words fall from the Master's lips: "Well done, good and faithful servant, thou hast been faithful over a few things, I will make thee ruler over many things, enter thou into the joy of thy Lord!" We hope for that glad day when it may be said of us as it was of that little band of chosen ones; "then were the disciples glad when they saw the Lord." The disciples were glad when they saw their Master because he had so recently risen from the dead, and our joy will be complete when we behold him coming in the clouds of heaven with power and great glory, and hear the angels singing: "Worthy is the Lamb that was slain to receive power and riches, and wisdom and strength, and honor, and glory, and blessing." (Rev. 5: 12.)

The disciples had witnessed his sorrows in the garden of Gethsemane. They saw the infuriated mob advancing with lantern and spear in hand to take him. They beheld him borne away to the judgment hall. They saw the purple robe and the crown of thorns! They saw their Master arrayed in mock royalty, and heard the taunting shouts, "Hail King of the Jews!" They saw him smitten with the reed and the palm of the hand; spit upon and mocked. They saw him "led like a lamb to the slaughter," bearing his own cross, broken in heart and bowed down with grief. They beheld him stretched upon the cross and crucified between two thieves. They saw him hanging there in the broiling sun, suspended by the sharp nails which pierced his holy hands and feet. They saw the Jews revile and mock him saying, "He saved others, himself he cannot save; and amid all these horrid scenes they distantly heard him say, "Father forgive them for they know not what they do." They saw the Son of God dying upon the cross: they saw him "put to death in the flesh." They gazed upon his lifeless body and the deep wound that had been made in his side by the Roman spear. They placed their trembling hands upon his heart to see if it did not still beat; but alas! he is dead, and where now is his power? Where his throne? His power is ended in death, and his throne a Roman cross! Thus they wondered and wept while they prepared spices and perfumes to embalm the dead. They bore the precious remains away to the sepulcher that had been hewn out in the rock, rolled a great stone to the door, and departed. But early in the morning, "as it began to dawn toward the first day of the week," Jesus rent the bars of his tomb asunder, the stone rolled away from the door of the sepulcher, and Christ arose from the dead! The angel said unto the weeping Mary "He is not here: for he is risen as he said! Come, see the place where the Lord lay! and go quickly and tell the disciples that he is risen from the dead, and behold he goeth before you into Galilee! There shall ye see him! Lo! I have told you. "Then were the disciples glad when they saw the Lord."

A RIGHT SPIRIT.—On one occasion a minister found it necessary to punish his little daughter. But Mary climbed into his lap, and, throwing her arms around his neck, said, "Papa, I do love you." "Why do you love me, my child?" the father asked. "Because you try to make me good, papa." It is in this spirit that God's people should accept the chastisements he sends, remembering it is in love he rebukes and chastens; not for his pleasure.

THE clay and spittle were not an artistic combination; the taste was not charmed by them, or culture gratified; yet by these and a wash in Siloam, eyes were opened—even thus it pleases God by the foolishness of preaching to save them that believe.—Spurgeon.

Christian Perfection.

BY MARY A. TIBBETTS.

While all true Christians most deeply ament that the standard of true piety, oliness of heart to the Lord, is far too w in churches, families and individuls, yet great care should be exercised elevating it, lest the subject should t be properly understood, and the fforts made to secure it fail of sucess. My humble pen can scarcely ttempt to throw light upon a subject f such vital importance, and which as been so ably handled by talents of e first magnitude. Yet, with all due eference to the opinions of those ho have so ably written upon this lessed Bible theme—holiness of heart nd life—I would modestly make a uggestion: And first, let me say, I ve holiness, and am praying for it, nd daily striving to cultivate it in my fe and practice; yet, I find it necesary, with the apostle, to "press forard, it by any means I might attain nto the resurrection of the dead," hen I hope to say "I am cleansed rom all sin."

But while in this life, subject to its ares, trials, and numerous perplexiies, in my view, even for eminent Christians to say or write that "they re perfect, pure in heart, and cleansed rom all sin," to say that they are leansed from the love of sin, and that hey are striving for a pure heart and o perfect holiness in the fear of God, s language strong enough for our presnt warfare with the world, the flesh, nd Satan, and more likely to be unerstood and appreciated by the maority of Christians, encouraging and nabling them to seek for the special lessings conferred upon those whose ives are fully consecrated to God and nd an active cheerful service in his ause. Many humble Christians who ave not yet learned the blessedness f walking in the higher life or the joy f being set apart for the work of the Lord, which, in their individual cases, eems a slow process, and hard to seure, are frequently intimidated and ade almost hopeless of attaining to he results so strongly attested to by thers of greater maturity and experience. They are rejoiced to read amid their many failures in duty, "And if any man sin, we have an advocate with the Father, Jesus Christ the righteous." And as Solomon, the wise man, said, "there is no man that sinneth not," it is difficult for them to perceive how any in the present time, even with all the promised help of the Holy Spirit and the promises of the precious Word, can live "free from all sin" or any condemnation of conscience!

Therefore, in order that we may more easily help others in their desire after holiness, let the strong ones use language which the weak ones can understand, and, in that way, "bear the infirmities of the weak."

A word more about being too positive. I am longing and looking for the coming of our blessed Lord, and desire it to be very soon, even to-day if it could be his will: but when I read an article from the pen of some able brother, "that Jesus will come this year," I regret the influence of such remarks upon the world, knowing that, in case of failure, the cause we love so well will suffer loss in the hands of our opposers. Let us then, daily work for Christ, and be faithful in the discharge of our duties looking for, and loving his appearing, leaving it to himself alone to decide the time of his glorious coming.

Work and Wait.

I. C. WELLCOME.

Those who would be ready to enter the eternal rest when the Master comes to give rewards, must be found working for the Master. If we expect to be approved we must be doing his work; not our own, not that of any one else, but the Lord's work. He has called us away from our works, called us away from the devil's work, called us into his vineyard to work the work of faith; we have been saved by his blood, and filled with his love. And now we are to "work out our own salvation with fear and trembling." We cannot work it out until we have it within. A thorn tree does not bear grapes. A dry well affords no water. When we have the spirit of Christ it will prompt us to action: we must obey its promptings and work, or lose its sweet approving influence, and feel its condemnation. Remember, "we are workers together with God," not idlers while he works. "It is God that worketh in you both to will and to do." You must work it out or lose its benefits. "Work while it is day;" now is our only time to work. There is but little more time remaining. Let us be diligent. "Occupy till I come," is the Master's command. The masses around you are lost, wandering to and fro in the broad way to destruction. You can say a word for the Lord; show them "the good way," ask them to walk in it, entreat them to seek eternal life in Christ, give them a tract, offer them a good book which may call their attention to Christ. Some of the sheep are famishing among thorns and briers, where they find but little feed. You can help them out into green pastures, set before them good food—glorious truths. Some are torn and feeble; comfort them and dress their wounds. Some of the lambs are weak, not getting "the sincere milk of the word;" you can feed them with it, and they will "grow thereby." Do not wait for reward. Work and wait; much can be done, a wide door is open to work for Jesus, leading souls to him. Those who work find much to do, more than they can do. The days are evil. Satan works, wicked men and women work. You can work in righteousness and gather fruit unto eternal life. Every child of God can do something in the cause of the Master. Ask the Lord to give you work, then be ready to do just the work he calls you to. This is not our rest, the rest is beyond. Wait till Jesus comes, then he will give rest to those who have become weary by earnest work. It is but a little while, and the rest will be long—eternal. "Let us labor to enter into that rest." Shall we be found occupying, doing, laboring, when Jesus comes to reward his people?

Rest.

BY G. W. GREEN.

When weary, it is natural to desire rest; and it is natural, too, to long for the time to come when it may be enjoyed. In the daily avocations of life when men are overtasked, and grow weary, they are usually glad of the opportunity to seek some pleasant retreat, where they can bask in calm repose, and partake of whatever is most pleasing and delightful; for this purpose, many schemes have been invented for ease and pleasure; and millions upon millions have been expended to carry them out. But such enjoyments though sought with avidity, are earthly, and must soon pass away. Human skill has never yet been able to stamp "eternal" upon the pleasures brought about by the schemes of men. All is fleeting. Yet men cling to such pleasures, utterly careless in regard to the glories of the kingdom, so beautifully and magnificently portrayed in the sure word of prophecy. Such seem to look only at the present; and, while rest is sweet, they seem content with the hollow phantoms of earth.

But the christian is not content with the pleasures of earth. He longs for something better; and the eye of faith is fixed on things eternal, because he is assured "there remaineth, therefore, a rest to the people of God." This rest is sure, because it is promised in the immutable word of God; and when obtained it will be rest indeed. The child of God will then be free from care and toil. No more will he be beset by satan's tempting hand. No more shall sorrow's tear flow down his cheek. No more shall grief oppress his heart. No more shall sickness prey upon his frame; and no more shall death invade the circle of his friends. And, blessed be God, this rest is eternal.

Surely the christian's rest is worth seeking. Let the disciple of Christ be faithful to his trust. Eternal rest is near at hand. The "signs of the times" proclaim in thunder tones the coming of our Redeemer; and when he comes he will give us life eternal, and we shall enter into rest, in the Kingdom of our God.

The Daily Cross.

C. M. KEACH.

And he said unto them, If any man will come after me let him deny himself and take up his cross daily and follow me. (Lk. 9:23)

The text reads "take up his cross daily." It does not say take up his cross at the prayer meeting, nor at the covenant meeting, nor at the class meeting, nor at any other stated season of public worship. But it explicitly reads "take up his cross DAILY." While it may be a cross to some to speak publicly concerning their Christian experience, and to give in their testimony for Christ, yet it is certainly an erroneous idea, imbibed by some, that this is all that constitutes the Christian cross. A cross implies crucifixion, and the Christian cross can be nothing less than a complete consecration of ourselves to the service of God and Christ. This is the cross we are to bear daily.

They that are Christ's have crucified the flesh and its passions. (Gal. 5:24.) To bear the cross daily is to deny ourselves. (Text.) To mortify the deeds of the body, (Rom. 8:13.) To abstain from fleshly lusts. (1 Pet. 2: 11.) To mortify our members which are upon the earth. (Col. 3: 5.) To have our old man, the body of sin, crucified with Christ. (Rom. 6:6.) To forsake all for Christ. (Lk. 14: 23.) To put off the old man which is corrupt. (Eph. 4:22.) And finally to become strangers and pilgrims upon the earth. (1 Pet. 2:11.) Thus we bear the cross of Christ. We are to follow the Shepherd and Bishop of our souls—follow him through evil as well as good report—follow him through the perplexities and sufferings of this mortal life, and, if need be, follow him even unto death, and our reward shall be a crown of life. (Rev. 2: 10.)

Where are we.

Where are we, on the highway of time? is a question of the deepest interest to every Christian traveler. Says the prophet, with an eye to the events of the end. "Watchman, what of the night? watchman, what of the night?" and the answer was returned, "The morning cometh, and also the night." If we go to the Bible for light on this question, the student of prophecy is gratified with the most exact information in regard to his whereabouts. God's word is the Christian's calendar, in which he can learn his place in the closing hours of probation. And take our standpoint wherever we may, the same conclusion is invariarbly arrived at, namely, that the coming of Christ is the next great event in the history of the world. If we go to the second chapter of Daniel, our position in the metalic image is startling. The gold, the silver, the brass, and the iron, have passed away, and where are we? In the toe state of the image, next to be succeeded by the fifth everlasting kingdom, which the God of Heaven is about to set up.

In the twenty-fourth chapter of Matthew, the Savior certifies the church of his return by three great signs—the darkening of the sun and moon, and showers of falling stars—all of which have been fulfilled to the letter, and may be pointed out with historical accuracy. Says Christ: When these things come to pass, then KNOW ye that the kingdom of God is at hand, even at the door.

The proclamtion of the Advent doctrine is an unmistakable token of the end. Three messages, based on the gospel of the kingdom, were to be given before Christ should come; and the last one of the three has already been pressed home to the consciences of men by the Holy Spirit, for more more than twenty-five years. The next event is the Son of man on the white cloud.

The predicted part which our own government, the two-horned beast of Rev. 13, should act in the closing struggle between truth and error, is just ready to be fulfilled, which will be followed by the loud cry, the time of trouble, and eternal deliverance.

The waning of the papacy, and the removal of its temporal dominion, was in close proximity with the end. Rome did surrender to Victor Emmanuel's troops, Sept. 20, 1870. The next event in the papal history is, the beast will be destroyed by the brightness of Christ's coming. The exact order of the proyhecy is 1. The Judgment shall sit (investigate judgment) 2. They shall take away his dominion. 3. The beast goes into the lake of fire. But the Judgment did sit in 1844. The dominion was taken away three years ago, and therefore the next thing is the end.

Also the "great words" of the beast, Dan. 7: 11, just before his body was given to the burning flames, have all been fulfilled. Dec. 8, 1854, the Virgin Mary, by the Roman Council, was decreed to be a sinless woman; and July 18, 1870, the pope was declared to be infallible at the session of the Ecumenical Council.

The message to the Laodicean church is a startling indication of the end. In 1856, it was announced that Christ was knocking at the door of our hearts for admittance. For seventeen years, he has thus stood knocking, till his looks are wet with the dews of night. This divine forbearance, this long-suffering of God, will finally cease to be a virtue, and will be followed by the shaking, the loud cry, the King coming in to see the guest, and—the translation of the faithful.

Our position in the seven seals is portentous of the end. These seals delineate the experience of the church from the apostles' days to the incoming of the new heavens and new earth. Five of the seals are in the past. We are living under the sixth, which reaches to Christ's coming. This seal was opened Nov. 1, 1775, by "the great earthquake of Lisbon," which destroyed sixty thousand persons, in six minutes, and shook three-fourths of the terraqueous globe. History describes it as "the most terrible earthquake that ever occured." The particular events of the sixth seal are, 1. "The great earthquake." 2. The three great signs in the sun, moon, and stars, which are all in the past. 3. The heavens are rolled together as a scroll, and Christ appears. Where are we.

The gradual, sure, but certain consumption of the great Ottoman dynasty, represented by the drying up of the river Euphrates, is one of the political signs of times which speaks Christ very near. The "Eastern Question" is one of awful importance to the world. When the Turk is driven out of Europe to his Asiatic possessions, an event which sagacious stastesmen of our time are expecting continually, and plants the tabernacle of his palace between the seas in the glorious holy mountain, then shall Michael stand up, and the great time of trouble come, the resurrection take place, and the redeemed stand on Mount Zion.

The position of the last church in reference to the seven trumpets, inevitably brings us down to the end. The seven trumpets are a kind of sevenfold prophecy, spanning the entire period from the first advent to the final restitution, and relate more especially to the nations which have been brought into connection with the people of God. Six of the trumpets are in the past. We are living under the seventh, which began to sound in 1844. For twenty-nine years this trumpet has been sounding. But the prophecy says of the seventh angel, "When he shall begin to sound, the mystery of should be finished." In view of this how long can it be before the kingdoms of this world will become the kingdoms of our Lord and of his Christ?

But it would take a volume to set forth all the evidences which show where we are—that we are very near the end.

Every train of cars that goes thundering by, proclaims in trumpet tones that we are "in the day of God's preparation." The vast increase of knowledge, sacred and profane, shows that truly we are in the "time of the end." Peter's scoffers and Jude's mockers, proclaim every day, everywhere, continually, that we are in the last days. Even millions of spiritualists, with their corrupt, seductive teachings, are a mighty sign that the end is just upon us. Corrupted Christianity, with its long catalogue of predicted sins, shows that we are in the perils of the last days. While the angry attitude of the nations—the cry of peace and safety in the church—the vast preparations for war, even among the heathen—vice rearing its defiant head, and stalking forth unblushingly—truth crushed to the ground, and struggling for an existence—men's hearts failing because of the fearful portents in heaven and earth—earthquakes in divers places—the sea and waves roaring in consequence of strange tidal disturbances—singular extremes in the seasons, in regard to heat and cold—new diseases breaking out, baffling the skill of the wisest physicians—scourges and epidemics in the animal kingdom—drouths, fires, floods, famines, and pestilence, desolating the earth by their awful visitation—the moral bonds of society gradually loosening up, and crime greatly on the increase—corruption in high places—surfeiting and drunkenness everywhere—embezzlers of public funds and defalters increasing—pride and opposition so common as hardly to receive a passing notice—disobedience to parents proverbial—the land polluted by blasphemy—murder and seduction so frequent so awful, that the particulars are not allowed in print—while an almost universal forboding of a something awful to take place, tell us plainly, as language can, that we are in the closing hours of probation.

Surely, we need not be at a loss to to know where we are.—G. W. A in Advent Review.

God's Blessing.

Charlie was going home with his uncle. They were on the steamboat all night. A steamboat is furnished with little beds on each side of the cabin. Those little beds are called berths. When it was time to go to bed Charlie undressed himself.

"Make haste and jump into your berth, boy," said his uncle.

"Mayn't I first kneel down and ask God to take care of us?" asked Charlie.

"We shall be taken care of fast enough," said his uncle.

"Yes sir," said Charlie, "but mother always tells us not to take anything without first asking."

Uncle Tom had nothing to say to that, and Charlie knelt down, just as he did by his own little bed at home. By God's bounty and goodness and grace you live on day by day, my children; but never take it without first asking.

Christian Perfection.

BY MARY A. TIBBETTS.

While all true Christians most deeply ament that the standard of true piety, oliness of heart to the Lord, is far too ow in churches, families and individuls, yet great care should be exercised elevating it, lest the subject should ot be properly understood, and the fforts made to secure it fail of success. My humble pen can scarcely ttempt to throw light upon a subject f such vital importance, and which as been so ably handled by talents of he first magnitude. Yet, with all due efference to the opinions of those ho have so ably written upon this lessed Bible theme—holiness of heart nd life—I would modestly make a uggestion: And first, let me say, I ove holiness, and am praying for it, nd daily striving to cultivate it in my fe and practice; yet, I find it necesary, with the apostle, to "press forard, it by any means I might attain nto the resurrection of the dead," hen I hope to say "I am cleansed rom all sin."

But while in this life, subject to its ares, trials, and numerous perplexiies, in my view, even for eminent Christians to say or write that "they re perfect, pure in heart, and cleansed rom all sin," to say that they are leansed from the love of sin, and that hey are striving for a pure heart and o perfect holiness in the fear of God, s language strong enough for our present warfare with the world, the flesh, nd Satan, and more likely to be unerstood and appreciated by the maority of Christians, encouraging and nabling them to seek for the special lessings conferred upon those whose ives are fully consecrated to God and nd an active cheerful service in his ause. Many humble Christians who ave not yet learned the blessedness f walking in the higher life or the joy f being set apart for the work of the Lord, which, in their individual cases, eems a slow process, and hard to seure, are frequently intimidated and made almost hopeless of attaining to he results so strongly attested to by thers of greater maturity and experience. They are rejoiced to read amid their many failures in duty, "And if any man sin, we have an advocate with the Father, Jesus Christ the righteous." And as Solomon, the wise man, said, "there is no man that sinneth not," it is difficult for them to perceive how any in the present time, even with all the promised help of the Holy Spirit and the promises of the precious Word, can live "free from all sin" or any condemnation of conscience!

Therefore, in order that we may more easily help others in their desire after holiness, let the strong ones use language which the weak ones can understand, and, in that way, "bear the infirmities of the weak."

A word more about being too positive. I am longing and looking for the coming of our blessed Lord, and desire it to be very soon, even to-day if it could be his will: but when I read an article from the pen of some able brother, "that Jesus will come this year," I regret the influence of such remarks upon the world, knowing that, in case of failure, the cause we love so well will suffer loss in the hands of our opposers. Let us then, daily work for Christ, and be faithful in the discharge of our duties looking for, and loving his appearing, leaving it to himself alone to decide the time of his glorious coming.

CHICAGO, Tuesday, May 27, 1873.

A SAD BEREAVEMENT.

We have just learned of the death of Brother Sheldon's boy, an only son, with no particulars respecting it. He was a very fine manly little fellow, full of hope and promise to his doting parents.

Such is life in this vale of tears; such its uncertainties and such its results till Jesus comes. Our brother and his family must be utterly overwhelmed in this affliction, only as they find comfort and support in the blessed hope of the resurrection. How inexpressibly sweet in such an hour as this, is the promise of Jesus to Martha: "Thy brother shall rise again!" What a balm to crushed and bleeding hearts! Death may triumph for a time; but his reign is short! The grave must give up its prey! "I will ransom them," saith God, "from the power of the grave; I will redeem them from death: O Death, I will be thy plagues; O Grave, I will be thy destruction!" Precious promise to bereaved ones! The grave—it cannot hold them! Jesus is the Resurrection and the Life: because he lives they shall live also! "I am he that liveth, and was dead; and behold I am alive for evermore, Amen; and have the keys of hell and of death!" Then we sorrow not as others who have no hope "for, if we believe that Jesus died and rose again, even so them that sleep in Jesus will God bring with him." Afflicted ones, you may lean upon these promises and find a support which is beyond all human comprehension! May their blessedness and power to sustain be yours till the Master comes and wipes away our tears and swallows up death in victory!

SAVING IMMORTALITY.

Notwithstanding our ears are constantly saluted with allusions to the death of Christ as a prerequisite to the "salvation of immortal souls," it is seriously questioned whether the death of Christ could save such souls, even provided such souls were in existence. The question arises: How does Christ propose to save men? The answer is, by exempting them from the demands of a broken law, in meeting that demand in his own person; for "the Lord laid on him the iniquity of us all," (Is. 53:5, 6), and "he bore our sins in his own body on the tree." The demand of the divine law must be met by the offender, or by one that will suffer the penalty in his stead, thus exempting the transgressor. This Christ volunteered to do in order to save sinners, on condition that his death should be made availing to exempt them from the penalty, if they would serve him. "Christ was once offered to bear the sins of many"—this one offering being valued more than an equivalent for the whole race, just as one diamond is equivalent in value to millions of copper coins. The death of Christ was literal, hence it exempts sinners from a literal penalty death. But how can it thus save a deathless soul from literal death? Such a soul would be in no danger of such a death, and would need no such a death as Jesus died to exempt it. Did Jesus die the wrong kind of a death, or is theology wrong?

A DODGE.

A new effort is being made to escape the conclusion that "death" will hereafter be the doom of the wicked, as Paul did not say, the wages of sin shall be death, but, "The wages of sin is death." But let us carry this evasion through the whole text, and see what it will prove: "But the gift of God is eternal life through our Lord Jesus Christ." Not shall be, but "is." As this "gift" comes "through our Lord Jesus Christ," it can be enjoyed only by the saints; thus proving that sinners are destitute of it, even if saints already possess it; and if sinners are destitute of "eternal life," they cannot live forever, but must hereafter die; and if it is the soul of the saint instead of his body, that already possess eternal life, then it is equally true, from the same promise, that the sinner's soul is destitute of eternal life; and consequently possesses only a dying nature, and must literally die under the stroke of divine wrath at the great judgment day. "The soul that sinneth it shall die"—not is dead. "The wages of sin is death," but "wages" are not received till pay day comes. "The gift of God is eternal life," but as "he that soweth to the spirit shall of the spirit reap life everlasting," which reaping is not due till harvest, and the "harvest is at the end of the world," it follows that the bestowment of this "gift" is after the arrival of the judgment day, and not in this life. We can tell what a man's salary is without conveying the idea that it has already been received.

THAT COMING.

How do you harmonize Mat. 10: 23—"Ye shall not have gone over the cities of Israel till the Son of Man be come"? What coming is here spoken of?

Yours very respectfully, etc.,
S. W. Bird.

No reference is here made to the coming of Christ from heaven, but allusion is made to his coming to overtake the disciples on their journey. Christ first sent out twelve disciples with a message to be confined exclusively to the cities of Israel, saying, "Go not into the way of the Gentiles, and into any city of the Samaritans enter ye not; but go ye rather to the lost sheep of the house of Israel." (Mat. 10: 5.) Subsequently he sent forth "other seventy also....into every city and place whither he himself would come." (Lk. 10: 1.) It was with reference to this mission to the cities of Israel that Jesus said, "And when they persecute you in one city, flee ye into another: for verily I say unto you, ye shall not have gone over the cities of Israel till the Son of Man be come"—that is, come to overtake them. This mission was finished before the crucifixion, and consequently the coming here mentioned occurred before that epoch, and had no reference to a coming from heaven after the ascension of Christ.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

Brother Sheldon:—I am unable to conclude how to construe verse three chapter five of the book of Revelations: "And no man in heaven, nor in earth, neither under the earth, was able to open the book, neither to look thereon."

How can we get rid of the irresistible implication of this verse that there are men in heaven? I know not. Perhaps it should have been translated by some other term than "man."

Will you be kind enough to answer this in The Times, if it may be proper; if not, then by private letter to me, and oblige your brother in Christ desiring to be skillful in wielding the "sword of the spirit."

I have also another question: Rom. 1:29; 2 Cor. 12:20 represent "debates" as condemnable. How therefore, may we legally engage in them?

Your affectionate brother in Gospel hope.,
A. J. Marsh.

1. The word "man," in Rev. 5: 3, is not from the Greek word anthropos, which always signifies a human being, but from oudeis, which is rendered "nothing," "none," and "no one," about a hundred times in the New Testament. Wickliff's translation of this text reads "none," instead of no man. Whiting's Translation, the Bible Union version, and the Diaglott, all read "no one," instead of no man.

2. The term "debate," used in the texts referred to, is from a term indicating carnal wrangling or malicious strife. In every other text in which the word occurs, it is translated "strife," "contentions," and "variance."

Ordinarily debates, if properly conducted, need not partake of this spirit of bitter strife, but of calm reasoning. It is however, often true that, even truth is defended in a spirit which the Scriptures condemn.

WHAT IS DYING?

A secular paper reports Beecher as saying concerning the death of the saints:

> "Dying is going home, not to supineness, not Oriental luxury, but to supreme activity, where every part is developed and cultured in the realm of love. Bless God for the privilege of dying."

A disembodied immortal to be "developed and cultured," in "every part," after emigrating to a distant "home," indicates imperfection in immortality. Where is dying spoken of in the Bible as going home, except to man's "long home" the grave, causing "the mourners to go about the streets"? Why should we "bless God for the privilege" of falling into the hands of the "enemy" death? Should we not rather give thanks for "the gift of God," which is eternal life through Jesus Christ our Lord"?

CHANGE OF CLIMATE.

The following remarks are clipped from a secular paper:

> Intensely cold, stormy, and ice-bound as all nature is at the arctic circle, there are evidences in multiplied forms to prove that the climate in those inhospitable abodes of the white bear and walrus was once as mild, warm, and delightful as the island of Cuba. Vegetable productions of the soil, so ancient we have no data to reckon from, are abundant. These grew luxuriantly where it is now almost impossible to sustain either plants or animals with all the appliances of art, and from their structure are particularly fitted for a tropical climate. This statement requires no proof, since the archives of geology verify it by preserved specimens in the rocks, the land, and caverns of the frozen North. What forces produced the change from a mild to a terrific region of storms in their most fitful exhibitions of resistless fury? The polarity of the earth must have been suddenly changed.

Doubtless before the fall of man, and before the curse was pronounced, earth's climate was just right, whether, as a facility for augmenting the curse, the polarity of the earth has been changed or not. In the coming restitution, earth will again possess a climate that will be lovely.

Board at Camp.—We have made arrangements for board at the Wis. camp meeting, at reasonable rates. Some have expressed a desire to come with tents to lodge in, provided they could obtain board. Such, and others can be accomodated by the meal, by the day, or by the week, by at once notifying Br. H. M. Jones, that he may know how extensively to arrange. Write to Merrimack, Wis.

Errata.—In our last issue, on first page, first column, second paragraph from bottom, instead of "damnation theory," read Darwinian theory; same page, third column, fourth paragraph from top, read "divinity is now chained in tartarus"; on fifth page, third paragraph from bottom, read "irritating spirit of carnality.

Does a Man Still Exist When Dead?

Mr. Editor:—I understand you as offering to print some of my thoughts upon this subject, and accordingly, I will offer a few preliminary observations, to clear the question of extraneous matter:

1. It is not a question of the immortality or indestructibility of the soul. The word immortal has lost its original sense of *un*mortal, not mortal, outlasting death, and has come to mean lasting forever. The former thought was what was mainly discussed under this term by the ancients; but now men have got to wrangling needlessly on the latter thought—the endlessness of the duration.

I wish to return to the original point, and consider merely whether man has a soul which is *un*mortal, not ceasing at death. There is no manner of use in discussing how long a human soul endures, until we have found out whether it endures at all in death. Both reason and all Scripture may throw some light on this latter point; but on the question of immortality reason can offer nothing definite, and Jesus Christ alone must fully bring it to light. A mere natural immortality is a figment better dispensed with. So then, let not the word "immortal" be once named in this present examination.

2. It is not a question of the annihilation or extinction of the wicked. That doctrine may be held, and is held, by many who think that men still exist after death, as well as by those who regard men as in death ceasing to be. So that, whatever result we come to in the present inquiry, it will not decide that doctrine.

3. It is not a question as to when men receive their final reward. That must be at the judgment day, as all Bible students must concede. Any violation of this view by persons preaching full felicity and full misery straightway after death is an inconsistency and heresy that ought to be abated. If men still exist when dead, it does not follow that they are fully rewarded or punished then, or are assigned to their final destiny until the day of final account. We can still magnify the resurrection and the second advent to their proper place, as the "blessed hope" of the saints.

4. It is not a question whether man is mortal, and subject to a complete death. That must be conceded by all; it is forced upon us by all our senses; the Bible is full of it; all expositors and preachers enforce it—those who think there is a soul surviving, just as emphatically as those who do not. Death — full, overwhelming death comes on us—that is certain! The only question is, What is Death? Does it end everything, or does the person in any sense still exist?

5. It is not a question whether a man is fully conscious when dead: because there may be real existence without any great consciousness of it—yes, without any remembered consciousness at all. This we know is so in sound sleep; and why might it not be so in death? It matters little, comparatively, how much or how little a dead man thinks, or will afterwards remember concerning his death-state. What we wish to know is, whether there is such a man still in being, to have an afterwards beyond?

But here it is said by some, if it be not a question of consciousnes, it is a question of no consequence. I see that you, Mr. Editor, treat it thus in your remarks on my previous letter. You speak of a person in unconsciousness as "virtually" out of existence, and you designate as controverted "nice distinctions" any ideas of non-consciousness and non-existence as different things. So also Mr. Whitmore treats the matter, (Immortality, pp. 77, 90.) "An unconscious mind is not immortal [or existent still] in the proper sense of the term." "Unless consciousnes remain entire and unimpaired after death, nothing remains worth contending for."

But to me it is of vast consequence whether, while I sleep unconscious by night, I am still a rational soul, capable of consciousness, and sure to exercise that capacity when the fit moment comes at the morning dawn, or whether, upon closing my eyes, I cease entirely to be as a rational soul, with nothing therefore left to awaken but a senseless or idiotic form. It is a matter of great concern when my friend has fallen unconscious in a swoon whether my friend still exists with full powers possessed though not in exercise, and soon to be aroused to new recognition and activity, or whether he is clean gone past the hope of recovery. And people do generally feel it a matter of infinite m ment, to know whether we d actually exist through the sleep death, be the active consciousness that existence more or less.

I am surprised at the course pursu by Mr. Whitmore and others in rega to this point. Regarding the issu thus put as of "no consequence," he takes the liberty to advocate both sides of the question, as the emergencies seem to make convenient, to answer his ends. Thus, all his book to page eighty-eight, is an argument against all existence of the dead, because they are unconscious, (as seen above.) But then, at page eighty-nine, treating of sleep, he all at once turns about and, to the extent of five pages, argues the opposite, namely: that consciousness is not essential to existence; for, he says, "it would follow from this absurd theory, that one would be utterly without a mind or soul for at least one-fourth of his life,"—during sleep! Sure enough, the theory is "absurd,"—this theory that unconsciousness and non-existence are the same. But why does not Brother Whitmore adhere to this sensible view of things, and apply it to death as well as to sleep? When we sleep the sleep of death, if we become more or less unconscious, it surely will not follow that we become non-existent, any more than when we sleep at night. Why has our friend written a long book to maintain a theory which he here calls "absurd"? namely: the theory that to become unconscious is to become extinct!

Now, let me ask in all candor, is it fair thus to play upon both sides of a great Bible question like this? I know it is very convenient for argument. For, when all goes smoothly, one can preach that all existence must perish with all thought at death; but when any passage or argument crowds hard against this view, he can quietly change his base, and plead that though something must still exist, it is so little that it is "not worth contending for."

But to me, and to Christian people generally, it is worth contending for; and we feel that the very gist of the whole Bible doctrine lies here, namely, in the fact that a something, a real personality, does exist right through all fluctuations of consciousness. And if any one takes the negative and denies this fact, ought he not, in honesty, to stick to his ground, and not be arguing now pro, and now con, so that he cannot be fairly confronted anywhere?

There are three ways of looking at death.

1. The materialistic, or no soul view, that death is a loss of being.

2. The simple orthodox view, that death is a sleep.

3. The fancy view, much prevalent, that death (rather than the resurrection) is an awakening.

For this last no Scripture can be given, any more than for the first theory. Too many talk of the departed as if they had in dying opened their eyes to the fullest glories, or horrors of eternal doom, as if they were now aroused to a growing knowledge and experience of unseen worlds, with such full award as hardly to need a resurrection and a judgment day.

It is only necessary to say that all such gaudy pictures of the intermediate state are purely fanciful, unwarranted by anything in the Word of God. Others go to the other extreme, trying to believe and teach that in death we go all out of being, with no soul, no faculty, no experience, no character, no self-identity left. This terribly sad theory (notwithstanding the ry protestations of its Bible ad- -s) does seem to leave us neces- to the infidel's "eternal sleep" :ly non-existence, from which can be no awakening. rst definition of death—"a loss ;" or of life—we adopt as the and Scriptural one. We do ve that Adam had any exist- ore God made him of the dust arth, and that death resolved k precisely to the same condition as before his creation; and that ever to live or to be again, he must have a resurrection from the dead. That when God said to Adam "dust thou art and unto dust shalt thou return," he included the real Adam; a death so "complete, full, and overwhelming" as to leave no surviving Adam or soul whatever.

To speak of this as the infidel's doctrine of "eternal sleep," "from which there can be no awaking," may do for Sadducees, who "know not the Scripture nor the power of God;" but not for those who claim to believe that God will raise the dead. Berating the views of those who may differ from us, is not courteous under all circumstances, neither is it calculated to convince any one of the errors they may hold, and lead them to the light. The safest place to walk is on God's word of promise, whether it be the middle or extreme.

Death is not spoken of as "a sleep" because it leaves the faculties still existing in a dormant state. This sleep is predicated of the whole man, body as well as soul. We know the bodily faculties suffer in death an entire destruction, and yet this loss of their existence in death is called sleep. Hence it follows that all the faculties of man in death may suffer a like loss, or destruction, and this condition be called a sleep. The Scriptures speaking in close connection of death "as a sleep," say, "Thou turnest man to destruction, and sayest return ye children of men." The destruction of man in death, we regard as complete, ending everything pertaining to the living man, so that he exists only in the original elements of which he was composed. The Scriptures speak of this condition "as a sleep," from the fact that man is to be raised out of it, be brought back to being and to life, with a soul, faculties, experience, character, and self-identity, as perfect as when but awakened from "a sleep." To say that from such a state, "there can be no awaking," betrays either a disposition to idly cavil with terms, or a want of modest deference to the power of the Almighty. We fail to see how to most minds there can be anything very satisfactory or comforting in such an existent soul state as the writer seems to advocate.

Its character is left quite indefinite. He refers to it in this way: Its "active consciousness" may be "more or less." An "existence without any great consciousness of it;" one "without any remembered consciousness at all." It little matters "how much or how little a dead man thinks." From all which we infer that while he admits death to be "a sleep," he does not admit it to be a very sound sleep; a kind of dreamy state, half asleep and half awake. A very unsatisfactory state, indeed, to all who covet refreshing rest. We never seem to arise from it the better; hence, sound sleep and sweet sleep are closely allied to each other; the sounder the sweeter to the weary ones. This sleep, too, is to be in the grave, in the dust of the earth. Daniel says they that "sleep in the dust of the earth shall awake." Christ says, they that "are in the graves shall hear his voice." This could not be, unless they slumbered there. Let this sleep, then, be profound, this will dispel all gloom, annihilate all time, till the morning dawn, the trumpet sound, and we awake to an immortal life.

The writer evidently betrays himself into the acknowledgment that it is not, after all so much the state of man in death he would contend for, as it is how, or with what faculties he shall come out of it. He is anxious to fix things so that the man will come out all right. He fears if he gets very far gone in this sleep, he will never wake up at all. That his personality and his faculties must be kept intact, or the man will be gone beyond the possibility of recovery. He says, "what we wish to know is whether there is such a man still in being to have an afterwards beyond." Making this "afterwards beyond," or a future life, to depend on his being kept "still in being" during the death state. And further, that should man in death "cease entirely to be as a rational soul," there would be nothing "left to awaken but a senseless or idiotic form" That unless a man "still exist with full powers possessed though not in exercise," but ready "to be aroused to new recognitions and activity, he is clear gone past the hope of recovery." All these expressions are looking to man in the death-state, with the idea if he is not then in the possession of his faculties, though inactive, God can never restore him to life with his former identity. Now, to argue as to what the condition of man is in death on this ground, is simply to discuss the question, is God omnipotent, which we do not propose to do.

We had thought to strike out so much of the above letter as refers to Elder Whitmore's work, but concluded to insert it, and leave Bro. Whitmore to defend himself, which he is well able to do.

A Valuable Dog.

The following story is told by the Portland Press, relative to a dog that is kept in the lighthouse on Mount Desert Island: The keeper's little boy, nine years old, strayed away, and was missing for about two hours. The mother went out of doors and called to him, when the dog in response, ran up with the boy's wet cap in his mouth, and signified by his action that he desired her to follow him. The mother, alarmed, called the father, who was sleeping in the house, and they both followed the dog as quickly as possible. Down by the shore, on a rock, the little boy was lying insensible, his clothes wet, as if he had been dragged from the water. After long efforts, in which the dog rendered all the assistance he could in his mute way, the boy was resuscitated, and afterwards told his story. He was on the beach, gathering shells, when a large wave came in and carried him off in the undertow. The dog jumped in after him but the waves prevented him from reaching the boy for some minutes. He seized him by the leg of his trowsers, and tried to drag him ashore, but the cloth tore in his teeth, and the boy said he had an indistinct recollection of the dog coming down below the surface for him again, and that was the last thing he was concious of. It seems that the dog had dragged the child upon the rock out of the waves, and had tried to restore him. When he heard the mother's call he took the cap to inform her, as well as he could, of the affairs, and hasten assistance.

The Prayer of Faith.

The writer heard the late aged and venerable Rev. Dr. Cleaveland, of Boston, relate the following incident, illustrating the power of believing prayer:

In a revival of religion in the church of which he was pastor, he was visited one morning by a member of his church, a widow, whose only son was a sailor.

With a voice trembling with emotion, she said, "Dr. Cleaveland, I have called to entreat you to join with me in praying that the wind may change." He looked at her in silent amazement! "Yes," she exclaimed earnestly, "my son has gone on board his vessel; they sail to-night unless the wind should change."

"Well Madam," replied the doctor, I will pray that your son may be converted on this voyage; but to pray that God would alter the laws of his universe on his account, I fear is presumptuous.

"Doctor," she replied, "my heart tells me differently. God's spirit is here. Souls are being converted here. You have a meeting this evening, and if the wind should change, John would stay and go to it; and I believe if he went he would be converted. Now, if you cannot join me, I must pray alone, for he must stay."

"I will pray for his conversion," said the doctor.

On his way to t[illegible] glanced at the weat[illegible] his surprise the wi[illegible] [illegible]nged, and it was blowing la[illegible]ward.

On entering his cr[illegible]ded vestry, he soon observed John, [illegible]ng upon the front seat. The young man seemed to drink in every word that was said, rose to be prayed for, and attended the inquiry meeting.

When he sailed from port the mother's prayers had been answered; he went a Christian.

The pastor had learned a lesson he never forgot. The Lord had said "O woman, great is thy faith, be it unto thee, even as thou wilt."—American Messenger.

Father.—Why, what have you to do with the river rising?

Little Daughter—.A great deal, father, for then the boats would run.

Father.—And what have you to do with the boats' running my child, eh?

Little Daughter.—They would bring the cotton, father.

Father.—(Looking over his spectacles.) And what have you to do, darling, with cotton bales?

Little Daughter.—Why, if the cotton was down you would be able to sell it, you know, dear father, (smilingly.)

Father.—And what then?

Little Daughter.—You would have plenty of money.

Father.—Well.

Little Daughter.—(Laying her little hand on his shoulder, and looking up into his face.) Then you could pay mother that twenty dollar gold piece you borrowed from her, you know, father.

Father.—And what then, my child?

Little Daughter.—Then mother could pay Aunt Sarah the ten dollars she owes her.

Father.—Ay, indeed! and what then.

Little Daughter.—Then Aunt Sarah could pay sister Jane the dollar she promised to give her on New Year's, but didn't because she didn't have any cotton—any money, I mean, father.

Father.—Well what else? (He lays down the newspaper, and looks at her cautiously, with a half-smile.)

Little Daughter.—Sister Jane will then pay brother John his fifty cents back, and he said he would give me the half dime he owes me, and two dimes to buy marbles; and this is what I want the river to rise for, and the big boats to run. And I owe nurse the other dime, and must pay my debts.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

AT HOME.

—Texas is having a plague of grasshoppers, which are devouring all the vegetable substance of that State.

—The latest news is that the Modocs are encamped in the Snow Mountains twenty miles South of Morass Lake and Hasbrouck's command started in that direction on the 16th.

—A severe hail and wind storm passed over St. Louis a few days ago, prostrating fences and chimneys, breaking windows and doing incalculable injury to gardens and orchards in the suburbs.

Hasbrook has overtaken the Modocs, and a lively fight ensued—five Modocs were reported killed—ten squaws and a pappoose were captured. The Indians were driven southward on the Ticknor road toward the Pitt river country. Trails have been discovered showing that the Modocs and Pitt river Indians have been in constant communication. It is believed the Pitt river Indians are with Jack now.

—The chief sufferer by the destructive fire at Aurora Ill. this week is the Chicago, Burlington and Quincy Railroad, which had its main work shops there. Beyond a dwelling house or two no private property was destroyed. The company lost a part of its shops, a number of cars,—among them some palace-cars,—and other property. The loss will not be less than $222,000. About three hundred mechanics are thrown out of employment, and considerable suffering will follow.

—[illegible]ansas paper, in alluding to the butcheries [illegible]etrated by the Bender family and their acc[illegible]lices, says that many known villians ha[illegible]een sent to the Kansas Penitentiary wi[illegible] the past three years from the section lately inhabited by these outlaws, but that the miscreants were always pardoned out by the Governor. The abuse of Executive clemency in every State in the Union has become an evil that demands correction. When a lawyer fails to clear a criminal, his next step is to secure a pardon, which he generally gets within a trivial lapse of time.

—If Esquimaux Joe's story may be believed there is little doubt that poison, and not paralysis, was the cause of Capt. Hall's death. Capt. Hall, he says, returned from his last sled well and happy, but was taken sick after drinking some coffee. He vomited, his throat swelled, he could not drink, and he was tortured by burning pains. Joe says that Capt. Hall told him that there was something bad in his coffee. His sickness lasted two weeks. During part of this time he studied his medical books to discover the meaning of his symptoms, and came to the conclusion that he had been poisoned. Joe's account is corroborated by one of the Icelanders accompanying the expedition. Who administered the poison he does not state; but it is evident that his suspicions point to Buddington, the sailing-master, who refused, through cowardice, or some other motive, to allow the expedition to proceed any further north, and compelled Capt. Hall to retrace his steps.

ABROAD.

—Snow fell in the north of England May 18th.

—The German Government has resolved to expel the members of the religious orders of the Redemptorists, Lazarists, Congregations of the Holy Ghost and Sacred Heart, and the occupants of close convents from the country within the coming six months

—George Smith, of the Daily Telegraph; correspondent in Assyria, has found the King's library at Nineveh, and discovered numerous valuable fragments, particularly the missing portions of the broken tablet containing the history of the deluge, hitherto deciphered in the British Museum.

—A dispatch from St. Petersburg, Russia, says that there is no truth in the report that Khiva has been taken, and the Khan is a prisoner. There is much anxiety in St. Petersburg concerning the ultimate success of the expedition against Khiva. Two of the columns have been delayed by heavy snow-storms, and the third, which forms the advance, is still behind.

The New Song.

BY P. B.

The song of the redeemed, who were once slaves of sin, but are now ransomed from its power. The fetters that galled them are removed and the chains that held them are broken. They are free. And they sing a new song, the simple story of their deliverance, and praise to their redeemer.

"Thou art worthy." Worthy a position above that of man or angel. Worthy to carry on the work of God in sending abroad light and truth, and conducting the warfare against sin and Satan. "Worthy to take the book and open the seals thereof:" worthy to carry out the work of God in giving salvation to obedient ones.

"For thou wast slain." He had been a sacrifice for sin. He had an experience by which he knew the strength of sin, and also the power of God. He was not a novice. He knew the devices of the enemy in his own personal experience and therefore he understood where he would have to meet the enemy, and what strength it would need to repel him. He also knew how to use the power by which he could overcome Satan, for he had suffered himself even unto death, and yet had overcome unto eternal life. Though the 'Lion of the tribe of Judah," yet he had become a "lamb slain," and therefore he had the knowledge of experience, and was worthy.

"And hast redeemed us." Some had been redeemed from sin already. Was he not worthy to redeem more? Was not he who had started such a glorious work just the one to finish it? Could not he who had delivered the chief of sinners, and made him free, also "save to the uttermost all who put their trust in him"? Indeed he could. He can now. "Weep not" O, sinner! He is able. Trust him.

"Hast made us kings and priests." We are conquerors. "More than conquerors." We prevail mightily, but it is all Jesus. He causes us to prevail. He is worthy to go on with his work as the "captain of our salvation." He has made us priests and we commune with God. By him we have access to the throne. He leads us right into the presence of God in spirit, and we dwell in the "holiest of the holies."

"And we shall reign on the earth." Yes, above and beyond all the past and the present, there is a coming and power which we are to share forever in the future kingdom when the glory of God shall fill all the earth. Then we shall reign and triumph forever over all our foes. The "Lamb" who died for us will be the one to give us the crown of life in the "kingdom under the whole heaven." He then is worthy. The new song is true. Let us bow down before the "Lamb" and adore him.

"Let every kindred every tribe,
On this terrestrial ball,
To him all majesty ascribe,
And crown him Lord of all."

Persevering Prayer.

The wife of a Wiltshire laborer being converted, her husband became a bitter persecuter, and because his wife would not relinquish the service of God, he frequently turned her out of doors in the night, and during the winter season. The wife did not expose this cruelty to her neighbors, but, on the contrary, to avoid observation, she went into the adjacent fields and betook herself to prayer. Her only encouragement was that with God all things are possible; she therefore resolved to set apart one hour every day to pray for the conversion of her husband. This she was enabled to do without missing a single day for a whole year. Seeing no change in her husband, she formed a second resolution to persevere six months longer, which she did up to the last day, when she retired at about twelve o'clock as usual, and as she thought for the last time. Fearing that her wishes might be contrary to the wishes of God, she resolved to call no more upon him; her desire not being granted, her expectation appeared to be cut off. The same day her husband returned from his labor in a state of deep dejection, and instead of sitting down as usual to his dinner, he proceeded directly to his chamber. His wife followed, and heard to her grateful astonishment that he who used to mock had returned to pray. He went back again to his labor till evening, and when he came home his wife affectionately asked him, "What is the matter?" "About twelve o'clock this morning," said he, "a passage of scripture was deeply impressed upon my mind, which I cannot get rid of, and I am sure I am lost." His wife encouraged him to pray, but he replied, "it is of no use; there is no forgiveness for me!" Smitten with remorse at the recollection of his former conduct, he said to her, "Will you forgive me?" She replied, "Oh yes." "Will you pray for me?" "Oh yes." "Will you pray for me now?" "That I will with all my heart." They instantly fell on their knees, and wept and made supplication. His tears of penitence mingled with her tears of gratitude and joy.—The New Clyclopædia of Anecdote.

The Church a Home.

There is here and there an enthusiasm which ignores church organization altogether, contemns all formularies, rejects the ministry, and asks that men be let alone with their Bibles, to worship in unembarrassed isolation. Suppose that a house leaks in water through the roof, or lets in wind through a crevice in the wall, or has some defective timbers, shall the family imperfectly sheltered, destroy the structure entirely and take to the outer rain, the cold, and the storm, each member for himself? Suppose that because the church is deficient in some part of its superstructure, admits a little frost at times, has a shelving cornice, a crooked post, a knotty plank, shall Christians batter it down and disperse, shelterless, single, and alone, to contend with such a frowning world as this? With such human nature as ours built in, could perfection be expected? If the church were disorganized what confusion, disorder and loss! No, we are members one of another, compacted and built on one foundation. Religious life depends more on the church than some persons are willing to admit. Fellowship overcomes many a difficulty, quickens many a conviction, expands many a charity, and saves many a soul. Christ has established a church—a building—a visible structure—and is himself the corner-stone. The disciples of him who had not where to lay his head shall never be unhoused.—Workday Christianity.

Correspondence.

From A. N. Seymour.

BROTHER COLLINS:—I see that the responsibility of taking the supervision of the "TIMES" has fallen upon you, at least for a season and time. May the blessing of the great Head of the church attend your every thought, and truth, prosperity, and righteousness attend your efforts, and also those of your co-laborers. In order to enjoy the blessing of the Lord, and prosperity in all our borders, there must be a determination on the part of all to work together in love and harmony, and according to the original programme so clearly marked out in God's great map of christian civilization and progress. There has been too much going to war, on selfish motives, and principles with the "enemies of the cross of Christ," God's directions have not been strictly adhered to. Leaders have not submitted to God's arrangement in conducting the christian warfare. Hence the confusion and demoralization so plainly discoverable and prevalent. All would do well to take a survey of God's counsel and dealings with ancient Israel subsequent to their deliverance from Egyptian bondage, their pilgrimages in the wilderness and their subsequent possession of the "promised land" by the extirpation of the nations so much given to idolatry. Israel, in their progressive movements, always met with success when ever they followed out to the letter God's plans and ways. But whenever they digressed by adopting in part their own schemes and mode of controversy with contending nations, he most thoroughly chastised their disobedience and very sad reverses followed at every digression. God by the Prophet Isaiah makes the following announcement to Israel. "Seek ye the Lord while he may be found, call ye upon him while he is near...For my thoughts are not your thoughts, neither are your ways my ways," saith the Lord. "For as the heavens are higher than the earth, so are my ways higher than your ways, and my thoughts than your thoughts." I would to God that the whole household of faith might willingly and cheerfully bow, and render due obedience to God's thoughts and ways for I believe the result would be most blessed, and the greatest of all earthly blessings would at once be enjoyed, the blessing of union, love, and fraternal regard for all members of the "body of Christ;" in case that such a desirable union could be brought about what would be witnessed?

1st. Every creed under heaven would be cast to the "moles and bats," that has so wonderfully deranged christian society and set them at variance and war with each other, instead of the common enemy.

2nd. All discordant names and selfish principles would be at once dismissed and wafted to the winds as a matter of great evil, and of no consequence whatever.

3rd. All would at once adopt God's thoughts and ways and build upon the original Scriptural platform, and walk in all the old paths, as the "church of Christ" and unitedly face the common foe, instead of each other.

4th. The church of Christ" (thus united), would be clothed with power, beauty, holiness, praise, salvation and honor, with which to wield the sword of the Spirit.

5th. Multitudes now in open rebellion to God's government would yield a peaceful obedience to the mandates of heaven and become the happy recipients of heavenly grace and heirs of eternal salvation. But it is said, this is all right, but then such a state of things never will exist in this world; of course not, so long as a large majority of religionists are as unwilling to submit to God's thoughts and ways as the idolatrous heathen are, they must submit however, or meet with God's displeasure in the coming day of the Lord Jesus, for Jesus says "not every one that says Lord, Lord, shall enter the kingdom of heaven, but he that doeth the will of my Father which is in heaven." I hope and pray that there may be a coming up—a coming together—a concentration of all effort, and influence a consolidation of all true and honest souls upon the one and only foundation laid in Zion for the salvation of man, so that a united effort can be put forth for the comfort and prosperity of the church, and the conversion of unredeemed men. In union there is strength, in division there is weakness. "Be strong in the Lord and in the power of his might."

From J. X. Dillier, David's Island, N. Y.

I have lately had the honor of communicating through your columns to the readers of the TIMES a synopsis of my life. To-day I beg leave to make a few comments on an article which appeared in your last week's paper, entitled "the Anti-christ;" and I hope my humble opinion on this subject will be favored with a space in your esteemed paper. Your correspondent seems to be greatly impressed with the belief of a personal antichrist in the form of the head and leader of the catholic church.

Now, if my limited understanding conceives the meaning of the Scriptures on this anti-christ therein predicted, he, the "man of sin" must go in harmony with triumphant infidelity and falsehood, the characteristic signs of the last days and must therefore be at the head of the persecuting of christianity. This is not the case with the catholic church, who through all centuries has been more or less persecuted and whose pontiff at present is overladen with ignominy and is a prisoner.

It actually goes against the feelings of an unprejudiced heart to charge the poor old man, with such an amount of iniquity, and although I am as firm in the Advent faith as your worthy correspondent, yet I cannot endorse views, that I believe contrary to christian charity and saturated with prejudice.

I will not set forth, in how far your correspondent construes correctly the doctrine of the catholic church, it is a time requiring work, but would only ask: if catholicity is anti-christianism, where has been the flock of the true Shepherd before the dawning of protestantism of which our Lord spoke to Peter after his ascension.

History fails to prove the existence of any other christian organization before the protestant reform, and never charges the catholic church with opposition to Christ; on the contrary, proves the church to be the one, upholding the divine teachings with her heart's blood and but for her, christianity and the knowledge of the scriptures would would be bankrupt.

My dearly beloved father, with many of his acquaintances, is a member of the Catholic church, and I think as fervent a believer in the divinity of Jesus and of his sole mediatorship as any of our Advent brothers, and would very likely find a vice versa application of the passages quoted by your correspondent.

Atheism and the heresies of our age, are in my humble opinion better fitted for comparison with "anti-christianism" and secret organizations, such as Freemasonry and others, which go hand in hand with the denying theories, bear a more striking resemblance to the picture drawn of the anti-christ by the apostles.

May I take the liberty of asking your opinion on this subject? Any information and enlightenment thereon will be thankfully received.

From J. N. A. Billingsley, Franklin, Izard Co., Ark.

I have been a believer in the Bible seventeen years, and a member of the Baptist church sixteen years, and have read THE TIMES and other publications of Advent doctrine about one year; and I have enjoyed more light during the one year, than I had in all the sixteen previous years. I can better appreciate the truths of the Bible, from the fact that I better understand them.

I introduced this "new doctrine" in this section a year ago. I then first came in possession of it myself through Br. Crosby, and since that time I have advocated the doctrine privately where ever I went and have given away my books and papers to all that would read them. I am persecuted, but it does not hurt me, my Savior was persecuted. Some have even told me that I was injuring myself. I thought I might be injuring my popularity among men, but I care not for that.

To contend earnestly for the faith once delivered to the saints, I think is the duty of all christians, therefore, I care not for earthly losses. I have never heard an adventist preach, but greatly desire it, and would be glad if we could obtain the services of an efficient preacher. Br Crosby has promised to visit our section, several times, but has been hindered unavoidably. I think there might be much good done here.

We desire an interest in your prayers that we may contend more earnestly for the faith, and that we may be more zealous for all the truths of the Bible, and that we may be instrumental in the hands of our great Federal Head in spreading those truths in humbleness and self-denial.

From J. F. Adair, High Point, Iowa.

When I came into Decatur county last winter, I found a few that sympathized with us, though they were rather hearers of the word than doers of the work. Some of our immaterialist friends told me that they were in hopes that we could get some certain ones into the Advent church, for they knew they would never be able to get them into any orthodox churches, for they had been trying it for years, and therefore gave it up. If we could win them to the Savior they would say "Amen" to it. So in January last we commenced a protracted meeting which lasted two weeks. The result was that forty-three took a stand on the Lord's side. But they did not say "Amen;" but they have said a great many other things which were not Christ-like. But we bore it all patiently, knowing that those who will live godly in Christ Jesus shall suffer persecution. But notwithstanding, the truth is having free course and is prevailing. By the help of the Lord we will press the battle to the very gates of the enemy. Never did I feel more encouraged to proclaim the message of the soon coming King than at the present time, seeing that the rewards are so soon to be given.

From D. D. Reed, Santa Clara, Cal.

We have just closed one of the best meetings at Vallejo, that we have ever enjoyed on this coast. Br. Grant was there for three weeks, and the Lord has greatly blessed his labors. Hard hearted sinners were converted and ten baptized. The church has been greatly blessed and never stood so well before.

The pastor of the Methodist church invited us to hold our meetings in that church. We did so he laboring with us. The doctrines that make us a distinct people were preached clear and strong.

I thank God that Br Grant ever came to this coast. I understood before he came, that he neglected preaching doctrines, and confined himself entirely to practical sermons but I find it is not so. I have been with him the most of the time this winter, and if he is not standing complete in Christ, and in possession of the Holy Spirit, I do not know anything about the workings of the blessed Spirit.

To say the least, God is greatly blessing his labors.

I do wish there were more such faithful men in the field. What we want now is greater conformity to Christ, and more godly living, so we can have power with God. Then we shall have power with the people. "Seeing we look for such things what manner of persons ought we to be in all holy conversation and godliness." Without holiness we cannot see God. Let us put away our sins, and all filthiness of the flesh, perfecting holiness in the fear of the Lord.

We cannot enjoy religion unless we are striving to make an entire consecration of all to God. We cannot enjoy the spirit of Christ and at the same time be indulging in any known sin. God commands us to "awake to righteousness and sin not." "Put ye on the Lord Jesus, and make no provision for the flesh to fulfill the lusts thereof.

The Great Theme.

The great theme of Christian hope and promise is the coming again of our Lord Jesus Christ. A distinguished English divine states, after a careful examination, that at least one verse in every thirty contained in the New Testament refers to this subject. If he had included all the allusions to this great event the proportion would have been much larger. There are in all seven thousand nine hundred and fifty-nine verses in the New Testament, and more than three hundred and twenty of them point forward undoubtedly to the appearing again of our Lord Jesus Christ. This fact is very significant, and proves to us the mind of the Spirit with regard to the prominence and frequency with which this matter should come before the minds of Christians, and be handled in our public ministrations. It was certainly one of the chief topics of apostolic instruction and early Christian hope; and it is to be taken as a serious defect in our modern Christianity that so little is made of it, knowing as we do that it is a vital part of our creed, and most important in all its bearings.

Ponder, then, the fact itself, that our blessed Lord is certainly to return again to our world. He is now at the right hand of the Father; but from thence he shall come to judge the quick and the dead. Too prone are we to think of him only as an historic personage, who lived many centuries ago and has long since passed away, like Pharaoh or Alexander—that all that concerns him relates to times far removed in the past, with no present reality—and that all we have to do with him now is the observance of those institutions and precepts which he gave to the world in his earthly lifetime. We do not seem to feel as we ought that the grave which closed over him for a little while could not hold him, that he now lives, that he is at this moment engaged making ready for a return hither, and that he will come again in like manner as he was seen going into heaven. And yet it is even so. The Lord himself, even the crucified Man of Nazareth, shall descend from heaven with a shout and with the voice of the archangel and with the trump of God. His feet, once torn with nails, shall stand again upon the mountains of earth; and they that pierced him shall look upon him. The terrified soldiers who saw him die, the blaspheming Pharisees who thirsted for his blood, and rejoiced when they saw it spilled, the infidel horde who in every age has insulted his name and persecuted his church, and every saint, and every one who reads these lines, shall behold him, the Son of man, come down again to earth. Despisers of his Word—neglecters of his gospel—false professors of his name—and resisters of his grace, who have continually turned their backs upon his calls of mercy—all shall see him. For he cometh to judge the earth.

Ponder, also, the solemnity of that great event. It is related of a great French preacher that he was once called to deliver the funeral address of a prince. It was an impressive occasion. All the great ones of the land were there. Majesty itself, with all its royal surroundings, sat clothed in sackcloth and weighed down with grief.

All the glory and grandeur of human greatness had shrunk away into nothingness. Only grief and dismay filled and pervaded the assembly. He arose to speak, but utterance seemed denied him. He stood abstracted and lost. A long and awful pause ensued, until breathing itself seemed to be suspended. And when every heart was thrilling he broke the silence by a scarcely audible whisper—"There's nothing great but God!" The effect was overwhelming.

But if we will just go forward a little in our thoughts to the sort of scene that is to be enacted when the day of Christ's return has come—at the manner in which all greatness and glory shall wilt down before his divine presence—at the sort of feeling which then shall take possession of the great congregation of mankind—it will hardly need a greater master of eloquence to thrill into our souls that there's nothing solemn but the judgment!

There are, indeed, many other solemn things and scenes well fitted to move the profoundest depths of human awe; but they are scarcely to be named in comparison with the tremendous solemnity of the day of judgment.

The thunder storm is very solemn. When the quick arrows of heaven flash forth in their power—when the deep crash of the thunderbolt startles up communities—when the dread artillery of God rushes along the sky and rumbles around the world, it is a time of awful sensations. But what is that to the far-sounding crash which shall startle the very dead in their graves and arouse even the long-forgotten into life again!

The earthquake is solemn, when cities totter without a warning and kingdoms rend and islands flee away. But what is that to the tremour which shall convulse our globe and shake heaven itself, when the things which are temporal shall be swept away!

The volcano is solemn. When its cone of fire, stirred into fury by some spirit of the under-world, shoots to the heavens, and from its burning entrails pours out its rushing lava over the whole countries, deluging whole cities in its course, and burning up flying populations, the scene is appalling! But what is that to the conflagration which shall consume the proudest works of man and overwhelm the armies at which the world quaked!

The funeral of a dear and bonored friend is solemn. The heart throbs and the tears flow and the bodily powers almost refuse to do their wonted offices under the intensity of the soul's bitter laceration. But what is that to the obsequies of the world itself, when all this present scene of things shall go down to an eternal grave!

It is solemn and affecting to hear an earthly judge pronounce sentence upon the poor convict. But what is that to the sentence of the Judge eternal, which sends the impenitent to the prison-house of hell and gives over each guilty one to death eternal!

Who, who can do justice to such a theme!—London Quarterly Journal of Prophecy.

Bible in the Heart.

A poor Italian woman, a fruit-seller, had received the word of God in her heart, and become persuaded of the truth of it. Seated with her modest stall at the head of a bridge, she made use of every moment in which she was unoccupied with her small traffic, in order to study the sacred volume. "What are you reading there, my good woman?" Said a gentleman, one day, as he came up to her stall to purchase some fruit. "It is the Word of God," replied the fruit-vender. "The Word of God! Who told you that?" "He told me so himself." "Have you ever spoken with him then?" The poor woman felt a little embarrassed, more especially as the gentleman insisted on her giving him some proof of what she believed. Unused to discussion, and feeling greatly at a loss for arguments, she at length exclaimed, looking upward, "Can you prove to me, sir, there is a sun up in the sky?" Prove it!" replied he, "Why, the best of proof is that it warms me, and that I can see its light." "So it is with me," she replied, joyously; "the proof of this book's being the Word of God is, that it lights and warms my soul."

HELPING OURSELVES IN HELPING OTHERS.—I was once walking with a farmer through a field, when he chanced to see a tall thistle on the other side of the fence. In an instant he sprang over the fence, and cut it off close to the ground. "Is that your field?" I asked. "Oh no," said the former, "but bad weeds dont care much for fences, and if I should leave that thistle to blossom in my neighbor's field, I should have plenty of my own." I wish all fathers and mothers would think of that. The evil weeds in your neighbor's field will scatter the seeds in your own. So it is worth while to pull them up in self-defense. Try to influence the little untaught child to follow the good, the true, and beautiful, not only for his own sake but lest he sow evil seed in the heart of your own child, in spite of all your careful tending. Every weed pulled up in your neighbor's field is a dangerous enemy driven away from your own.—Good Words.

RECEIVE Christ into your heart, and he will receive you into his kingdom.

Our Young Folks.

Little Barbara's Hymn.

A mother stood by her spinning wheel,
Winding the yarn on an ancient reel;
As she counted the threads in the twilight dim,
She murmured the words of a quaint old hymn:
"Whether we sleep or whether we wake,
We are his who gave his life for our sake."

Little Barbara, watching the spinning wheel,
And keeping time with her toe and heel
To the hum of the thread and her mother's song,
Sang, in her own sweet voice, ere long,
"Whether we sleep or whether we wake,
We are his who gave his life for our sake."

That night, in her dreams, as she sleeping lay,
Over and over the scenes of the day
Came back, till she seemed to hear again
The hum of the thread and the quaint old strain;
"Whether we sleep or whether we wake,
We are his who gave his life for our sake."

Next morning, with bounding heart and feet,
Little Barbara walked in the crowded street;
And up to her lips, as she passed along,
Rose the tender words of her mother's song:
"Whether we sleep or whether we wake,
We are his who gave his life for our sake."

A wanderer sat on a wayside stone,
Weary and sighing, sick and alone;
But he raised his head with a look of cheer,
As the gentle tones fell on his ear.
"Whether we sleep, or whether we wake,
We are his who gave his life for our sake."

Toiling all day in a crowded room
A worker stood at her noisy loom;
A voice came up through the ceaseless din,
These words at the window floated in:
"Whether we sleep, or whether we wake,
We are his who gave his life for our sake."

A mourner sat by her loved one's bier,
The sun seemed darkened, the world was drear;
But her sobs were stilled, and her cheek grew dry,
As she listened to Barbara passing by;
"Whether we sleep, or whether we wake,
We are his who gave his life for our sake."

A sufferer lay on his bed of pain,
With burning brow and throbbing brain;
The notes of the child were heard once more,
As she chanted low at his open door:
"Whether we sleep, or whether we wake,
We are his who gave his life for our sake."

Once and again, as the day passed by,
And the shades of the evening time drew nigh,
Like the voice of a friend or the carol of birds,
Came back to his thoughts those loving words:
"Whether we sleep, or whether we wake,
We are his who gave his life for our sake."

Alike in all hearts, as the years went on,
The infant voice rose up anon,
In the grateful words that cheered their way,
Of the hymn little Barbara sang that day:
"Whether we sleep, or whether we wake.
We are his who gave his life for our sake."

Perhaps when the labor of life is done,
And they lay down their burdens one by one,
Forgetting forever these days of pain,
They will take up together the sweet refrain:
"Whether we sleep, or whether we wake,
We are his who gave his life for our sake."

YOUR mother is your best earthly friend. The world may wilfully do you many wrongs, your mother never; the world may persecute you while living, and when dead plant the ivy and nightshade of slander upon your grassless grave—but your mother will love and cherish you while living, and if she survive you will weep for you when dead, such tears as none but a mother can weep. Love your mother!

It is Good to Trust in the Lord.

WRITTEN FOR THE CHILDREN.

What I wrote you last week was illustrative of the text, "Cast thy bread upon the waters: for thou shalt find it after many days" (Eccles. 11: 1); and now, according to promise, I will tell you something about our homeward journey.

When we left A. we had to cross a river and take seats in an old-fashioned stage-coach. I suppose many of you have never seen such a vehicle, but you have all seen pictures of one. They are something like a hack, only larger and very strong, and have a seat in the middle so that nine persons can be seated very comfortably. It is very pleasant riding in a coach when the road is good and the company of the right kind. I have spent a great many delightful hours in such a conveyance. There was just room in the stage for us, and as we were the last passengers of course we had to take the front seat, and this brought us face to face with the other passengers. One of these was a woman ("lady," she no doubt called herself, but a real lady is never conceited or proud as this person was), who was going with her two children to Boston; and as we were all going in the same boat she asked me if I expected to have a state room. I told her that my husband had engaged one for me. "Well," she replied, "If that is all you have to depend upon you will be without a state room: my husband sent a gentleman to get a state room for me, so I am sure of it." I had noticed that when the stage stopped a man with very red nose and bad smelling breath came and spoke to her or to the children, but I did not think he was a "gentleman." But, as I said, the woman insisted so strongly that there was no hope of my having even a berth (as there was a great deal of travel at that season) that I feared she might be right; but as she seemed pleased to think I was to be disappointed, and as I knew it did not concern her in the least, I took little notice of it and trusted that God would take care of me in some way. The woman finding me inclined to silence, contented herself in asking questions of Eliza. She was a good-looking person, well dressed, and but for her impertinence and the desire she manifested to impress me with a sense of her importance, I might have taken her for a lady.

When we reached the city where we were to remain for the night, she stopped at a hotel were liquor was sold, while I went to a temperance house. The next day, owing to some mistake, the carriage did not come for us till it was so late that I feared we should be left; but Mary, the chambermaid, hurried up the driver so that we reached the wharf in time,—although I was the last person taken on board.—One moment more, the boat was backed from her wharf and we were on our way. I cannot tell you how thankful I felt to our heavenly Father for guiding us as he had done, and from the good news I heard from Mary, I felt encouraged to work for Jesus every where, feeling (as I now know) that it is not in vain that we labor for him. As soon as I was safely on board I went to the stewardess and asked her if there was a state room reserved for me. She inquired my name and then led me directly to a neat, pretty rooom. I could have cried for joy and thankfulness. God is good always to all, but especially to those who love and trust him. He never never leaves them nor forsakes them. Glory to his holy name!

We had not been long on the way when there was a knock on my door. Eliza opened it and there was my stage companion who had sneered at the idea of my having a stateroom. She said she was sick and could not get even a berth, and asked if I would be so kind as to let her and her little girl lie down on my bed. I made them welcome and they staid a long time. The boat was so much crowded that there was not room for all to lie down, even on the floor. There was a dense fog, so that guns were fired and bells rung every few minutes, but I did not feel afraid, for God was guiding me and I was not incommoded by the crowd. The next day when we reached Boston my husband was one of the first to come on board the boat, and as I left my room on the way to the carriage, I saw my stage companion for the last time, but how changed her appearance! She had been obliged to sit up all night (as she told Eliza), was sick and and forlorn; her dress was crumpled, her hair frowzy, and if Eliza had not told me who she was I should scarcely have known her. Surely, I thought, Solomon was right: "Pride goeth before destruction and a haughty spirit before a fall."—Aunt Sarah, in Herald.

Obituary.

GILBERT.—Died May 7, 1873, Sister Rebecca Gilbert aged about 51 years.

Sister Rebecca set out to serve the Lord in the morning of life and united with the M. E. church. Was married to Brother A. A. Gilbert twelve years ago. Shortly after they came to this city and joined the Advent Christian church, then in its infancy. She was exemplary in her profession, being punctual in her attendance on the public means of grace, and ministering to the necessities of the saints, in whose house many of the traveling brethren have found a home. Her sickness was short but severe. Four weeks ago she attended church in this city for the last time. She leaves a husband and two children to mourn their loss.

Words of comfort were spoken by the writer from 1 Thess. 4. Is assisted by Elder Ramer.

Winona, Minn. T. E. ALLEN.

NICHOL.—Fell asleep in Jesus, in Charlotte, Mich., May 6, 1873, Br. N. [illegible] Aged 43 years.

Br. Nichol leaves a loving wife and four children to mourn his death; but they mourn not as those having no hope. P. HOLLER.

Notices.

Michigan State Campmeeting.

As the time is drawing near for our State Campmeeting, I would say in behalf of the Committee that due arrangments will be made in season and particulars published. Let all the friends of the cause prepare to turn out to the yearly meeting.

The meeting will probably be on the line of the Ft. Wayne, Jackson and Saginaw Railroad, north of Jonesville. If any church not more than thirty miles from Jackson, wants the meeting at their place, write me at once, at Algansee, Branch Co., Michigan, and we will consider your place in comparison with our present site. J. R. PRESTON, Sec'y.

Book Notices, Etc.

THE JUNE NUMBER of that time-honored monthly, THE PHRENOLOGICAL JOURNAL, maintains its character for excellence and progression. Its long table of contents discloses a freightage at once timely, interesting, and edifying witness The Baron of Schwartz-Senborn, and the Vienna Exhibition; Empress Elizabeth of Austria, Socialism in America, an account of the different Communities from the earliest; One Kind of Ghosts; Emily Faithfull and her Mission; Born to be Hanged, with life-like illustration; A Neighbor of Mine—a good story; Respiration, or How to Breathe; The late Justus Von Liebig; Giving While Living—good advice; The Science of Music—a necessary branch of education; The Lady and the Crossing-sweeper, an illustrated poem; Books for all Minds, etc. This valuable Journal will commence its fifty seventh volume with the July number. Subscription price $3 00 a year, or on trial $1 50 for six months. 30 cents single numbers. S. R. Wells, New York.

AMONG the striking features of SCRIBNER'S for June are N. P Langford's entertaining and splendidly-illustrated account of "The Ascent of Mount Hayden;" a new picture and biography of Bret Harte; illustrated papers on Cornell University and "Our Postal Car Service;" a curious and important paper by Gen. Walker, superintendent of the late Census, on the relative increase, by births, of the "American Irish and American Germans;" "A Seance with Foster the Spiritualist;" and an article by Prof. Wise, the well known aeronaut, in opposition to the received theory of the tides. An interesting account of a visit to the Pope is given, and there are two capital short stories, "Capt. Luce's Enemy," by James T. McKay; and "An Old-Fashioned Story," by Marion Stockton; besides the continuation of Dr. Holland's "Arthur Bonnicastle," in which the hero has a New Year's experience. Dr. Holland, in "Topics of the Times" discusses "The Atlantic Disaster and its Lessons;" and "Confidence and Courtesy in Criticism." In the "Old Cabinet" there are half a dozen sonnets; "Home and Society" and Etchings are more than usually full, and in "Culture and Progress" there are, besides the book-reviews, articles on "The William Morris Window" and other art matters.

The "Great South" series will be commenced in the July number of SCRIBNER'S.

The "Union" Chapel, recently erected seven miles east of Anna Station, Union county, will be dedicated on the fourth Sunday in May, which will be the 24th. let the brethren from Southern Illinois rally once more, to partake of a rich feast of the Lord. Let the Equality church, especially, send a full delegation.

At that meeting it is proposed to revive our conference and work with a will for the cause of truth. Come, brethren and sisters, let us lay aside secular labor and attend to the Lord's work. F. A. CHILDS.

Boemerville, Sabbath, May 25.

New Rutland, LaSalle county, the first and third Sabbaths of each month. C. C. MARSTON, Pastor.

The Lord willing, the annual gathering of the Illinois Central Conference will convene at Clayton, on May 30, at 10 a. m.

We desire a general attendance of each member and delegates from each church. We hope also a general attendance of all brethren and sisters in the region around. Come, let us not "forsake the assembling of ourselves together, but exhort one another, and so much the more as we see the day approaching." Then let us not stay at home and bury our talent in the cornfield, but be up and doing, for the Master is approaching. A. S. CALKINS, Pres. O. D. GIBSON, Sec'y.

Lynnville, 10:30 a. m., first and second Sabbath's in each month

Pine River, eve. Feb. 2, and once in four weeks. ANSON BROWN.

Our State Campmeeting will be held at Merrimack, Sauk county, beginning Sunday, June 1, holding over two Sundays. Tents will be put up on the Saturday preceding. Let us have such a rally as Wisconsin has never witnessed before.

In addition to the big tent, which we have had on former occasions, Br. Hough will bring his large tent, in which special meetings can be held.

Merrimack is on the Northwestern R. R., (Madison division), and only ten miles from Sauk, where our meetings have been held for several years past.

Br. L. C. Collins will be with us, and it is probable that Br. Grant, on his return from California, will also be present to help us, besides several other preachers from other states have signified their intentions to come and enjoy the feast with us. We hope for a meeting that will be full of Gospel light and salvation. Let all come to work for God.

O S. Knapp, T. Barker, P. W. Hough, E. P. Graves, Wm. Sheldon, Committee.

The Annual Conference will hold a session in connection with the State Campmeeting, at Merrimack, Sauk county, which begins June 1. Let all the churches send delegates, or report by letter and let all ministers who cannot be present send letters to the secretary.

The first meeting will probably be held on Wednesday morning, June 4, so as to finish up business in time to give all a full chance to enjoy the campmeeting. WM. SHELDON, Sec'y.

The second Q M. for the same district will be held at the village of Northfield Rice county, on the St. Paul and Milwaukee R. R., commencing Friday eve., May 30. Br. Thurber, of Minneapolis, will be present. Br. Lowring will secure a place for holding the meetings. G. W. MILLER, Evangelist.

PENN.

East Troy, " " " " 28.
South Creek, " " Sunday June 1.
JOHN T. ONGLEY.

The next Q. M. of the Advent Christian Conference of Northern Pennsylvania and Southern New York will be held with the church at Little Marsh, Tioga county, commencing Thursday eve., June 5, 1873, to continue over the following Sabbath.

Let there be a general gathering of the friends of truth to this meeting. J. W. TAYLOR, Pres.

A. H. BRIGGS, Sec'y.

IOWA.

There will be, the Lord willing, a meeting of days held with the church at Boylan's Grove, Butler county, Iowa, commencing June 20, and holding over the Sabbath. The quarterly conference may hold its third session at this time. Elds. J. Ridley, S. S. Wilcox, H. H. and M. J. Janes, and others will be present to preach the Word.

We would have a general representation of the brethren and friends at this meeting. Come up then, brethren from Clear Lake, Charles City, Floyd, Clarkville, Parkersburgh, New Hartford, and indeed, from all that section. Come to labor for God and perishing souls. Time is short—it behooves us to work while the day lasts.

In behalf of the church, MARTHA J. JANES.

Warsaw, third Saturday in each month in the evening.

Duble S. H., 3 p. m., first Sunday in each month. J. F. ADAIR, Pastor.

The annual meeting of the Iowa Christian Conference will be held in connection with the campmeeting at New Hartford, Butler county, commencing June 11, 1873. Our constitution requires that all ministers report either in person or by letter, and we hope to see a general attendance as there will be some important business to attend to in which we are all interested. ALONZO RAYMOND, Pres.

N. F. EGGLESTON, Sec'y.

The Iowa Christian Mission Campmeeting will be held at New Hartford, Butler county, to commence June 6 and continue over two Sabbaths. Come one and all in the spirit of Christ to labor for him and to save men. Bring your friends and children; leave your hobby horse at home as we have neither room nor food for such animals. If you come on R. R. take the train that arrives about noon from the east and west. There will be no teams waiting for night trains. Should any come at night they will go north from the depot till the bridge is passed then turn to the right hand.

The mission tent will be on the ground as usual, and a number of family tents, also a 50 foot tent for the accommodation of those who do not come provided.

Bring bedding, also sheets to be used as curtains. Tent poles, straw, and hay will be furnished. Free tent lots, occupied last year, will not be reserved longer than Wednesday morning so those who wish them must come in time or notify us. We look for a large attendance, and the Lord Jesus Christ to be with us to bless the preaching of the Word. M. A. NEWCOMB, Sec'y.

The Q. M. of the First District of S. W. Iowa is to be held at Greenfield, Adair Co., commencing Friday eve., May 30, and hold over the following Sunday, June 1. WM. MURPHY, Sec'y.

The second Q. M. of the A. C. C., of Iowa, Manchester District, will be holden with the church at Manchester, Delaware Co., Iowa, commencing Friday eve., June 6, continuing over the Sabbath.

Important business will come before this meeting. The tent season is upon us, and so is the Ministerial Conference, or meeting of the Association at Norwood Park. All these must be attended to. Brethren, in the name of the God of Israel, will you see to this meeting, and do it now? Let every man, woman, and child within the boundary of this conference prepare to come to this meeting. Especially let the ministers be there. Come, brethren with the spirit of Jesus to labor. God will bless us, if we do his will. MARTHA J. JANES, Sec'y.

Clinton, Clinton county, Thursday, May 29, 7:30 p. m., continuing over Sabbath, June 1. S. B. MABRY.

Preaching in Thompson's Hall, Delmar, Clinton Co., Jan. 5, and every two weeks until further notice. C. W. PITCHER.

Chronology.

BY N. H. BARBOUR.

The chronology of Bishop Usher, as found in the margin of our Bibles, makes the human race 5,876 years old, with the end of the Jewish year corresponding with the year 1872, which ended on the 28th of last March, A. D. 1873. Hence, according to Usher, it will yet take 124 years to complete the six thousand.

Now, there is a discrepancy between Usher and the Bible, of just 124 years. One hundred during the time of the judges, eighteen at the captivity, and six during the reign of the kings; all of which I will point out.

Thus, from the sending of the spies B. C. 1490 (see his chronology of the event over Naem. 13:2), to the death of David, B. C. 1015 (see Chron. of 1st Chron. 29:27), is 475 years. Which leaves, as I will show by diagram, just 350 years for the anarchy, judges, etc., instead of 450. The spies were sent B. C. 1490, from which to the division of the land was forty-five years (see Joshua 14:7-10.) Then came the anarchy, judges, etc. Saul reigned 40 years. (Acts 13:21.) David reigned 40 years. (1st Chron. 29:27.) Total, x plus 125 years, from sending of the spies to the death of David. Take the 125 years from the 474 and it leaves, as you perceive, 350 years for X, or the time of the judges; which, according to the best evidence, should be 450 years.

A period of 475 years.

"He divided their land unto them by lot, and after that he gave unto them judges, about the space of 450 years, until Samuel the prophet." (Acts 13:20.)

Three hundred and fifty is not "about four hundred and fifty years." The 450 years is given in the Book of Judges in nineteen short periods. It is given by God, and given as chronology, and adds up for us 450 years, just as it did for St. Paul.

The reign of the thirteen judges was scattered over this "space of four hundred and fifty years," but did not cover it all, as there were six intervening periods, during which they had no judges, but were under their enemies. Hence, Paul might well say about 450 years under the judges, since they did not cover it all; but that the space of time was just 450 years we have the evidence of these nineteen periods of time which make that amount, backed as it is by Paul's testimony.

The next place I will notice where Usher differs from the Bible, is one of eighteen years at the captivity of Jerusalem. He begins the "seventy years captivity" in the fourth year of the reign of Jehoiakim, instead of the eleventh of Zedekiah. Jehoiakim reigns eleven years, and Zedekiah, their last king, reigns eleven years. (See 2 Chron. 36:5 and 11.) There were a number of times when the Babylonians came against Jerusalem and carried away captives. Once in Manassah's day (See Chron. 33:11); again in the fourth year of Jehoiakim; again on his successor, Jehoiachin, who reigns three months (2 Chron. 36:9), and again in the eleventh year of Zedekiah, when the city was taken and burned. (See ver. 19.)

Now, the question is, when did "the seventy years" captivity begin? If where Usher places it, in the fourth year of Jehoiakim, then it began eighteen years before the city was destroyed. Those who begin it there base the argument on Jer. 29:1-10.

By reading you will perceive that God is talking to those who were then in captivity, prior to Zedekiah's reign. And it certainly does seem plausible that the seventy years should commence with the captivity of those to whom he was then speaking. "For thus saith the Lord, that after seventy years he accomplished at Babylon, I will visit you and perform my good word towards you in causing you to return to this place." (See ver. 10.)

This construction looks plausible, I admit; and if there was nothing opposed to that view it would be a perpectly fair assumption that the seventy years' captivity, foretold by Jeremiah in chap. 25, began with this earlier captivity. But there is a positive declaration to the contrary, which must be accepted, and, before which, all mere assumption must give way.

If you will read the 1st, 2d and 3d verses of the first chapter of Jeremiah you will find a positive declaration that Jerusalem was carried captive, in the end of the eleventh year of Zedekiah's reign, in the fifth month. Read also in connection with it, the last chapter of Jeremiah. Here, it seems, that the Word of the Lord came to Jeremiah from the thirteenth year of Josah, "unto the end of the eleventh year of Zedekiah, unto the carrying away of Jerusalem captive, in the fifth month"

"No one can escape this conclusion by saying that it was the principal part of the people whose captivity that seventy years was to cover, and not Jerusalem; at least not if Daniel understood it right. "I, Daniel, understood by books the number of the years whereof the Word of the Lord came to Jeremiah the prophet, that he would accomplish seventy years in the desolation of Jerusalem." (Dan. 9:2.)

The prophecy as recorded in Jer. 25, reads, "This whole land shall be a desolation." And in Jer. 44:2, where the work is accomplished, God gives his own meaning of "desolation," "Ye have seen all the evil that I have brought upon Jerusalem, and upon all the cities of Judah, and behold this day they are a desolation, and no man dwelleth therein."

So long as there were wicked kings reigning in Jerusalem it was not desolate. But when their last king, Zedekiah, was taken and the city burned, and the poor of the land who were left went down into Egypt, "even men, women and children, every person, whom Nebuzaradan, the captain of the guard, had left." (Jer. 43:6.) Then, and not until then, was the land desolate.

If the seventy years of desolation spoken of by Jeremiah, began in the fourth year of Jehoiakim's reign, why does God say (2 Chron. 36:20), at the end of Zedekiah's reign, "and them that had escaped from the sword carried he away to Babylon * * to fulfill the Word of the Lord by the mouth of Jeremiah, until the land had enjoyed her Sabbaths, for as long as she lay desolate she kept Sabbath to fulfil three-score and ten years." How came it that God had them carried away at the end of Zedekiah's reign, and the land made desolate without an inhabitant to fulfill the prophecy of Jeremiah, when that prophecy had already been fulfilled eighteen years before?

Brethren, the land was not desolate in Jehoiakim's reign, nor did the seventy years' captivity of Jerusalem begin there. "And Zedediah, king of Judah, and his princes will I give unto the hand of the king of Babylon's army, and I will make the cities of Judah a desolation without an inhabitant." (Jer. 34:21, 22.)

This is where the land became desolate, and where the seventy years began, "for as long as she lay desolate she kept Sabbath to fulfill three-score and ten years." (2 Chron. 36:21.)

Of course, it Usher is wrong in beginning the "seventy years" eighteen years too soon, Thurman and all others who accept his position are in the same fix. And if Jeremiah is right, that "he propheccied until the end of the eleventh year of Zedekiah, until Jerusalem was taken captive," it would seem, indeed, that they are eighteen years out in their calculation.

We will now show the other six years where Usher differs from God's Word.

Jehosaphat died B. C. 889 (see Usher's chronology over 2d Chron. 21:1), "and Jehoram, his son, reigned in his stead." Jehoram reigns eight years. (Ver. 19, 20.) Eight years from B. C. 889 would be B. C. 881, while Usher puts his death at 885, thus making him reign only four years.

Again, Joash begins to reign B. C. 878, and reigns forty years. (Chap. 24:1.) Hence, his death should occur B. C. 838; but Usher puts it at 839. (See chap. 24:25-27.)

Third and last discrepancy:

Hezekiah begins to reign 726 and reigns twenty-nine years. (Chap. 29:1.) His death occurs 697, whereas Usher puts it at 698. (2 Chron. 32:33.)

Thus we find Usher is wrong just 100, plus 18, plus 6 years. Therefore the beginning of the so-called Christian era, instead of being placed at 4004, should be 4128, from which 1872, full years, bring us to the end of six thousand.

Of course, there are reasons for these mistakes, as there were for the preceding ones, and they come from trying to get a chronology out of the kings of Israel, where it does not exist, instead of the chronicles of the kings of Judah, where it is unbroken.

In the space I can occupy here I am not trying to support either side, but have simply shown where Usher differs from the Bible chronology. And these are the only places where there is a difference between him and the Bible chronology as given in the "Midnight Cry." If I have shown that he is one hundred and twenty-four years out in his reckoning, then it follows that we are just so much nearer the end of the six thousand than his chronolgy would imply.

There are writers who can bring up all the old stereotyped arguments used by Usher in support of each of these discrepancies, but in each case they are based on a more or less plausible assumption of the meaning of some Scripture, and opposed by positive declarations. I prefer the latter.

And here I will add my testimony. I believe there is abundant evidence that the prophetic periods of Daniel 12 expire this year. I believe the evidence is conclusive that the six thousand years from Adam are now ended, a few months in the past. That we are now "in the day of the Lord," which is a day of trouble. That this trouble will continue to grow worse and worse until every man's sword shall be against his brother. That the sign of the Son of Man may be expected at any moment.

The Greek New Testament.

BY C. W. WATERHOUSE.

The manuscript copies of the Greek New Testament, written before the art of printing was discovered in Europe, are known to differ among themselves in many small points; such as one or two letters in the spelling of a word, which frequently changes the meaning of the word. After the Testament was put in print, in the sixteenth century, different manuscripts were compared with the printed text, and the variations from it noted. The further this comparison, or collation of manuscripts, was carried, the greater was the number of variations discovered; and soon, alarm was excited for the safety and integrity of the text itself. The collation of manuscripts, however, still went on, until a mass of "various readings" was secured, numbering many thousands, and constituting in textual criticism what a body of observed facts does in physical science.

About one century ago, Dr. John J. Griesback began to apply those "various readings" to the actual correction of the text; doing it however in a cautious and sparing manner, yet going far enough to show, that the text might be both preserved, and purified and established by the proper application of scientific principles in the use of the observed facts. But the opinion continued to prevail that the genuine text was to be arrived at by the agreement of the greatest number of readings. As the modern manuscripts far outnumber the ancient ones, this was equivalent to settling the text on their authority; as though the further you go in time from the original autographs, the nearer you must thus become in fact to the very words and letters in which those autographs were penned! Considering the liability to error in copying, the truth is indubitably in the opposite direction. The nearer we can go to the first century of the Christian era, during which all those autographs were written, other things being equal the nearer we must get to the actual readings of the autographs themselves.

When our common English version was first put in print, in 1611, the oldest Greek manuscripts available to the translators were written as late as the tenth century. Since their day, manuscripts have been brought to light, and many of them printed, dating back to the middle of the fourth century, and from that point down to the tenth. Two eminent scholars, Dr. S. P. Tregelles of England, and Dr. C. Tischendorf of Germany, have also each devoted thirty years to the collection of readings from the ancient manuscripts, and the practical use of them in revising the text. In addition to the testimony of the ancient manuscripts thus secured, they have also developed other principles of criticism, and reduced them to practical rules, so definite in their application that, in most cases, the revised texts of these distinguished scholars entirely harmonize.

Thus through the medium of textual criticism, and by the patient and intelligent application of its principles during long years of toil, we now have the text of the Greek New Testament restored essentially to its original purity, and established on a firm and scientific basis.

Previous to the tenth century, the manuscripts were written in capital letters, and without a space between the words. The three most important and valuable of them are the Sinaitic, the Vatican, and the Alexandrian; many of whose various readings are given by Tischendorf in his Leipsic edition of the English New Testament. The Sinaitic manuscript, critically marked "X," written about the middle of the fourth century was discovered by Tischendorf, Feb. 4th 1859, in the convent of St. Catharine, on Mount Sinai, in Arabia, and published by him in facsimile in 1862, and in the common type in 1865. It contains the entire New Testament, and is deposited in the Imperial Library at St. Petersburg. The Vatican manuscript marked "B," also written about the middle of the fourth century has been published only since 1857. It is in the Vatican Library at Rome. The Alexandrian manuscript marked "A" written about the middle of the fifth century, was first published in 1786. It is in the British Museum, at London. The Ephraim or Royal Paris manuscript, marked "C," of the fifth century, and the Cambridge manuscript, marked "D," of the sixth century, are next in value.

As specimens of various readings: In Mat. 7:14, "X" and "B" have oti, "because strait is the gate," putting it on the same ground as the preceding motive for "entering in at the strait gate," oti, "because wide is the gate," etc. But later copyists dropped the "o," and made it read ti, "How strait is the gate." In Luke 13:24, "X" and "B" have turas, "door," corresponding with "the door," spoken of in verse 25. But later copyists changed it three letters and made it read pulas, "gate," as in Mat. 7:13, 14. The doxology to the Lord's prayer is not found in any of the oldest manuscripts in Mat. 6; 13; just as all omit it in Luke 11:4. But in later times, the prayer having come into general use in the church service, was closed with the doxology, and with that addition was copied into the later manuscripts of Matthew.

In 1862, and 1865, the American Bible Union, of New York city, published a first, and a second revision of the English New Testament, under the direction of Dr. T. J. Conant, following the revised Greek text, so far as it was then settled. That society is now preparing a third revision, from the completed text of Tregelles and Tischendorf, in the current English of the present day. The Canterbury diocese of England, is also employing revisers for a similar purpose; but they propose retaining the antiquated English of the common version, except where it cannot be readily understood.

Chronology.

BY N. H. BARBOUR.

The chronology of Bishop Usher, as found in the margin of our Bibles, makes the human race 5,876 years old, with the end of the Jewish year corresponding with the year 1872, which ended on the 28th of last March, A. D. 1873. Hence, according to Usher, it will yet take 124 years to complete the six thousand.

Now, there is a discrepancy between Usher and the Bible, of just 124 years. One hundred during the time of the judges, eighteen at the captivity, and six during the reign of the kings; all of which I will point out.

Thus, from the sending of the spies B. C. 1490 (see his chronology of the event over Naem. 13:2), to the death of David, B. C. 1015 (see Chron. of 1st Chron. 29:27), is 475 years. Which leaves, as I will show by diagram, just 350 years for the anarchy, judges, etc., instead of 450. The spies were sent B. C. 1490, from which to the division of the land was forty-five years (see Joshua 14:7-10.)	A period of 475 years.		45 years, from sending of the spies to the death of David. Take the 125 years from the 474 and it leaves, as you perceive, 350 years for X, or the time of the judges; which, according to the best evidence, should be 450 years.

"He divided their land unto them by lot, and after that he gave unto them judges, about the space of 450 years, until Samuel the prophet." (Acts 13:20.)

Three hundred and fifty is not "about four hundred and fifty years." The 450 years is given in the Book of Judges in nineteen short periods. It is given by God, and given as chronology, and adds up for us 450 years, just as it did for St. Paul.

The reign of the thirteen judges was scattered over this "space of four hundred and fifty years," but did not cover it all, as there were six intervening periods, during which they had no judges, but were under their enemies. Hence, Paul might well say about 450 years under the judges, since they did not cover it all; but that the space of time was just 450 years we have the evidence of these nineteen periods of time which make that amount, backed as it is by Paul's testimony.

The next place I will notice where Usher differs from the Bible, is one of eighteen years at the captivity of Jerusalem. He begins the "seventy years captivity" in the fourth year of the reign of Jehoiakim, instead of the eleventh of Zedekiah. Jehoiakim reigns eleven years, and Zedekiah, their last king, reigns eleven years. (See 2 Chron. 36:5 and 11.) There were a number of times when the Babylonians came against Jerusalem and carried away captives. Once in Manassah's day (See Chron. 33:11); again in the fourth year of Jehoiakim; again on his successor, Jehoiachin, who reigns three months (2 Chron. 36:9), and again in the eleventh year of Zedekiah, when the city was taken and burned. (See ver. 19.)

Now, the question is, when did "the seventy years" captivity begin? If where Usher places it, in the fourth year of Jehoiakim, then it began eighteen years before the city was destroyed. Those who begin it there base the argument on Jer. 29:1-10.

By reading you will perceive that God is talking to those who were then in captivity, prior to Zedekiah's reign. And it certainly does seem plausible that the seventy years should commence with the captivity of those to whom he was then speaking. "For thus saith the Lord, that after seventy years he accomplished at Babylon, I will visit you and perform my good word towards you in causing you to return to this place." (See ver. 10.)

This construction looks plausible, I admit; and if there was nothing opposed to that view it would be a perpectly fair assumption that the seventy years' captivity, foretold by Jeremiah in chap. 25, began with this earlier captivity. But there is a positive declaration to the contrary, which must be accepted, and, before which, all mere assumption must give way.

If you will read the 1st, 2d and 3d verses of the first chapter of Jeremiah you will find a positive declaration that Jerusalem was carried captive, in the end of the eleventh year of Zedekiah's reign, in the fifth month. Read also in connection with it, the last chapter of Jeremiah. Here, it seems, that the Word of the Lord came to Jeremiah from the thirteenth year of Josah, "unto the end of the eleventh year of Zedekiah, unto the carrying away of Jerusalem captive, in the fifth month"

"No one can escape this conclusion by saying that it was the principal part of the people whose captivity that seventy years was to cover, and not Jerusalem; at least not if Daniel understood it right. "I, Daniel, understood by books the number of the years whereof the Word of the Lord came to Jeremiah the prophet, that he would accomplish seventy years in the desolation of Jerusalem." (Dan. 9:2.)

The prophecy as recorded in Jer. 25, reads, "This whole land shall be a desolation." And in Jer. 44:2, where the work is accomplished, God gives his own meaning of "desolation," "Ye have seen all the evil that I have brought upon Jerusalem, and upon all the cities of Judah, and behold this day they are a desolation, and no man dwelleth therein."

So long as there were wicked kings reigning in Jerusalem it was not desolate. But when their last king, Zedekiah, was taken and the city burned, and the poor of the land who were left went down into Egypt, "even men, women and children, every person, whom Nebuzaradan, the captain of the guard, had left." (Jer. 43:6.) Then, and not until then, was the land desolate.

If the seventy years of desolation spoken of by Jeremiah, began in the fourth year of Jehoiakim's reign, why does God say (2 Chron. 36:20), at the end of Zedekiah's reign, "and them that had escaped from the sword carried he away to Babylon * * to fulfill the Word of the Lord by the mouth of Jeremiah, until the land had enjoyed her Sabbaths, for as long as she lay desolate she kept Sabbath to fulfil three-score and ten years." How came it that God had them carried away at the end of Zedekiah's reign, and the land made desolate without an inhabitant to fulfill the prophecy of Jeremiah, when that prophecy had already been fulfilled eighteen years before?

Brethren, the land was not desolate in Jehoiakim's reign, nor did the seventy years' captivity of Jerusalem begin there. "And Zedediah, king of Judah, and his princes will I give unto the hand of the king of Babylon's army, and I will make the cities of Judah a desolation without an inhabitant." (Jer. 34:21, 22.)

This is where the land became desolate, and where the seventy years began, "for as long as she lay desolate she kept Sabbath to fulfill three-score and ten years." (2 Chron. 36:21.)

Of course, if Usher is wrong in beginning the "seventy years" eighteen years too soon, Thurman and all others who accept his position are in the same fix. And if Jeremiah is right, that "he prophecied until the end of the eleventh year of Zedekiah, until Jerusalem was taken captive," it would seem, indeed, that they are eighteen years out in their calculation.

We will now show the other six years where Usher differs from God's Word.

Jehosaphat died B. C. 889 (see Usher's chronology over 2d Chron. 21:1), "and Jehoram, his son, reigned in his stead." Jehoram reigns eight years. (Ver. 19, 20.) Eight years from B. C. 889 would be B. C. 881, while Usher puts his death at 885, thus making him reign only four years.

Again, Joash begins to reign B. C. 878, and reigns forty years. (Chap. 24:1.) Hence, his death should occur B. C. 838; but Usher puts it at 839. (See chap. 24:25-27.)

Third and last discrepancy:

Hezekiah begins to reign 726 and reigns twenty-nine years. (Chap. 29:1.) His death occurs 697, whereas Usher puts it at 698. (2 Chron. 32:33.)

Thus we find Usher is wrong just 100, plus 18, plus 6 years. Therefore the beginning of the so-called Christian era, instead of being placed at 4004, should be 4128, from which 1872, full years, bring us to the end of six thousand.

Of course, there are reasons for these mistakes, as there were for the preceding ones, and they come from trying to get a chronology out of the kings of Israel, where it does not exist, instead of the chronicles of the kings of Judah, where it is unbroken.

In the space I can occupy here I am not trying to support either side, but have simply shown where Usher differs from the Bible chronology. And these are the only places where there is a difference between him and the Bible chronology as given in the "Midnight Cry." If I have shown that he is one hundred and twenty-four years out in his reckoning, then it follows that we are just so much nearer the end of the six thousand than his chronolgy would imply.

There are writers who can bring up all the old stereotyped arguments used by Usher in support of each of these discrepancies, but in each case they are based on a more or less plausible assumption of the meaning of some Scripture, and opposed by positive declarations. I prefer the latter.

And here I will add my testimony. I believe there is abundant evidence that the prophetic periods of Daniel 12 expire this year. I believe the evidence is conclusive that the six thousand years from Adam are now ended, a few months in the past. That we are now "in the day of the Lord," which is a day of trouble. The Greek New Testament.

BY C. W. WATERHOUSE.

The manuscript copies of the Greek New Testament, written before the art of printing was discovered in Europe, are known to differ among themselves in many small points; such as one or two letters in the spelling of a word, which frequently changes the meaning of the word. After the Testament was put in print, in the sixteenth century, different manuscripts were compared with the printed text, and the variations from it noted. The further this comparison, or collation of manuscripts, was carried, the greater was the number of variations discovered; and soon, alarm was excited for the safety and integrity of the text itself. The collation of manuscripts, however, still went on, until a mass of "various readings" was secured, numbering many thousands, and constituting in textual criticism what a body of observed facts does in physical science.

About one century ago, Dr. John J. Griesback began to apply these "various readings" to the actual correction of the text; doing it however in a cautious and sparing manner, yet going far enough to show, that the text might be both preserved, and purified and established by the proper application of scientific principles in the use of the observed facts. But the opinion continued to prevail that the genuine text was to be arrived at by the agreement of the greatest number of readings. As the modern manuscripts far outnumber the ancient ones, this was equivalent to settling the text on their authority; as though the further you go in time from the original autographs, the nearer you must thus become in fact to the very words and letters in which those autographs were penned! Considering the liability to error in copying, the truth is indubitably in the opposite direction. The nearer we can go to the first century of the Christian era, during which all those autographs were written, other things being equal the nearer we must get to the actual readings of the autographs themselves.

When our common English version was first put in print, in 1611, the oldest Greek manuscripts available to the translators were written as late as the tenth century. Since their day, manuscripts have been brought to light, and many of them printed, dating back to the middle of the fourth century, and from that point down to the tenth. Two eminent scholars, Dr. S. P. Tregelles of England, and Dr. C. Tischendorf of Germany, have also each devoted thirty years to the collection of readings from the ancient manuscripts, and the practical use of them in revising the text. In addition to the testimony of the ancient manuscripts thus secured, they have also developed other principles of criticism, and reduced them to practical rules, so definite in their application that, in most cases, the revised texts of these distinguished scholars entirely harmonize.

Thus through the medium of textual criticism, and by the patient and intelligent application of its principles during long years of toil, we now have the text of the Greek New Testament restored essentially to its original purity, and established on a firm and scientific basis.

Previous to the tenth century, the manuscripts were written in capital letters, and without a space between the words. The three most important and valuable of them are the Sinaitic, the Vatican, and the Alexandrian; many of whose various readings are given by Tischendorf in his Leipsic edition of the English New Testament. The Sinaitic manuscript, critically marked "X," written about the middle of the fourth century was discovered by Tischendorf, Feb. 4th 1859, in the convent of St. Catharine, on Mount Sinai, in Arabia, and published by him in facsimile in 1862, and in the common type in 1865. It contains the entire New Testament, and is deposited in the Imperial Library at St. Petersburg. The Vatican manuscript marked "B," also written about the middle of the fourth century has been published only since 1857. It is in the Vatican Library at Rome. The Alexandrian, manuscript marked "A" written about the middle of the fifth century, was first published in 1786. It is in the British Museum, at London. The Ephraim or Royal Paris manuscript, marked "C," of the fifth century, and the Cambridge manuscript, marked "D," of the sixth century, are next in value.

As specimens of various readings: In Mat. 7:14, "X" and "B" have oti, "because strait is the gate," putting it on the same ground as the preceding motive for "entering in at the strait gate," oti, "because wide is the gate," etc. But later copyists dropped the "o," and made it read ti, "How strait is the gate." In Luke 13:24, "X" and "B" have turas, "door," corresponding with "the door," spoken of in verse 25. But later copyists changed three letters and made it read pulas, "gate," as in Mat. 7:13, 14. The doxology to the Lord's prayer is not found in any of the oldest manuscripts in Mat. 6; 13; just as all omit it in Luke 11:4. But in later times, the prayer having come into general use in the church service, was closed with the doxology, and with that addition was copied into the later manuscripts of Matthew.

In 1862, and 1865, the American Bible Union, of New York city, published a first, and a second revision of the English New Testament, under the direction of Dr. T. J. Conant, following the revised Greek text, so far as it was then settled. That society is now preparing a third revision, from the completed text of Tregelles and Tischendorf, in the current English of the present day. The Canterbury diocese of England, is also employing revisers for a similar purpose; but they propose retaining the antiquated English of the common version, except where it cannot be readily understood.

"He Shall Never See Death."

EDITOR TIMES:—As before remarked, a thorough investigation has convinced me that men may and must and do exist when dead. That they may exist is taught by reason in the study of man's nature; that they do exist appears from the decisive testimony of the Bible; that they must exist is plain from the demands of reason as applied to Bible doctrine.

A digression from the logical order may here be allowed to give first, a proof or two from Scripture that men do exist when dead, in order to meet an inquiring correspondent of yours in this very week's number, (May 20.) He discusses John 8:51, 52 and kindred passages with great fairness, and arriving at no certain conclusion, he closes by calling for light.

ONE EXPLANATION.

He begins by stating the view of a previous writer in THE TIMES, that Jude 11:26 is to be explained thus: "And whosoever liveth [at the second advent] and believeth in me, shall never die." This interpretation is referred to by Whitmore, (Doct. of Immort., p. 160), but is entirely untenable for the following reasons:

1. On this occasion of raising Lazarus, it is not to be supposed that Christ went into the particulars of the long future resurrection to which Martha referred, instead of bringing her mind back to his present working, as he evidently meant to do.

2. The distinct excepting of the last generation of the earth from death, is only on one occasion referred to in the New Testament, namely, by Paul; and Christ never alluded to such details.

3. For Christ to take pains to inform Martha that those who stay alive will not die, would be a mere truism, unworthy of him and of no consequence to her.

4. The expression of Christ is not full enough to describe any such future event. He does not say, "He that shall be living at my coming," but "he that liveth"—now.

5. To give it that interpretation requires the previous clause also to be understood in an unwarranted way, viz.: as speaking of one dead at the coming of Christ, when he evidently means one dead then, as Lazarus was dead.

6. Even if it could be so understood it would not help the view of no soul existent in death; for it still asserts that one though dead, (like Lazarus), yet "believeth," now believeth when dead; which makes the dead still to be actively exercising faith, not be extinct, as alleged.

7. But the greatest of all reasons for not accepting this very difficult and forced view of the passage is, that after all there remain still other passages of the kind equally explicit which cannot thus be got rid of. Your correspondent rightly says that this interpretation cannot be applied to John 8:51, 52. Here there is not, and cannot be, any allusion to the second coming, but Christ certainly says of every disciple, "He shall never see death"; by which Christ meant one thing, and the Jews evidently understood another thing, as your correspondent says.

ANOTHER ATTEMPT.

What did Christ mean to say? Plainly he used the word die in a sense different from the physical death understood by the Jews. But you, who believe that there is no other except physical death, feel obliged to find some other explanation of the Jews' misunderstanding of Christ. And as he could not refer to the second advent, that explanation being forbidden, Mr. Whitmore, (p. 160) adopts this as the only other resort, namely: that instead of "never" Christ meant "not forever"; i. e., a believer "shall not die forever," or "shall die but not forever" —he shall be raised again.

Your correspondent thinks of the same resort, and asks of those who understand Greek whether such a view is not admissible, suggesting that only in that case can he get along with the passage, as in harmony with this view of no existence for the dead. We reply the Greek will not allow this meaning.

The expression is, "not eis-ton-aiona," i. e., "not to the world age," or "not ever," or "never"—signifying occurrence as opposed to "ever." It occurs seven times in the New Testament; and in no case can it denote continuance or "not forever"—John 4:14, "He shall never thirst, but the water ....shall be in him," etc. (How absurd to say that with water in him he shall not thirst forever!) John 13:8: "Thou shalt never wash my feet.... if I wash thee not," etc.: (how absurd the proposal to wash his feet forever or not forever!) Mark 3:29, "Hath never forgiveness, but is in danger," etc.; (how absurd to say "hath forgiveness but not forever!) So it must be never in the four remaining cases before us: John 8: 51, 52. 10: 28; 11: 26. To denote "not forever," or continuance as opposed to "forever," the expression would be as in Mat. 26: 11, "the poor ye have always, but we not always," (pantote and ou pantote.)

Moreover, even if the expression "to the world-age" be here rendered "forever," yet its connection with the momentary verb "see" death, and the Greek order of the sentence, confine it to the meaning ever, thus: "death he shall not see [even] forever." Indeed, in some copies the last expression is left off, (see Griesback;) and this passage compares with chapter 6: 50, "a man may eat thereof and not die." This last verse is perfectly decisive, that Christ meant to say absolutely his disciples should not die, ever at all, in the sense he used the word death.

EVIDENT ENTITY.

But even without resorting to the Greek, your correspondent can easily see that the proposed change of the reading is both inadmissible and unavailing. For, he himself observes, "It is evident that the Jews understood Jesus to mean, that they who should keep his sayings, should never die in any sense, whether physical or otherwise." That is, they understood the expression used by Christ as meaning "never die," not as meaning "not die forever." And did not he mean the same?

Must not those Jews have understood what the expression of Christ meant grammatically and in the literal sense of the words? It is, and must be, conceded that the account here given of their understanding of his expression is accurately put, as "never die." And as they could think of no other meaning to give it, (or their difficulty would have been over,) must not that very same expression as Christ used it, have that same meaning "never die"? Or, to put the point in another form: Christ, in his remark, and the Jews, in their objection to it, both used the same expression, so that as they in using it meant "never die," and could mean nothing else, therefore he in using it could mean nothing else. If you suppose that he used the expression in an ungrammatical sense, so that they did not, and could not, understand it as he meant it, then you accuse him of an inaccuracy and ignorance of language, or of a purposed deception and play upon words, which is entirely unallowable.

Christ and the Jews then, must have understood the phrase alike. And this fact makes the proposed change, even if it were admissible, to be entirely unavailing for the purpose designed. For if they understood him as saying "he shall not die forever," but shall be raised again, then there is not only no way to account for their astonishment over their own doctrine of resurrection, but moreover, their whole language still remains inexplicable. They answered "Now we know that thou hast a devil; Abraham is dead, and the prophets, and thou sayest if a man keep my sayings, he shall" not die forever, but be raised, (according to this view;) "Art thou greater than our father Abraham who is dead? and the prophets are dead; whom m[illegible] thou thyself?" But what though they were dead; was not that the very way to their being raised, as Christ taught and they believed? How is it possible to explain any of their language or surprise on the supposition that they understood him as referring to resurrection or not dying forever? Your correspondent concedes that it is not possible, and all must concede it.

That Christ could not mean this is moreover evident from the fact that if the expression were "he shall not die forever," it would represent death as a continuous state, existing on the individual until the resurrection; whereas, Christ expressly says "he shall not see death" at all, (that death of which he speaks,) or as the Jews express it, "he shall not taste of death" in the least, which is the farthest possible from expressing an actual dying and long continuance in death, with only deliverance at the end.

Still further, this not seeing death is predicted only of the believer; whereas, the physical dying and remaining dead until raised again is true of all, believers and disbelievers; so that physical death could not be spoken of here. It must be only spiritual death that is thus denied of spiritual persons alone; otherwise, you make Christ teach that unbelievers will die forever, and never be raised! But, suppose it be asked Even if Christ is not speaking of the first death physical and the resurrection from it, still may he not be speaking of the "second death" physical, and denying that concerning the believer? Answer: If Christ had meant the "second death," he would have said so, as John does in Revelations; but his language which alludes to but one single death, (and being Aorist, not future, can have no remote reference—see Winer's N. T. Gram., p. 3, ch. 56, sec. 3:) is utterly incapable of such a meaning. Moreover, that sense given to it, would leave the same impossibility of explaining the answer of the Jews. If it were possible to understand Christ as referring to a second death, then the Jews, seeing that he had not denied a first death to any, would not have adduced the first death of Abraham and the prophets as having anything to do with the matter and would not have been astonished at him as having a devil.

THE TRUE SOLUTION.

Thus certain is it, from every view of the case, that Christ could not mean anything but as our version reads, "he shall never see death." And there could be no mistake of the expression "never" on the part of the Jews. How then, did they misunderstand Christ? The case is plain. The word die had, besides the physical sense, another meaning, which the Jews ought to have understood, and would have understood from their own Scriptures had they not been willfully blinded. Christ, with fairness, used that other meaning, referring (as he often did) to spiritual death or separation from him: although they, in their blindness, could think of nothing but bodily death, or separation from the body.

"Abraham is dead, and the prophets are dead," they said. But they forget what Moses had recorded: "I have set before you life and death; that thou mayest love the Lord thy God....for he is thy life." (Deut. 30: 18, 19, 20.) "The just shall live by his faith." (Hab. 2: 4.) "I am the God of Abraham, and the God of Isaac, and the God of Jacob." (Ex. 3:6, 15, 16.) That is to say, they "all live unto God" by faith. (Lk. 20: 38.) Though they are dead in body. "Your hearts shall live that seek God." [(Ps. 69: 32.) "He shall surely live, he shall not die." (Ezek. 18:21, 28.) That is to say, never shall the righteous die from their life in God. Of course then, they must exist even when dead from the body. This authorized Old Testament sense of die the Savior here uses, (as he and the apostles continually do), but the gross-minded Jews (like some others) took it only in a physical sense, and so were sadly perplexed. Even thus it was that Christ met the Sadducees in Luke 20 : 38, as I will show next time, if you please, referring to your editorial views of last week.

This view makes all plain, both here in John 8: 51, 52, "he shall never see death," and also in Jude 11: 26, "he shall never die," and in John 10:28, "they shall never perish," and in John 6:50, "a man may eat and not die." How does it do to read, "I give unto them eternal life, and they shall not perish forever," i. e., they shall perish but not forever, even after they are in possession of "eternal life," which he here says "I give unto them" now! How does that agree with what follows? "Neither shall any [one Gr.] pluck them out of my hand," i. e., even for a moment. And how does this doctrine of a temporary perishing of the godly agree with other Scripture, or with the all-satisfying hopes and promises of the blessed gospel? What a letting down is this of these grand glorious assurances of Christ! Is it indeed an improvement on the common view held in the church?

Jesus Christ teaches that belief in him secures in permanence the Old Testament promise, "he shall surely live, he shall not die," he shall not die from his life in God. I think it is impossible to escape this demonstration of existence to a saint when physically dead, were there no other passage in the Word of God. "He shall never see death." Blessed Word! By it we conquer.

Yours truly,
S. B. GOODENOW.

REMARKS.

We have very carefully considered all the criticism and argument pro and con touching different views taken of the above passage (John 11: 25); and no sooner does the dust and smoke of battle pass away than we feel more than ever convinced that the simple meaning of Christ is, that all believers who may have died shall, in the resurrection, be raised to an immortal life; and all living when he comes will enter upon it without dying. His raising Lazarus from the dead is a standing demonstration that he is indeed the resurrection and the life, and will at the last day fulfill all he hath promised.

Jesus plainly declares that "Lazarus is dead." Martha tells him "if thou hadst been here my brother had not died." Christ comforts her by saying "thy brother shall rise again." She replies I know he shall rise again in the resurrection at the last day." Jesus says to her "I am the resurrection and the life"—the very one who is to raise the dead—"He that believeth in me," he says, "though he were dead," —though he like Lazarus should die— "yet shall he live"—be raised up again from the dead. "And whosoever liveth and believeth in me"—but at what period? Evidently the one just spoken of, "the resurrection at the last day"— "shall never die." Just as Paul says of those "who are alive and remain." "We shall not all sleep," or die.

All is plain, natural, and literal; and the six points made by our brother to prove the words cannot mean this, are borne away like the dust thrown into the stream, leaving it clear as ever.

It is no objection that this interpretation cannot be applied to John 8:51, 52; it ought not to be. It is very certain that our savior here is speaking of a death beyond that of this present mortal body. A death from which faith in him saves us, securing to us the blessing of eternal life.

In John 0:40 our Savior says "this is the will of him that sent me that every one that seeth the Son and believeth on him may have everlasting life; and I will raise him up at the last day." This everlasting life is to be inherited, entered upon, in the resurrection at the last day, not before. Four times over our Savior specifies this fact in connection with his promise of "everlasting life," "shall live forever," and "not die." This is to be fulfilled in the resurrection. But all are to be raised from the dead: some raised to everlasting life, never to taste death, and such are they who keep Christ's sayings; and others will be raised to condemnation, to receive the wages of sin which is death, the loss of life and being. To give this life, and save from this death, was Christ's great mission to earth. Such a life and death admit of no comparison. And for the Son of God, on such a mission, to say that he who shall keep my sayings shall never taste death, needs no qualification as to its meaning. As to the Jews not understanding him, was no uncommon thing.

To quote such Scriptures as, "I have set before you life and death," "For he is thy life," "The just shall live by his faith," "Your hearts shall live that seek God," "He shall surely live, he shall not die," etc., to prove that dead men are still alive, will be all lost on Advent readers; not so much because our readers are so "gross-minded," but as a people, more than most others, they search the Scriptures for themselves, comparing spiritual things with spiritual.

The use of a term to prove that a promise is now fulfilled, instead of yet future, is quite unreliable argument. The resurrection and judgment is the time clearly specified when the saints shall receive the gift of eternal life. And to argue that it is already bestowed because Christ says, "I give unto them eternal life," is as fallacious as to claim because Isaiah says "Unto us a child is born, unto us a son is given," that the first advent took place in his time; or because Christ with the Sadducees uses the language "but that the dead are raised," proves the resurrection passed already. God, who raiseth the dead, calleth things that are not as though they were.

As a criticism on the text (John 11: 20; 8:51,) we offer for consideration that of Prof. Ives, of Yale College, in his late work, "The Bible Doctrine of the Soul," p. 38: "It should be noticed that sometimes the ambiguity is not in the original text, but is caused by the translators' choice of words....For instance, in John 11: 26, Jesus says 'he that liveth and believeth on me shall never die.' But the believer does die; he, no more than any other, is exempt from the first death. It must mean then, you reason, the second death; but why did not Christ say which he referred to? He did! The Greek is, he shall not, not (two negatives in Greek more emphatic,) die, eis ton aiona, to the aeon, to eternity; i. e., literally, 'the believer shall not indeed die eternally.' So John 9:51, 'he shall never see death,' is, 'he shall not indeed see death to eternity,' he shall not see the eternal death."

A STORY is told of a great captain, who, after a battle, was talking over the events of the day with the officers. He asked them who had done the best that day. Some spoke of one man who had fought very bravely, and some of another. "No," said he, "you are all mistaken. The best man in the field to-day was a soldier, who was just lifting his arm to strike an enemy, but, when he heard the trumpet sound a retreat, checked himself, and dropped his arm without striking a blow. That perfect and ready obedience to the will of his general is the noblest thing that has been done to-day." And nothing pleases God so much as absolute and unhesitating obedience.

Old Age.

It is seldom, says the Friend's Intelligencer, we see as beautiful a tribute to he worth of "old age" as is contained in the following, which recently appeared in one of our city periodicals, and is now offered for republication in our columns:

Not long since a good-looking man n middle life came to our door asking or "the minister." When informed hat he was out of town he seemed lisappointed and anxious. On being questioned as to his business, he replied, "I have lost my mother, and as his place used to be her home, and ny father lies here, we have come to ay her beside him."

Our hearts rose in sympathy, and we aid, "you have met with a great loss."

"Well, yes," replied the strong man vith hesitancy: "a mother is a great ss in general; but our mother had outlived her usefulness; she was in her second childhood, and her mind had grown s weak as her body, so that she was no omfort to herself and a burden to verybody. There were seven of us, ons and daughters, and as we could not nd any body who was willing to board er, we agreed to keep her among us year about. But I've had more than y share of her, for she was too feeble be moved when my time was out, nd that was three months before her eath. But then she was a good nother in her day, and toiled very ard to bring us all up.

Without looking at the face of the eartless man, we directed him to the ouse of a neighboring pastor, and returned to our nursery. We gazed on e merry little faces which smiled or rew sad in imitation of ours—those ttle ones to whose ear no word in our nguage is half so sweet as "mother" —and we wondered if that day could er come when they could say of us, She has outlived her usefulness; she no comfort to herself, and a burden everybody!" and we hoped that before such a day would dawn we might be ken to our rest. God forbid that we ould outlive the love of our children! ather let us die while their hearts are part of our own, that our grave may watered with their tears, and our ve linked with hopes of heaven.

When the bell tolled for the mother's urial we went to the sanctuary to pay ur token of respect for the aged stranger, for we felt that we could give her emory a tear, even though her own ildren had none to shed.

"She was a good woman in her day, nd toiled hard to bring us all up; she as no comfort to herself, and a burden to everybody else."

These cruel, heartless words rang our ears as we saw the coffin borne p the isle. The bell tolled long and ud, until its iron tongue had chronicled the years of the toil-worn mother. ne—two—three—four—five. How early, and almost merrily, each stroke ld of her once peaceful slumber in er mother's bosom, and of her seat at ightfall on her weary father's knee. ix—seven—eight—nine—ten, rang out e tale of her sports upon the greenward in the meadow and by the brook. leven—twelve—thirteen—fourteen—fteen, spoke more gravely of school ays, and little household joys and ares. Sixteen—seventeen—eighteen, ounded out the enraptured visions of naidenhood and the dream of early ove. Nineteen brought us the appy bride. Twenty spoke of the young mother, whose heart was fu o bursting with the new-sprung love which God had awakened in her bosom. And then stroke after stroke old of her early womanhood—of the ove, and cares, and hopes, and fears, nd toils through which she passed during these long years, till fifty rang out harsh and loud. From then to sixty each stroke told of the warmhearted mother and grandmother, living over again her own joys and sorrows in those of her children and children's children. Every family of all the group wanted grandmother then, and the only strife was who should secure the prize; but hark! the bell tolls on! Seventy-one—two—three—four. She begins to grow feeble, requires some care, is not always perfectly patient or satisfied; she goes from one child's house to another, so that no one place seems like home. She murmurs in a plaintive tone, and after all her toil and weariness it is hard she cannot be allowed a home to die in; that she must be sent, rather than invited, from house to house. Eighty—eighty-one—two—three—four—ah! now she is a second child—now "she has outlived her usefulness, she has ceased to be a comfort to herself or anybody;" that is, she has ceased to be profitable to her earth-craving and money-grasping children.

Now sounds out, reverberating through our lonely forest, and echoing back from the "hill of the dead," eighty-nine! There she now lies in the coffin, cold and still; she makes no trouble now, demands no love, no soft words, no tender little offices. A look of patient endurance, we fancied also an expression of grief for unrequited love, sat on her marble features. Her children were there, clad in weeds of woe, and in irony we remembered the strong man's word's, "She was a good mother in her day.

When the bell ceased tolling, the strange minister rose in the pulpit. His form was very erect, and his voice strong, but his hair was silvery white. He read several passages of scripture expressive of God's compassion to feeble men, and especially of his tenderness when gray hairs are on him and his strength faileth. He then made some touching remarks on human frailty and of dependence on God, urging all present to make their peace with their Master while in health, that they might claim his promise when heart and flesh should fail them. Then he said, "The eternal God shall be thy refuge, and beneath thee shall be the everlasting arms." Leaning over the desk and gazing intently on the coffined form before him, he then said reverently, "From a little child I honored the aged, but never till gray hairs covered my own head did I know truly how much love and sympathy this class has a right to demand of their fellow creatures. Now I feel it. Our mother," he added, most tenderly, "who now lies in death before us, was a stranger to me, as are all her descendants. All I know of her is what her son has told me to-day—that she was brought to this town from afar, sixty-nine years ago, a happy bride; that she has passed most of her life toiling, as only mothers ever have strength to toil, until she had reared a large family of sons and daughters; that she left her home here, clad in the weeds of widowhood, to dwell among her children, and that, till health and vigor left her, she lived for you, her descendants.

You, who together have her love, and care, know how well you have requited her. God forbid that conscience should accuse and of you of ingratitude or murmuring on account of the care she has been to you of late. When you go back to your homes be careful of your words and your example before your own children, for the fruit of your own doing you will surely reap from them when you yourselves totter on the brink of the grave. I entreat you as a friend, as one who has himself entered the 'evening of life,' that you may never say in the presence of your families nor of Heaven, 'Our mother has outlived her usefulness; she was a burden to us.' Never, never, never; a mother cannot live so long as that! No; when she can no longer labor for her children, nor yet care for herself, she can fall like a precious weight on their bosom, and call forth by her helplessness all the noble, generous feelings of their nature."—Christian Era.

Have Courage.

It conduces much to our content if we pass [illegible] those things which happen to our trouble, and consider what is pleasing and prosperous, that by the representation of the better or worse may be blotted out. If I be overthrown in my suit at law, my house is left me still and my land, or I have a virtuous wife, or hopeful children, or kind friends, or good hopes. If I have lost one child it may be I have two or three still left me. Enjoy the present, whatsoever it may be, and be not solicitous for the future; for if you take your foot from the present standing, and thrust it forward toward tomorrow's events you are in a restless condition; it is like refusing to quench the present thirst by fearing you shall want drink the next day. If tomorrow you should want, your sorrow would come time enough though you do not hasten it; let your trouble tarry till its own day comes. Enjoy the blessings of this day, if God sends them, and the evils of it bear patiently and sweetly, for this day only is ours. We are dead to yesterday, and not born to the morrow.—Jeremy Taylor.

RALPH WELLS says he once asked a little child how she came to be a Christian, and was answered:

"Why, I just saw the door open, and I went in."

Who could give a better reason for entering the fold?

GREAT SECOND ADVENT CONFERENCE.

Tuesday, the second day of the Conference, was not so interesting as the meeting held on the evening previous. Not being able to attend myself in the morning, I engaged a young brother to report the speeches; but, on looking over his notes, think it will scarcely compensate either your subscribers for reading, or your correspondent for copying them. I may, however, give you a few extracts of at least moderate, if not novel, interest. The principal speaker of the evening was Mr. C. Skrine. He opened his address with a loving and beautiful eulogy of the late Mr. Pennefather, lingering on his graces, and his ever-earnest and unflagging interest in the joyful hope of his Lord's return. And, Mr. Skrine remarked, the Lord's return was an event so delightful and glorious as to deserve to engross the attention not only of the deceased but of all men. Speaking of the judgment's coming on the world of the ungodly, he thought the deluge a type of them, and a key to their understanding. God gave three distinct warnings to the world in Noah's age. The first referred to the cessation of the Spirit's strivings: "My Spirit shall not always strive with man." The second was heard in the sawing of the planks, and the blows of the hammer, in the preparation of the ark; which was done in obedience to the command of God which said: "Make thee an ark of gopher wood." The third was the doom of all men, as well as their warning: "Come thou, and all thy house, into the ark." O, how solemn, how portentious this warning! It told of a world shut out of the ark, and left exposed to the fury of God's wrath. As soon as Noah was in the ark, dark clouds gathered in the horizon, sounds of thunder smote upon the silent air, and angry lightnings flashed. The fountains of the great deep were broken up; the flood-gates of heaven opened and torrents of water poured down for days without abatement, and destroyed man from the face of the earth; "all in whose nostrils was the breath of life of man and beast." This is a type of the end of our age. The taking away of the Church of God will mark the ending of the strivings of God's Spirit with men. Preparation for that event forewarns the world, even now, of its certainty. Noah is typical of the Church of God. Ere the wrath comes they, will be as he, shut into the Ark. The Church will be taken away before the day of trouble "the tribulation, the great one." [illegible] gured the church. He was t [illegible] om the midst of a godless world. So the church will escape from the world of sinners, and from the desolating blasts of the time of trouble yet in the future. Mr. Skrine continued his speech at some length on a personal anti-christ to come, and the Jews and their future history, winding up with a refutation of the prophetic year-day system of interpretation.

In the evening of Tuesday, long and somewhat tedious addresses were given, which were not, however, entirely void of interest.

W. Edwards was the first speaker. He professed to treat on the subject: "The Times of the Gentiles;" but I confess my disappointment with his elucidation of the theme. He was astray, evidently, in some of his remarks. [illegible] arguing for the return of the Jews [illegible] ment as a nation in and their re-establishment [illegible] "the land Canaan, it suited him to say that [illegible] promised to the seed of Abram had never been given them. But evidently he had not taken notice of, or had forgotten, the words of Joshua (ch. 21:43-45), where he distinctly says "The Lord gave unto Israel ALL THE land which he sware to give unto their fathers; and they possessed it, and dwelt therein" He mixed up the promises made respectively to Abram and Abraham—for the seed of his body and for those of "like precious faith" as he had! Yet he made some good remarks. God had given, said he, the world to four different persons, individually; Adam (Gen. 1); Noah (Gen. 1); Nebuchadnezzar (Dan. 2); and Jesus, in many passages. Respecting the latter the Devil anticipated God. It was proposed by Deity that Jesus should receive the kingdom, dominion, etc., as a reward for his sufferings; but Satan offered them him without suffering—for nothing but the obeisance of the Saviour, and his acknowledgement that the Devil was the giver. This was where the trial lay: would he have it for nothing from Satan? or, would he give his soul for it? He would have it only as God ordained, at the cost of his life, and Satan was thereby defeated. He believed that there would yet come up a trinity of evil ones on the earth. They would be the contrast of the trinity of holy ones. (He is evidently a Trinitarian.) This trinity of evil beings, whom he denominated "the trinity of hell," would consist of the dragon, the beast and the false prophet. The beast is to set up an image in Jerusalem, the literal city, and the false prophet is to command worship; but some will refuse to pay divine honor to the image, and fall on that account. Scriptures were referred to for the future of the Jews, picked at the will of the speaker, and made to dove-tail together. There are to be no national judgments after the resurrection, only individual. And the heavenly Jerusalem is to come down from God and be as a shining canopy over rebuilt earthly Jerusalem. There is to be a Millenium, and there will be judgment during the millenium. No dew is to fall on the wicked. The saved nations will be subject to temptations, but not from without; i. e., from Satan; but only from the suggestions of their own depraved, unrenewed hearts.

Mr. Dalton followed this up with remarks on the first two verses of the 12th of Daniel. It was a rehearsal of the troubles coming on the Jews, when, as he said, they are restored to their own land, and their salvation by Michael and Christ.

S. A. Blackwood said it was not alone necessary that we should be instructed in the details of events happening at the second advent of Jesus, but our own hearts must be warmed, and our consciences enlightened by that solemn and grand event, that we might better occupy our positions as servants, so he should refrain from going into more details and speak of the influence it should have on our lives. It should send us home more prayerful and watchful of our actions. Prophecy is written as in cypher; and using various keys of interpretation, some differences existed among students in respect to conclusions. Within the last thirty or forty years the study of this interesting portion of revelation had greatly increased, and if we did not hear in this the cry, "Behold, the bridegroom cometh; go ye out to meet him," we heard at least the distant whisper of it. Signs of the glorious Epiphany are now manifold. It is not a sign here and another there; a single leaf falling now and again; a solitary swallow departing, but the signs were thick as the buds on a budding tree in the time of spring. Signs existed in masses, and they are thickening daily. And what attitude would the Lord have us assume in this day, marked by the many signs of His approach? It was answered in Luke 21, where Jesus says: "Take heed to yourselves, lest at any time your hearts be overcharged with surfeiting, and drunkenness, and the cares of this life, and so that day come upon you unawares." O what need there is for this caution! When we are overcome only for a time, say a brief hour or even moment, with self indulgence, we are not and cannot be looking out for the Lord. But to return to the signs. They said "The Lord is at hand." There are signs chronological, political, social and religious. But in the midst of all, if the cares of life are allowed to gain the mastery over us they dim our eyes that we cannot see them. Noah was ready for salvation. Not so, Lot. He had got down into Sodom. If he did not himself fall into immorality, he lived in an immoral atmosphere. These are types of the people of God in the end of this age. Noah prefigured the ready part of the Church; Lot the unready. How many there are to day as Lot, down in the mists of Sodom. Of the people of God, now, in the time of the end, some will be just saved, while others will go into the kingdom with abundant entrance. Therefore the injunction: "Take heed to yourselves." The people of Noah's day were preached to; but they absolutely knew not. And many of this day are like them. They hear of coming judgments; but they are too busy to take notice or understand what they hear, so that our cotemporaries know not. "They know not until the day," and then [illegible] to be saved. How like the men [illegible] now! The world looks at the [illegible] of professing Christians, and seriously doubts if they believe in the sudden and speedy return of the Lord. They see their love of ease, dress, and sin, and they ask: "Do these people believe what they profess to?" What do our lives testify? Are we, like servants, ready? What effect is it daily having on us? How necessary the caution and injunction, "Take heed to yourselves." "And now, little children, abide in Him: that, when He shall appear we may have confidence, and no be ashamed before Him at his coming." (1 John 2:28.) The Lord says: Watch—Work—Pray—Abide. The four go sweetly together, and make a happy life; they make one ready to see Jesus any moment. And He will come back. He only waits for the elders of the people, and the priests to ask Him to return. (See 2 Sam. 19:11.) He only waits for His "brethren," His "flesh and His bones" to call for Him. (Ver. 12.) The speech of "all Israel" has come to the Great David; but now he waits the loud call of his "flesh and his bones." "O why, wherefore are ye the last to bring back the King?" Arouse thee! Church of the living God, and call for thy Lord, saying: "Come quickly." The creation is groaning; and are you not the last to bring Him back? O may your hearts be bowed as the hearts of the men of Judah (v. 14), and send ye up your welcome to Jesus, saying: "Return thou,' and all thy servants." So shall the King return. David waited for the desires of his people; and it seemed to the speaker that Jesus waited for the same. Then his prayer would be that their hearts might be directed to the coming of the Lord. "Send word to the King to return. He is ready for it. Send!"

Iowa Conference.

Pursuant to notice the third Quarterly Meeting of the Deep Creek District commenced in Thompson's Hall, Friday evening, May 23d. Preaching by Eld. J. Janes. Had a a good time. Conference called to order at 3 P. M. on the 27th. The President being absent Eld. M. Chandler was called to the chair.

Ministers present were C. W. Pitcher, M. Chandler, G. W. Woodard. Visiting brethren, Eld. J. Ridley, of Manchester, and Eld. J. Janes, of Strawberry Point. Sr. Janes was also present. Delegate of Iron Hill Church, A. Rabb.

The Secretary not having the minutes of the last meeting with him the reading of them was postponed.

Report of Ministers.—Br. C. W. Pitcher reported having done all he could under the circumstances to promote the cause. Had preached in various places, and reported a great interest in the people to hear the Word of Life in this part.

Br. M. Chandler reported having done what he could, considering poor health.

Br. Ridley reported that he had preached in Manchester once in every two weeks, also preached in other places. Had kept up prayer and covenant meetings, and the Lord had blessed his labors.

Br. Rabb reported the cause considerably run down with the church at Iron Hill. Had done what he could to keep up weekly prayer meetings.

Br. Woodard reported a good interest in Fairfield, and was determined to do what he could to prepare sinners for the judgment.

Br. and Sr. Janes reported having done what they could under the pecuniary circumstances they were [illegible]

Conference called to order, Eld. P. S. Buck in the chair.

The following resolution came before the Conference:

WHEREAS, As there is business of vital importance to be transacted at the June meeting of the Advent Christian Publishing Association, to be held in Chicago, therefore,

Resolved, That Eld. M. Chandler be sent as a delegate to the aforesaid meeting, if sanctioned by the official board.

Adjourned to 9 A. M. on the morrow.

Conference called to order on Sunday forenoon, Br. P. S. Buck in the chair. During conference Br. C. W. Pitcher presented himself for ordination. After quite a discussion as to whether it was constitutional to ordain at Quarterly Meetings, it was decided that a committee of three be appointed to lay it before the official board of the annual Conference, and consider the case. The committee was as follows: Brs. J. Janes, M. C. Chandler and G. W. Woodard.

It was decided to hold our next Quarterly Meeting at Iron Hill, about the first of July.

Preaching Saturday evening by Eld. P. S. Buck. Sunday at 10 o'clock had a love feast. It was a glorious meeting. Preaching at 11 by Sr. Janes, at 3 by Br. Janes, and in the evening by Br. Ridley. A good interest was manifested throughout the meeting.

Old Age.

It is seldom, says the Friend's Intelligencer, we see as beautiful a tribute to he worth of "old age" as is contained in the following, which recently appeared in one of our city periodicals, and is now offered for republication in ur columns:

Not long since a good-looking man n middle life came to our door asking or "the minister." When informed hat he was out of town he seemed lisappointed and anxious. On being questioned as to his business, he replied, "I have lost my mother, and as his place used to be her home, and ny father lies here, we have come to ay her beside him."

Our hearts rose in sympathy, and we said, "you have met with a great loss."

"Well, yes," replied the strong man with hesitancy: "a mother is a great ss in general; but our mother had outlived her usefulness; she was in her second childhood, and her mind had grown s weak as her body, so that she was no comfort to herself and a burden to everybody. There were seven of us, ons and daughters, and as we could not nd any body who was willing to board er, we agreed to keep her among us year about. But I've had more than y share of her, for she was too feeble be moved when my time was out, nd that was three months before her eath. But then she was a good other in her day, and toiled very ard to bring us all up."

Without looking at the face of the eartless man, we directed him to the ouse of a neighboring pastor, and returned to our nursery. We gazed on e merry little faces which smiled or rew sad in imitation of ours—those ttle ones to whose ear no word in our nguage is half so sweet as "mother" -and we wondered if that day could er come when they could say of us, She has outlived her usefulness; she no comfort to herself, and a burden everybody!" and we hoped that bere such a day would dawn we might be ken to our rest. God forbid that we ould outlive the love of our children! ather let us die while their hearts are part of our own, that our grave may watered with their tears, and our ve linked with hopes of heaven.

When the bell tolled for the mother's urial we went to the sanctuary to pay ur token of respect for the aged stranger, for we felt that we could give her emory a tear, even though her own ildren had none to shed.

"She was a good woman in her day, d toiled hard to bring us all up: she as no comfort to herself, and a burden to everybody else."

These cruel, heartless words rang our ears as we saw the coffin borne p the isle. The bell tolled long and ud, until its iron tongue had chronicled the years of the toil-worn mother. ne—two—three—four—five. How early, and almost merrily, each stroke ld of her once peaceful slumber in er mother's bosom, and of her seat at ightfall on her weary father's knee. ix—seven—eight—nine—ten, rang out he tale of her sports upon the greenward in the meadow and by the brook. leven—twelve—thirteen—fourteen—fteen, spoke more gravely of school ays, and little household joys and ares. Sixteen—seventeen—eighteen, ounded out the enraptured visions of maidenhood and the dream of early ove. Nineteen brought us the appy bride. Twenty spoke of the young mother, whose heart was fu o bursting with the new-sprung love which God had awakened in her bosom. And then stroke after stroke old of her early womanhood—of the ove, and cares, and hopes, and fears, nd toils through which she passed during these long years, till fifty rang out harsh and loud. From then to sixty each stroke told of the warm-hearted mother and grandmother, living over again her own joys and sorrows in those of her children and children's children. Every family of all the group wanted grandmother then, and the only strife was who should secure the prize; but hark! the bell tolls on! Seventy-one—two—three—four. She begins to grow feeble, requires some care, is not always perfectly patient or satisfied; she goes from one child's house to another, so that no one place seems like home. She murmurs in a plaintive tone, and after all her toil and weariness it is hard she cannot be allowed a home to die in; that she must be sent, rather than invited, from house to house. Eighty—eighty-one—two—three—four—ah! now she is a second child—now "she has outlived her usefulness, she has ceased to be a comfort to herself or anybody;" that is, she has ceased to be profitable to her earth-craving and money-grasping children.

Now sounds out, reverberating through our lonely forest, and echoing back from the "hill of the dead," eighty-nine! There she now lies in the coffin, cold and still; she makes no trouble now, demands no love, no soft words, no tender little offices. A look of patient endurance, we fancied also an expression of grief for unrequited love, sat on her marble features. Her children were there, clad in weeds of woe, and in irony we remembered the strong man's word's, "She was a good mother in her day.

When the bell ceased tolling, the strange minister rose in the pulpit. His form was very erect, and his voice strong, but his hair was silvery white. He read several passages of scripture expressive of God's compassion to feeble men, and especially of his tenderness when gray hairs are on him and his strength faileth. He then made some touching remarks on human frailty and of dependence on God, urging all present to make their peace with their Master while in health, that they might claim his promise when heart and flesh should fail them. Then he said, "The eternal God shall be thy refuge, and beneath thee shall be the everlasting arms." Leaning over the desk and gazing intently on the coffined form before him, he then said reverently, "From a little child I honored the aged, but never till gray hairs covered my own head did I know truly how much love and sympathy this class has a right to demand of their fellow creatures. Now I feel it. Our mother," he added, most tenderly, "who now lies in death before us, was a stranger to me, as are all her descendants. All I know of her is what her son has told me to-day—that she was brought to this town from afar, sixty-nine years ago, a happy bride; that she has passed most of her life toiling, as only mothers ever have strength to toil, until she had reared a large family of sons and daughters; that she left her home here, clad in the weeds of widowhood, to dwell among her children, and that, till health and vigor left her, she lived for you, her descendants.

You, who together have her love, and care, know how well you have requited her. God forbid that conscience should accuse and of you of ingratitude or murmuring on account of the care she has been to you of late. When you go back to your homes be careful of your words and your example before your own children, for the fruit of your own doing you will surely reap from them when you yourselves totter on the brink of the grave. I entreat you as a friend, as one who has himself entered the 'evening of life,' that you may never say in the presence of your families nor of Heaven, 'Our mother has outlived her usefulness; she was a burden to us.' Never, never, never; a mother cannot live so long as that! No; when she can no longer labor for her children, nor yet care for herself, she can fall like a precious weight on their bosom, and call forth by her helplessness all the noble, generous feelings of their nature."—Christian Era.

Have Courage.

It conduces much to our content if we pass [illegible] those things which happen to our trouble, and consider what is pleasing and prosperous, that by the representation of the better or worse may be blotted out. If I be overthrown in my suit at law, my house is left me still and my land, or I have a virtuous wife, or hopeful children, or kind friends, or good hopes. If I have lost one child it may be I have two or three still left me. Enjoy the present, whatsoever it may be, and be not solicitous for the future; for if you take your foot from the present standing, and thrust it forward toward tomorrow's events you are in a restless condition; it is like refusing to quench the present thirst by fearing you shall want drink the next day. If tomorrow you should want, your sorrow would come time enough though you do not hasten it; let your trouble tarry till its own day comes. Enjoy the blessings of this day, if God sends them, and the evils of it bear patiently and sweetly, for this day only is ours. We are dead to yesterday, and not born to the morrow.—Jeremy Taylor.

Ralph Wells says he once asked a little child how she came to be a Christian, and was answered:

"Why, I just saw the door open, and I went in."

Who could give a better reason for entering the fold?

GREAT SECOND ADVENT CONFERENCE.

Tuesday, the second day of the Conference, was not so interesting as the meeting held on the evening previous. Not being able to attend myself in the morning, I engaged a young brother to report the speeches; but, on looking over his notes, think it will scarcely compensate either your subscribers for reading, or your correspondent for copying them. I may, however, give you a few extracts of at least moderate, if not novel, interest. The principal speaker of the evening was Mr. C. Skrine. He opened his address with a loving and beautiful eulogy of the late Mr. Pennefather, lingering on his graces, and his ever-earnest and unflagging interest in the joyful hope of his Lord's return. In the evening of Tuesday, long and somewhat tedious addresses were given, which were not, however, entirely void of interest.

W. Edwards was the first speaker. He professed to treat on the subject: "The Times of the Gentiles;" but I confess my disappointment with his elucidation of the theme. Conference called to order, Eld. P. S. Buck in the chair.

The following resolution came before the Conference:

Whereas, As there is business of vital importance to be transacted at the June meeting of the Advent Christian Publishing Association, to be held in Chicago, therefore,

Resolved, That Eld. M. Chandler be sent as a delegate to the aforesaid meeting, if sanctioned by the official board.

Adjourned to 9 A. M. on the morrow.

Conference called to order on Sunday forenoon, Br. P. S. Buck in the chair. During conference Br. C. W. Pitcher presented himself for ordination. After quite a discussion as to whether it was constitutional to ordain at Quarterly Meetings, it was decided that a committee of three be appointed to lay it before the official board of the annual Conference, and consider the case. The committee was as follows: Brs. J. Janes, M. C. Chandler and G. W. Woodard.

It was decided to hold our next Quarterly Meeting at Iron Hill, about the first of July.

Preaching Saturday evening by Eld. P. S. Buck. Sunday at 10 o'clock had a love feast. It was a glorious meeting. Preaching at 11 by Sr. Janes, at 3 by Br. Janes, and in the evening by Br. Ridley. A good interest was manifested throughout the meeting.

ETERNITY.

Our twelve years old boy, now sleeping in the Brodhead Cemetery, after giving his heart to God last winter in our Brodhead protracted meeting, evinced his relish for religious themes by cutting out of newspapers, and preserving in his trunk, articles of interest to him, which were found carefully stored away after his death. As straws show which way the wind blows, so such selections show which way the mind was drifting. Among them the following poem was found, worthy the choice of a riper mind, and worthy of an insertion here, entitled:

ETERNITY.

Eternity! How long art thou!
To thee we wing our onward flight,
As flies the arrow from the bow,
As bounds the war-steed to the fight,
Fleet as the courser skims the ground,
Or winged vessel homeward bound.

Eternity! Even as a sphere
No end and no beginning shows,
No first, no last, in thee appear—
Thou hast no start, thou hast no close,
Thought's baffled pinions vainly try
To sweep thy range, Eternity.

Eternity! How long, how wide!
A ring whose ever widening round
Expanding still, as cycles glide,
Finds not, and ne'er shall find a bound.
Dread Ring! thy center's name is "Ever,"
While thy circumference is "Never."

Eternity! Thou endless day!
If once in every thousandth year
There came a bird, and bore away
A single grain from off this sphere,
Till all had vanished, hill and plain,
Eternity would still remain.

Eternity! How long thou art!
If from the eye, each thousand years,
One solitary drop should start,
Till ocean's cup o'erbrimmed with tears,
Till earth with all her hills were drowned,
Still art thou there, without a bound.

—Wesleyan.

Yes, long, long eternity, both to saint and sinner—an eternity of gain to the saint, but an eternity of loss to the sinner; the loss of eternal life, unfading glory, and the kingdom of God. The figures that can compute the gain of the saints, may be used to measure the eternal loss of sinners. O "Eternity!!!" Sinner, pause and pronounce the word, and think of its import.

THE Modoc war has come to a close by the surrender of Captain Jack and the remnant of his band. And now the question is what will be done with the prisoners.

It has been decided by the authorities at Washington that having surrendered they cannot be tried by the military, but must be turned over to the State of Oregon to be tried according to law. It is to be earnestly desired that these fiends will get their just deserts: and that they may be made to feel that murder is a crime for which Indians as well as white men are to be punished.

CAMPING.—The first day of the Wisconsin campmeeting (June 1st.) indicates a good meeting for the season. Tents, Ministers, and people are coming in from various directions. We hope for a blessed season. More anon.

A HIGHER STANDARD.—It is lamentably true that experimental religion is at a low ebb all over our land—low when compared with past centuries of religious experience, and low when compared with the gospel rule. There is a higher standard than professed Christians are living up to—a vitalizing, consecrating, experimental religion; and we as a people need to strike for a higher atmosphere of devotion. Our hearts must be so invigorated with the divine spirit, that carnality will loose its control. Let grace predominate, and the old man be crucified. Let the heart be baptized with sacred love, and the soul be fired with holy ambition. Then we can more easily infuse the truth into the hearts of those who love God, but lack instruction. Then we shall win sinners to Christ. Let us be more than theologians—like our Master, let our great mission be to save sinners, using the truth as a means to this important end.

Every Tree is Known by its Fruit

BY MARTHA TRASK.

"For a good tree bringeth not forth corrupt fruit; neither doth a corrupt tree bring forth good fruit, for every tree is known by its fruit, for of thorns men do not gather figs, nor of a bramble bush gather they grapes." "A good man out of the good treasure of his heart bringeth forth that which is good; and an evil man out of the evil treasure of his heart bringeth forth that which is evil; for of the abundance of the heart the mouth speaketh.' If you plant a young thorn tree, trim off all the thorns, and crooked limbs, and take great care in pruning and training, you have a beautiful looking tree, but it begins to grow; after a time you look at your tree, and behold the thorns have grown again full size, and you have nothing but a thorn tree. But you cut that tree off and graft in a sweet apple tree, and it grows and brings forth fruit. Just so with the human heart, we may trim off all the out side appearances, and may grow well for a while but the thorns are in the heart, and they will show themselves, "For out of the abundance of the heart the mouth speaketh." But, if Christ be planted in the heart what will be your fruits? "ye have your fruit unto holiness," and then we have the spirit of Christ. What are the fruits of the spirit? "Love, joy, peace, longsuffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, temperance." And they that are Christ's have crucified the flesh with the affections and lusts. Christ said in his parable to the Pharisees, "why beholdest thou the moat that is in thy brother's eye, but perceivest not the beam that is in thine own eye? Thou hypocrite." And while we are looking at the moat that is in our brother's eye we will fall and be lost forever. If we examine our own hearts and see that they are right before God, and keep our eye on Jesus who is the giver of every good and perfect gift, we will have no time to look at others imperfections, or stumble at others faults.

While we are neglecting our own salvation by looking to see what our brother is doing, the Bridegroom will come and they that are ready will go into the marriage. How many we find now like Gideon's army, they are fearful and afraid to trust God to keep them from all sin. God has not promised to save us in our sin, but save us from our sins. If we are sinning and repenting every day of our lives, is not this way of doing, the thorns that we are trimming off, and they grow out again only to be trimmed again, why not have good fruit grafted in and go on unto perfection? God is trying the hearts of his people, and like Gideon's army, when they were tried there were only three hundred that lapped water like a dog, and out of the multitudes of professing Christians there will be but few that will bow humbly at Jesus feet to drink from the fountain that never dries. Paul practiced self denial: "If meat make my brother to offend, I will eat no flesh while the world stands, lest I make my brother to offend." Surely we can picture a little self denial, so that others shall not stumble over us. Let us keep our eyes on Jesus, not anything around us. Instead of finding fault with others, let us work for the Lord; let us get the beam out of our own eye then we shall see clearly to get the moat out of our brother's eye. Oh, that God would "strip us for the race," and "harness us for the battle." Paul says: "Wherefore seeing we also are compassed about with so great a cloud of witnesses, let us lay aside every weight, and the sin which does so easily beset us, and let us run with patience the race that is set before us, looking unto Jesus the author and finisher of our faith; who for the joy that was set before him endured the cross, despising the shame, and is set down at the right hand of the throne of God, for consider him that endured such contradiction of sinners. Ye have not yet resisted unto blood striving against sin." He says, despise not the chastening of the Lord, nor faint when we are rebuked of him, for our light affliction which is but for a moment, worketh for us a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory; while we look not at the things which are seen: for the things which are seen are temporal, but the things which are not seen are eternal. Let us then take our eyes from things around us and fix them on Christ our life giver. O, that the children of God had a greater longing for purity of heart; for many professors are famishing for the bread of life, when our Father's table is well supplied; why not strike out and have a glorious feast? Blessed be God he is able to feed all that come to him, without money and without price. Our measure is filled full, pressed down, shaken together and running over. Glory be to God for a full and free salvation. Ask and it shall be given. O! how good the Lord is. My heart is full of God's love, but in order to enjoy this great blessing our will must be swallowed up in the will of Christ. We must be grafted into Christ then we will bring forth fruits of righteousness unto God, for it is impossible to get good fruit from a thorn tree, though you may prune it all the days of your life the thorns will grow.

The Resurrection.

BY CHARLES E DARROW.

Jesus said to Martha, "I am the resurrection," (Jno. 11: 35.) which would imply that he is the vivifier, the restorer of life to the dead. He rebukes the grim spell of death, and life immediately flows through every part of the dead. He speaks, and his words are clothed with life. His very expression is clothed with such authority that even the dead revive at his command. There is sufficient proof that through Jesus Christ and therefore it may be expected that he will "turn and overturn" the inhabitants of the whole earth until Christ the only begotten Son," shall have dominion from sea to sea, and from pole to pole. There are instances recorded in the Old Testament that prove the doctrine of the resurrection to every observing mind beyond the conception of a doubt; and though the intermediate state may be to some long and to others very short scarcely a moment perhaps, yet nevertheless a resurrection from the dead is most certain. The widow's son of Sarepta (1st. Kings 17: 22.) the Shunamite's son (2nd. Kings 4: 35·) and the man who was cast into the sepulchre of Elisha (2nd. Kings 13:21.) In these three instances we may notice the doctrines of the resurrection substantiated, and also observe the gradation of omnipotence. The first of these was restored to life when he had but just expired; the prophet Elijah who raised him being present at his decease: the second, after he had been dead sufficient time for his mother to go from Mount Carmel and return (A distance of sixteen miles) bringing with her the prophet Elisha who raised her son from the the dead; and the last not till they were about to inter him in the prophet's grave. And in the New Testament also we discover that in like manner Jairus' daughter (Mark 5: 41.) and Dorcas (Acts 9: 40.) were both restored to life soon after having died; the widow's son of Nain when they were carrying him out to his burial place; and Lazarus, after he had been dead four days. From the foregoing we may not only notice that God can raise the dead, but also that he has done it: and now let us proceed to notice.

GOD CAN RAISE THE DEAD,

THE CERTAINTY OF THE RESURRECTION.

"There shall be a resurrection of the dead." (Acts 24: 15.) It is vain and foolish for man to presume that God will not raise the dead, because he cannot comprehend the manner in which it is to be done. Neither is it wise in man to deny the certainty of the resurrection of the dead, because of their state of decomposition, or utter extinction of being, for Christ said, God is able of these stones to raise up chil. unto Abraham. (Matt. 3: 9. and Luke 3: 8.) And though men be burned into ashes, and the ashes scattered by the four winds of heaven, it is not impossible for God to restore them again: for there will be no particle of matter annihilated in God's universe. Or if the dust of a thousand generations be mingled together, he can as easily restore each particle to its proper place as to create man in the beginning. And though the wild beast destroy him, or the fishes of the sea devour him, so that a part of the human becomes a part of the beast: or, what is still more complicated, though the cannibal who himself must die and rise again, devour other human beings and other anthropophagite devour him again; and though as modern Sadducees did in the case of the woman who had been married to seven husbands successively, (Matt. 22: 28.) yet we may still answer as our blessed Savior did: "ye do err not knowing the scriptures nor the power of God." (Matt. 22: 29.) But if God can and will raise the dead, then let us proceed to notice the NATURE OF THE RESURRECTION.

The post master distributes the mail, and every letter is deposited in its proper place; and when the most obscure or insignificant letter is called for he can produce it with as much ease as he would hand out the mail bag at the door. The apothecary, when called upon for a prescription, needs no time for reflection, but immediately selects the desired one from a thousand others. The jeweler takes up all the parts of the watch and joins them together each in its proper place though they may be so minute that the naked eye cannot discern them. Much more can he who knows all things to perfection, collect together the scattered fragments of man's organization, and reanimate them with spiritual life. The apostle tells us that it is "this mortal" that "must put on immortality." (1st Cor. 15: 53.) and also "to every seed is given his own body" (1st Cor. 15: 38.) I know it is said "there is a natural body and there is a spiritual body" (1st Cor. 15: 44.) nevertheless we are to understand that the latter is simply the former made spiritual, for "it is raised a spiritual body." (1st Cor. 15: 44.) "For this corruptible must put on incorruption" (1st Cor. 15: 53.] therefore it is this identical body that perishes, which is to be raised again. It is not agreeable to the plan of divine procedure that one body should suffer in this life and another receive the reward in that life which is to come. These same feet that now stand in the way of sinners, and carry men on in their ungodly courses, shall stand in the day of judgment, and these now covetous and lascivious eyes shall be punished "with everlasting destruction." (2nd Thes. 1: 9.)

EXTENT OF THE RESURRECTION.

"All that are in the graves" (Jno. 5, 29,) and "all that are in the sea" (Rev, 20: 13,) "I saw the dead small and great stand before God" (Rev. 20: 12,) Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob will be there, the best as well as the meanest of Adam's race will be there, yes, all will be there. The betrayer of Christ and the one who pierced him shall be there, yes, and all the "ungodly shall be there; and these shall go away into everlasting punishment; but the righteous into life eternal." (Matt. 25: 45,) Surely Isaac's eyes shall not be dim then (Gen. 27: 1,) neither will Jacob halt upon his thigh. (Gen. 32: 31) Leah will not be tender-eyed (Gen. 29:27) Mephibosheth lame in his legs. (2nd Saml. 4: 4.) O happy day! when the saints, in the "new Jerusalem" shall greet each other and praise God forevermore.

A Burial at Sea.

A solemn summons! The ship's bell tolls solemnly. The courses are all hauled up: the main top-sail is braced aback, the frigate's way is deadened as much as may be, and then the silence is broken by the hollow beat of the waves, and the subdued, murmurous sound of men mustering by hundreds slowly and gravely though it be. The officers in glittering uniforms, are grouped on the lee side of the quarter-deck; the marines are drawn up opposite, in full dress; the crew in their snowy "line frocks," cluster about the "brooms" and gangways. The body of the poor sailor boy—how sad his fate— closely sewed up in his little hammock and placed upon a rude bier, is borne from below on the shoulders of his messmates—how neatly rigged these pall-bearers, and what softness in those weather-beaten faces —and is rested gently on the ship's side. The chaplain in his robes approaches; all uncover.

"I am the resurrection and the life, saith the Lord; he that believeth in me, though he were dead yet shall he live."

The words fall upon the ear and heart—in that presence, on the "pure and unsearchable sea," dark not from obscurity, but from vastness—like a revelation, newly heard. Over the boy are the stars of his country in pall—the stars of immortality in assurance! A light cloud passes; there is a soft sprinkle of rain. Those drops are the last touches of freshness in vital air, ere, at the words "We therefore commit his body to the deep," the spangled drapery is lifted, and the hammock is shot forward, to drop with a thrilling plash, and to sink ghastly glimmering into the salt depths. The marines fire three volleys—an honor accorded to the humblest of those who wear their country's livery—the ship and ship's life move gayly on, and the rest of griefs is for them who are far away.

"O mother, praying God will save
Thy sailor, while thy head is bowed,
His heavy-shotted hammock-shroud
Drops in his vast and wandering grave."
—Harper's Magazine.

Looking for Jesus.

Caroline Fry tells us of a Welsh peasant who, during a long period of his declining life, every morning, year after year, opened his casement window towards the east and looked out to see if Jesus Christ was coming. What loving anxiety was manifested by those simple and tender longings of the heart which led the waiting peasant to his window every morning! It was not the place to look for Christ's personal presence, and yet he failed not to see him in the radiant beams of the morning light. As the sun shed his glory over the world, he doubtless thought of the brighter Sun of Righteousness whose redemption glory lights up hopes of a dying world. His continuous out-look, morning after morning, must have been repaid by a spiritual sight of Jesus, else deferred hope would have sickened his heart. No one looks to Jesus with an anxious prayerful and believing look who does not see him. Jesus is everywhere—He is hid only to those who look not for him.

This man's earnest looking for Christ indicated his readiness to receive him, and enjoy communion with him. We do not look sincerely for the coming of one we love not, or are ready to welcome when he comes. Having fitted up our dwelling, and arranged to his taste the apartment we look for the approach of our friend. We look out in joyous anticipations of still greater joy in the hearty hand-pressure, or loving embrace to be realized when he comes. So, when the Christian looks for Jesus believingly, trustfully looks for his coming, his heart is ready to embrace him and to enjoy his presence.

The Pope's Illness.

The Pope has been repeatedly reported as alarmingly ill, and as being at times in a lethargic state. In all probability, however, the end of his long career cannot be far off. He has held on to life with a tenacity which has been wonderful. Nearly twenty years ago he was thought to be in his dotage, prematurely old, but he has displayed a vigor of body and of will which has surprised all who knew anything of his condition.

He was born on the 13th of May, 1793, and was consequently 80 years old in May last. He was elected Pope in 1846, and manifested decidedly liberal tendencies which made him very popular with the people of Rome. He entered at once upon a course of reforms, putting an end to numerous clerical abuses, and extending the right of self-government. The wave of revolution of 1848, which spread over nearly all Europe, reached Rome. The people yielded to it in a measure, but on the assassination of his minister, Count Rossi, in November, Pius IX became alarmed for his own safety and fled clandestinely into the territory of the king of Naples, where he was surrounded by reactionary ecclesiastics. After Rome had been besieged and taken by the French, he returned to Rome in 1850 and resumed a strictly ecclesiastical and despotic government, from the spirit of which he never departed. He was easily persuaded by his clerical advisers that his concessions had been abused, and that the people must be ruled by an iron rod. Since 1850 he has been exercising all his power to increase the authority and influence of the Papacy. Having resolved upon the declaration of the Immaculate Conception of Mary as an authoritative dogma of the church in 1854, he assembled a council at Rome by which it was decreed and formally announced to the people in December of that year. Having resolved on proclaiming the doctrine of the infallibilty of the Pope, he assembled another council in 1869, and, despite great opposition, the dogma was decreed and proclaimed. This was the height of his ambition, to be clothed with divine attributes. The declaration has been followed by what looks like formidable schism; and while the Pope thunders out his excommunication against all who doubt his infallibility, the paovidence of God has remarkably rebuked the impious claim. One country after another has been casting off papal authority and interference; and it was stated in Rome in January last, that seventy-five members of the Ecumenical Council that voted the Pope's infallibility had died up to that time. Among the seventy-five were eight cardinals. The saddest stroke of all was when the army of Victor Emanuel entered Rome and relieved him of his temporal power.

The cardinals now living are nearly all at Rome, and on the death of the Pope an election would probably take place speedily. Preparatory to, an election the cardinals are shut up in what is called "The Conclave," the most rigid means being taken to prevent all communication with the outer world. In order to an election two-thirds must vote for the same candidate. Twice each day during the conclave the cardinals assemble, and each deposits in a chali[illegible] altar the name of his candidate. If the requisite majority is not obtained the ballots are burned. This is called the "Scrutiny." It votes be added to those given to a candidate by those who voted for others, it is called "Access." If the cardinals of two parties unite on one man, this is called "Compromise." If there be a general movement and acclamation for any particular candidate, he is elected by what is called "Inspiration," but the inspiration comes from some human source. Pius IX. was elected by "inspiration."—Baptist Weekly.

Power of Memory.

Dr. Johnson, it is said, never forgot anything he had seen, heard, or read. Burke, Clarendon, Gibbon, Locke and Tilotson, were all distinguished for strength of memory. When alluding to this subject, Sir William Hamilton observes: For intellectual power of the highest order, none were distinguished above Grotius and Pascal; and Grotius and Pascal forgot nothing they had ever read or thought. Teibnetz and Euler were not less celebrated for their intelligence than for their memory; and both could repeat the whole of the "Æneid." Donellus knew the "Corpus Juris" by heart; and yet he was one of the profoundest and most original speculators in jurisprudence. Ben Johnson tells us that he could repeat all that he had ever written, and whole books that he had read. Themistocles could call by their names the twenty thousand citizens of Athens. Cyrus is reported to have known the name of every soldier in his army. Hortensus (after Cicero, the greatest orator of Rome,) after setting a whole day at a public sale, correctly ennunciated from memory all the things sold, their prices, and the names of their purchasers. Neibuhr, the historian, was distinguished for his memory than his acuteness. In his youth he was employed in one of the public offices of Denmark.. Part of a book of accounts having been destroyed, he restored it by an effort of memory.—Methodist Recorder.

Good News.

Behold I bring good tidings of great joy, for unto you is born this day in the city of David, a Savior which is Christ the Lord. (Luke 2: 10-11.) The good news was of a savior—news that man, helpless and lost, had longed for; and, as thousands caught the gladdening echoes of the angels theme, they sent a strain reverberant up to heaven:—

"'A Savior!' let creation sing!
'A Savior!' let all heavens ring!
He's God with us; we feel him ours;
Our souls and all their joyful powers
And earth shall echo with our song,
And angel-harps its notes prolong."

Brethren, readers, have the tidings been joyful ones to you? Have you felt your need of a Savior? Have your hearts throbbed responsive to the prophet's warning cry, "Flee from the wrath to come?" Have you yearned with irrepressible longing after a God that you felt to be absent, after a holiness that you feared was unattainable? Then should the tidings be joyful ones indeed, that "unto you was born in the city of David a Savior, which is Christ the Lord." To you, to you, for the message is to all people. Write not bitter things against yourselves, ye downcast and desponding ones; stagger not at the promises, O ye of little faith, but embrace the pardon signed and sealed. The message is to you, for God was in Christ reconciling the world unto Himself, and not imputing their trespasses unto them. And he hath committed unto us the word of reconciliation, and now we are embassadors for Christ, as though God did beseech you by us; and we pray you in Christ's stead, "Be ye reconciled to God." For he hath made him who knew no sin to be a sin-offering for us, that we might be made the righteousness of God in him.

Great Mistakes.

The following mistakes so commonly made are worthy of note. It is a great mistake to set up our standard of right and wrong and judge other people accordingly. It is a great mistake to measure the enjoyments of others by our own; to expect uniformity of opinion in this world; to look for judgment and experience in youth; to endeavor to mould all dispositions alike; not to yield to immaterial trifles; to look for perfection in our own actions; to worry ourselves and others with what cannot be remedied; not to make allowances for the infirmities of others; to consider everything impossible we can not perform; to believe only what our finite minds can grasp; to be able to understand everything. The greatest mistakes are, to live for time, when any moment may launch us into eternity.

THE INSPIRED WRITERS.—The writers of the Bible were brought up in very different stations. Some were princes or priests, others were shepherds or fishermen; they lived in various places, and wrote at various times, through a period of one thousand years. They treated on different subjects—laws, history, psalms, proverbs, prophecies, biography, and letters on doctrine and practice. Yet, how remarkable is their argument! how powerfully they support and illustrate each other; all testifying to the same truth, whether relating to God or man, or the means of salvation in type or substance. Truth is characteristic of their writings; they are faithful in declaring and in denouncing judgment to those they addressed.

"A YOUNG lady teaching her class in Sunday-school found the lesson for a certain day embracing the Savior's declaration, 'Verily, verily, I say unto you, he that believeth on me hath everlasting life.' A little girl inquired, 'Is that true, is it surely true?' 'O yes,' replied the teacher, 'it is surely true, for Christ says so, and whatever he says is true.' 'It must be very nice,' said the child, 'to have everlasting life and to know that, whatever comes, you are saved, and saved even now.' 'Yes,' answered the teacher, 'it is a great blessing, indeed.' Then you are saved, are you not?' asked the interesting scholar. 'I hope so,' was the reply. 'Hope so! exclaimed the child; 'why, I thought you told me just now it was sure enough?'"

WE are always complaining that our days are few, but acting as though we thought there would be no end to them.

SAID a very old man, "Some folks are always complaining about the weather, but I am very thankful when I wake up in the morning to find any weather at all." We may smile at the simplicity of the old man, but still his language indicates a spirit that contributes much to a calm and peaceable life. It is better and wiser to cultivate that spirit than to be continually complaining of things as they are. Be thankful for such mercies as you have, and if God sees it will be for your good and his glory, he will give you many more. At least, do not make yourself and others unhappy by ingratitude and complaint.

HAVE you not often wondered at the human utterances of the Divine word? It thunders like God, and yet weeps like a man. It seems impossible that anything should be too little for the word of God to notice, or too bitter, or even too sinful for that book to overlook. It touches humanity at all points. Everywhere it is a personal, familiar acquaintance, and seems to say to itself, "Shall I hide this thing from Abraham my friend?"—Spurgeon.

THERE was a wonderful truth taught in the goblet which the genius of a heathen fashioned. Having made a model of a serpent he fixed it in the bottom of the cup. Coiling for the spring, a pair of gleaming eyes in its head, and in its open mouth fangs raised to strike, it lay beneath the ruby wine. He who raised the cup to his lips to quench his thirst and quaff the wine, could not see what lay beneath, till, as he reached the dregs, that dreadful head rose up and glistened before his eyes. So when life's cup is nearly emptied, and sin's last pleasure quaffed, and the bitter dregs are being drained, shall rise the ghastly terrors of remorse, and death, and judgment upon the despairing soul. Be assured, a serpent lurks at the bottom of guilt's sweetest pleasure.

A RECENT traveler says: "What always impresses me more than anything else, in Egypt and Palestine, has been the entire absence of cheerful and exhilarating music, especially from children. You never hear them singing in the huts. I never heard a song that deserves the name in the streets or houses of Jerusalem. One heavy burden of voiceless sadness rests upon that forsaken land. The daughters of music have been brought low. The mirth of the tabret ceaseth, the noise of them that rejoice endeth; the joy of the harp ceaseth!"

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

AT HOME.

—Chicago's great Jubilee has passed off, and was a grand success, both in respect to attendance and music. The attendance from abroad was immense.

—A Memphis dispatch announces that the cholera has actually broken out in that city and in other Mississippi river towns below that point. This most terrible of all diseases has made an early appearance warning all to guard in every possible way against the spread of the disease.

—Our dispatches give a fearful number of destructive fires. A loss of $15,000 at El Paso, Ill.; $60,000 at Springfield, Ill.; $50,000, at Princeville, Peoria county, Ill.; $87 000 at Johnston, R. I.; $130,000 at Philadelphia; $60,000 at Rochester, N. Y.; heavy fires at River Point, R. I. and in the woods of Maine and Nova Scotia, and some minor burnings.

—Two counties in Mich have been visited by a disastrous tornado. The tract was about a mile wide. There was a steady roaring and booming as if a great sea wave was sweeping along across the country. Barns were unroofed in a flash. Orchards ruined, forests and fences demolished. The damage to houses was fortunately light, none standing in the direct path of the hurricane.

—Some persons who are described as leading Irishmen of New York, Philadelphia, and other cities, announces that a convention will be held next month in Cleaveland to form a National Irish League for the political aggrandizement of Irishmen. Irishmen, they declare, have not had their fair share of the offices, and this for the reason that they have wasted their strength in quarreling among themselves. The Cleaveland Convention will restore a permanent harmony among the Celtic citizens of the country, and will pledge all its members to vote for any Irishman who may be a candidate for office, no matter what may be his religion or his politics.

—We hardly know what to think of the remarkable dispatch which describes a covenant said to have been entered into by Henry Ward Beecher, Henry C. Bowen, and Theodore Tilton. The effect of the publication of the document must be to bring what is known as the "Beecher scandal" to a crisis. It is not improbable that there is a huge hoax in the dispatch, and that no such covenant was ever made. If the facts alleged are true then Mr. Beecher has acted very unwisely in keeping silent under the charges brought against his personal chastity. When innocent men are accused in that way, their impulse is not to keep silence. Such a course is apt to lead to a suspicion that they are afraid to speak lest they might say too much for their own good. A really innocent man is seldom afraid to denounce his accusers and dare them to bring on their proof, or else hold their peace.

—The most destructive tornado ever witnessed in the western country, passed a few miles North of Bushnell, McDonough Co., Ill. About five o'clock a small cloud was seen rising in the southwest. There was a little lightning now and then visible, but no one would have dreamed that the small cloud could have spread such destruction broadcast over the face of the country, and in so very short a time. The cloud seemed to travel nearly due north, and presently a pretty strong breeze sprung up from the east and a similar cloud was seen making its way towards Youngstown (northwest) whither the first mentioned seemed also drifting. The two were evidently making for the same point, and in the course of half an hour the junction was complete, when, instead of two small clouds, one very large, dark, terrible one was seen brooding over the country in the vicinity of Youngstown. The cloud now assumed a funnel shape, with the small end down, and it was also observed the same was lowering to the earth rapidly. About this time a terrible rumbling noise was heard, and the country seemed enveloped in one continuous sheet of lightning. Now the work of destruction had commenced in earnest. Buildings were torn to pieces, trees taken by the roots, horses and cattle raised and carried a short distance, and then dashed to the earth with a force that crushed them, fences blown to pieces, and etc. Our space will not permit us to give the full particulars of the damage caused by this greatest of tornadoes. We have heard positively of but one death, but many personal injuries. It is reported that near 200 head of stock has been killed, and the damage to property will not fall far short of $80,000.

—The South part of Warren Co., Ill. was visited by one of those destructive whirlwind tornadoes which leaves naught but ruin and desolation in its track. The loss in the county, occasioned by the visitation of this terrible tornado, cannot be fully estimated, and a complete description of the ruin it has wrought is almost impossible for language to express. The course of the tornado was a little south of east through Swan and Greenbush. The whirlwind came down west of William Huston's, about three miles south of Roseville, and the west side of the railroad track. Here it unroofed his barn, sheds, and tore down fences, passing on with a terrible roaring, uprooting and breaking down trees, until it came to an unoccupied log house belonging to J. Worden, which it unroofed and demolished. The width here appeared to be nearly a mile' and gradually drawing in as it reached the creek bottom, into which it came with irresistible force, sweeping almost everything before it. Onward went the dark cloud of wind whirling and roaring up the hillside until it came to the log house of Wm. Jared, unroofing it in an instant. Mrs. Coon, a widow, (daughter of Mr. Jared,) and her child took refuge under a bed in one corner of the room. A stick of timber was thrown across that part and held it fast, and thus saved their lives. The furniture and clothing were scattered around promiscously by the wind. A few rods beyond, the wind went into the timber, and twisted off, tore up, or bent down the toughest trees, laying the tops in almost every direction. On the top of the hill, trees which had withstood the storms of centuries, were either leveled with the earth, or their enormous branches broken, and the bark peeled off from the smallest saplings, which the wind had twisted like withes. The course of the wind was down the creek bottom where it seemed to have concentrated and settled down to its work of destruction. At this place the plank-house of Thomas Warmoth stood, and which the wind scattered in fragments in every direction. Mrs. Warmoth was taken up with a babe in her arms, and carried several rods and left in the top of a fallen tree. The chair in which she was sitting when carried off has a tree on it, showing how narrow was her escape with life. She was bruised somewhat, but not seriously, while the babe still in her arms escaped injury.

ABROAD.

— It is reported that the Bank of France will advance the funds necessary to complete the payment of the war idemnity, and the evacuation of French territory by German troops will follow immediately.

—The massacre of thirty thousand prisoners of war, in Southwestern China, by the Imperial army, indicates not only the large scale on which hostilities are being conducted there, but also the merciless instincts of the combatants. As a rule, the Chinese are as cruel and bloodthirsty as savages.

— The Asiatic cholera has appeared in two Prussian villages contiguous to Russian Poland. There is some reason for believing that this will be a good cholera year, not only on the other side of the Atlantic but also on this side. Clean up your yards and alleys.

The Christian Life.

The King in His Beauty.

BY F. D.

Jesus is the King. He is not like an earthly monarch. Yet when he comes to rule he will reign in glory and and majesty. The hosts of heaven will parade before him, and angels and seraphs will bow in his presence. The glory of his person will excel the brightness of the sun, and the lightning of his power will shake the earth.

But he is not like earthly monarchs. They build their empires by intrigue, and dispense favors to the rich and learned. Jesus will judge in righteousness, and grant favors to the meek and lowly ones who have honored his name. He will gather to himself those who have been despised on earth because of his name.

Earthly monarchs are corrupt. The "King in his beauty" will be pure and holy. And into his presence none but holy ones can enter. All around must be pure, and pure from the heart. No bribery or corruption can enter his presence. No folly or deceit can abide there.

The King in his beauty is unchangeable. Earthly monarchs change their policy, but Jesus never will. He is the "same yesterday, to-day, and forever." His character is fixed, and his character will be in accordance with it. Hence, we need to be complete in righteousness to stand in his presence. His righteousness must be our righteousness, and his beauty our beauty.

And when the King in his glory and beauty shall visit the earth, what a glad time it will be for the poor way-worn pilgrims, who have toiled on, striving against sin and Satan, and who, amid the sneers and scoffs of those around, have still held fast to the sure Word of God. "Purified, made white, and tried," they now can rest from earthly toil and strife, and forever enjoy the glories of God's kingdom. The King will gladly welcome them to his presence, and give them a home in the city of God, and the earth arrayed in beauty and clothed in glory, where the tempter and the curse can never come.

A Minister's Wife.

One of the members of that dignified and perplexed sisterhood thus discusses the situation in the Interior.

I have never been able to understand why it is that so much more is expected of a minister's wife than of any other Christian lady in the church. Certainly she does not have any more time to spare from her household duties, for in these she must be a model of neatness and economy. Nor has she any more money to spend for charitable purposes than any other people have; and yet there is a terrible hubbub in Israel if she shows an unwillingness to give to every one that comes and for every object; and very often she must contend with poor health, the result of overwork. Every church should have a sewing circle; so we have too in our little church. I find that each member is willing that the circle should work for the poor, but only one woman, as yet, besides myself, has ever taken any material to work on. It so happens that I know how to do nearly all kinds of work; from furnishing material to sewing on the last button, and they are quite willing that I should do it all. I have to work with all my strength to get them to work at all, and then I come home with a nervous headache, and get no sleep till midnight, or even later. Whether it be the circle for the elder or younger ladies, it's always the same. If it is a church fair or festival or Christmas tree, the burden of the planning and the work is laid on my shoulders, because, forsooth, I am the "minister's wife." I do think we might be suffered to have a little peace when we go out to make our calls. But so it is not with me. It is a pattern to cut or fit, or to start some crotchet work, and to lend my needles or hook, and they scarcely ever remember to come home. Some of our people have no machine, and would be so glad if I would do a little stitching for them, and by the time I get home, I am greeted after this, "Mrs. X. ma wants to know if you won't hem this ruffling for her; she says your machine hems so much better than hers, and she sent this sauce for tea." Is it any wonder if I feel saucy enough by that time? If I make anything nice I am really afraid to show it, for I am sure to hear "Oh! how nice that is. It would be so nice for our baby, or for grandma; I guess I'll get some stuff and have you make me one." I do not understand why it is the minister's wife is expected to make the first call on strange ladies, the first to welcome new members into the church; to lead the women's prayer meeting; in fact be the first at everything and in everything. Is it possible that people think when they employ a minister, his wife is thrown in "to boot"? If this is what they do think, it is high time they were taught better things. Many a good and true pastoress has been dragged down to an untimely grave by this persistent and Christian oppression.

The Scoffer Silenced.

In the backwoods of Canada there resided a good minister, who one evening went out to meditate, as Isaac did, in the fields. He soon found himself on the borders of a forest, which he entered, and walked along a track which had been trodden before, musing, musing still, until at last the shadows of twilight gathered around him, and he began to think how he should spend a night in the forest. He trembled at the idea of remaining there, with the poor shelter of a tree into which he would be compelled to climb.

On a sudden he saw a light in the distance among the trees; and imagining it might be from the window of some cottage, where he would find a hospitable retreat, he hastened to it, and to his surprise found a space cleared, and trees laid down to make a platform, and upon it a speaker addressing a multitude. He thought to himself, "I have stumbled on a company of people who, in this dark forest, have assembled to worship God, and some minister is preaching to them at this late hour in the evening concerning the kingdom of God and his righteousness." But, to his surprise and horror, when he came nearer, he found a man declaiming against God; daring the Almighty to do his worst upon him; speaking terrible things in his wrath against the justice of the Most High, and venturing most bold and awful assertions concerning his own disbelief in a future state. It was altogether a singular scene. The spot was lighted up by pine knots, which cast a glare here and there, while the thick darkness in other places still reigned. The people were intent on listening to the orator; and when he sat down thunders of applause were given to him, each one seeming to emulate the other in his praise.

Thought the minister, "I must not let this pass; I must rise and speak. The honor of my God and his cause demand it." He feared to speak, for he knew not what to say, having come there suddenly; but he would have ventured had not something else occured. A man of middle age, hale and strong, rose, and leaning on his staff he said:

"My friends, I have something to say to you to-night. I am not about to refute any of the arguments of the orator. I shall not criticise his style. I shall say nothing concerning what I believe to be the blasphemies he has uttered; but I shall simply relate to you a fact, and, after I have done that you shall draw your own conclusions. Yesterday I walked by the side of yonder river. I saw on its floods a young man in a boat; the boat was unmanageable; it was going fast towards the rapids. He could not use the oars, and I saw that he was not capable of bringing the boat to the shore. I saw that young man wring his hands in agony. By and by he gave up the attempt to save his life, kneeled down and cried with desperate earnestness 'O God, spare my soul! If my body cannot be saved, save my soul'! I heard him confess that he had been a blasphemer. I heard him vow that if his life were spared he would never be such again. I heard him implore the mercies of heaven for Jesus Christ's sake, and earnestly plead that he might be washed in his blood. These arms saved that young man from the flood. I plunged in, brought the boat to shore, and saved his life. That same young man has just now addressed you, and cursed his Maker! What say you to this, sirs?"

The speaker sat down. You may guess what a shudder ran through the young man himself, and how the audience in a moment changed their notes, and saw that, after all, while it was a fine thing to brag and act the bravado against Almighty God on dry land, and when danger was distant, it was not quite so grand to think ill of him when near the verge of the grave. We believe there is enough conscience in every man to convince him that God must punish him for his sin, and that in every heart the words of Scripture will find an echo—"If he turn not he will whet his sword."

Correspondence.

From Wesley Royce, Toledo, O.

I continue to talk of the soon-coming of Jesus and all the kindred subjects to us so dear, and how the truth, firmly and kindly spoken, will arouse the minds of the sleeping virgins and draw the attention of even the wicked. How sweet the news to the heart full of love to God. I have seen the countenance light up with a healthful glow; sweet blushes and love shine out unmistakably pure when we mention the nearness of His coming. No heart that is in possession of the Spirit of Christ but loves to hear these tidings; none but those warped all out of shape by modern orthodoxy and prejudice. O how I pity them who cannot and will not believe this grand event just ahead. How terrible their fate who continue to reject the light and truth that shines so brightly on this all-important subject. How glad I am that—as I was once blind—now I see. This blessed hope is my joy and my song; 'tis the first thought that breaks on my mind every morning, and this thought, Jesus come, O, come quickly, seems to be sweetest and last as I close my eyes to rest. I am waiting patiently, still a stranger and pilgrim, weary at times, casting a wishful look toward our "city" and with joy I welcome every harbinger of his coming. I try and note every indication of the fulfillment of prophecy. Let us all be ready when the Master comes.

From W. C. Hicks, Port Sanilac, Mich.

Feeling some of you would like to hear from me, and also wishing to contribute my share to the interest of the whole, I write these lines. Port Sanilac, my home at present, is a pleasant village on Lake Huron shore, has about four hundred inhabitants, boasts of three chapels, Congregationalist, Methodist and Adventist, several good stores and only two places where whisky is sold. The people seem to be kind to each other; quite a few of them obtain a living by fishing, which they engage in both summer and winter; the ice being lodged along the shore several weeks this spring makes it dull for them, and in fact every one else; there is also quite a lot of wood and hemlock bark shipped from this place. In religious matters, tradition prevails to a large extent, consequently the mass are in the arms of "peace and safety," going to Him instead of Him coming to us, asking: "Where is the promise of His coming? All things continue as they were, etc." A few are endeavoring to keep their lamps trimmed and burning, having the oil of God's truth. Prayer meetings are held once a week. Eld. George Wright is the pastor of this church; meetings are well attended. I have been permitted to labor some in the Master's vineyard since I came here, of which I will give you some items in my next. The Lord has been very gracious to me. I have more reason than ever to be grateful to Him. Praise His dear name. Only a little while and He will be here. Be faithful dear brethren, the coming of the Lord draweth nigh; let your light shine; be humble; we will soon get home, sweet home. Come, Lord Jesus, come quickly. Peace be with you all. Brethren, pray for me.

From E. B. Scott, Amboy, Ill.

Our meeting at Ashland, Newaygo county, Mich., was a good one. It was well attended and the best of feeling prevailed. The Lord was with us by His Spirit. On Sunday afternoon Br. Wilson, of Ashland, was buried in the likeness of Christ's death. In the evening a goodly number sat around the Lord's table. It was good to be there. At the close we sang that beautiful hymn,

"Shall we know each other there?"

And then took the parting hand of many loved ones in Christ. I shall never forget them, and the memory of the blessed associations with them will be sweet. I hope to meet them soon in the everlasting kingdom.

At present I am in Amboy. Shall be with the church here over Sunday, the 18th inst., and, if the Lord will, with the church in Oneida, Sunday the 25th inst. I want to labor in the vineyard as the Lord may direct.

From Geo. Thomson, Arena, Wis

Supposing that the dear friends would like to hear from me I thought I would indite a few lines for the paper for the purpose of letting all know how I am getting along. Since I last wrote I have been much worse. I have been brought down to the very gates of hades. But the Lord has delivered my soul from the grave. Praised be his name! I am now about the same as when I last wrote, yet still confined to my bed and helpless. Although much better than I was a few weeks ago, I sometimes think that through the prayers of my brethren and sisters I may be restored to comparatively good health again; but my times are in his hands—he doeth all things well. My circumstances and surroundings have been somewhat changed since I last wrote. I have been compelled to give up housekeeping and break up my little family circle. My little ones are scattered, and some have found homes among kind friends. I have found a home with the kind family of Br. E. R. Bennett, who, with his companion, have done, and are still doing, all in their power to make me comfortable. This dear brother has a large heart. He has involved himself in debt for the express purpose of adding sufficient room to his house that he might afford me a home. Besides myself two of my children are quartered upon this kind family. They are poor in this world's goods but rich in faith. I believe other kind friends will help them bear the burden, if not, I am sure the Lord will. May God bless them for their self-sacrificing spirit and labor of love. I feel like again thanking the many friends who so generously and promptly aided me last winter. I have been comfortably provided for through the winter by your generosity. May God abundantly and richly bless you all is my prayer.

And now, in conclusion, let me again solicit a special interest in the prayers of my dear brethren and sisters that I may be restored again to health. I do want to stand again on the watch-tower to sound the trumpet of salvation to judgment-bound men and women. Jesus is soon coming. Let all work while they can. Remember me.

From D. S. Morris, Meadland, Tay. Co., W. Va.

Your invaluable religious paper, THE ADVENT CHRISTIAN TIMES, has produced wonderful changes in my mind. I have wholly abandoned all those doctrines found—and only found—in orthodox theology, relating to Christ's second coming, the intermediate state of the dead, the immortality of the soul, the future punishment of the wicked, and I now believe them only as taught by Advent or Pauline Theology; and I also most heartily endorse the doctrine that Christ will reign on the throne of his father David, in the earth renewed over the glorified saints, who are made immortal by virtue of their relation to Christ.

The religion of our Lord Jesus Christ was never so precious to me, nor the Bible so much loved by me, while believing many God dishonoring doctrines, as they are now that I have by grace been brought out of my former ignorance, and also enabled to throw off a vast amount of bitter prejudice. Glory to God. I most heartily thank Him through our Lord Jesus Christ for his goodness to me. I have much religious peace, much rejoicing in Christ, much precious faith, and often very precious love in my heart, with strong consolation and assurance that my blessed Master will, when he comes to gather up his jewels, acknowledge me, sinful and unfaithful as I have been, as one of that number. Hallelujah! My soul praises Him even now as I write, for the blessed hope of eternal life in Christ Jesus. Though I have never seen an Adventist, excepting my son, who paid me a very short visit since he embraced the blessed faith, yet I love them, and I often try to pray for them. God bless them and cause them to rejoice daily in His truth. Amen.

I am teacher of the first Bible class in our Sunday School. My class is very large. Two weeks ago we read the first chapter of Luke; that was on the first day of school for this summer. After reading the chapter, I called the attention of the class to verses 32-33. The class then requested my views. I felt truly thankful that I then for the first time in my life, excepting in an occasional exhortation at prayer meeting, had an opportunity of publicly advocating Adventists' views. I am over sixty years old. Some of my class are still older, though the great majority are young men. My views were modestly opposed by the older members of the class, while the young men listened with deep and earnest attention. After discussing the question for some time, it was proposed by an elderly gentleman to resume the discussion on the following Sabbath. It therefore came up last Sunday, and the pastor being then present, took part in the discussion; but, as the hour for adjournment arrived before the question was disposed of, it was proposed by the pastor (whom I much love), that the same subject should receive a fuller examination on the second Sunday in June, at which time he would be present. Their chief argument was based on Dan. 2:44. Of course, they misconstrued that passage

My son sent me, three years ago, a number of tracts, pamphlets, etc., among them "Adventism," by Sheldon. But I have given every one of them away; also, I have given away many of my ADVENT TIMES.

I greatly need some Advent documents just now, but I am too poor to buy them. Can you, dear brother, do anything to help me in this discussion? If I had the money I would gladly send it; but I am like Peter, silver and gold I have none: still I am rich in the blessed hope of the gospel. My age, and my crippled condition, forbid that I even promise you money hereafter. Help me in God's name, my dear brother, to meet the opposers of His Word in this discussion. I stand alone in this place to defend God's truth; and yet, I am not alone—for I feel assured that God will sustain me. O, how much honor is brought to his name by Advent doctrine! and how much dishonor by orthodox theology. May my God in mercy purge His church from error. Amen.

From O. M. Sower, Eagle Lake, Minn.

It does my heart good to read the letters from the brethren and sisters, and to know that so many are rejoicing in the hope of eternal life at the appearing of our Redeemer. I feel to praise God that this hope is mine, and that he ever led me into the truth. We have no preacher here of our faith, but the weekly visits of THE TIMES is a source of great comfort and encouragement. Through it we learn that the truth is spreading, and that sinners are brought to see their need of Christ. O, that the truth may spread and and that more may be saved in that day when he comes to make up his jewels. There is a small band of us here that are looking for the Lord soon to come and fulfill his promise that the meek shall inherit the earth.

From E. Mandlin.

Br. Dugger preaches for us this year once a month. The congregations are very large, and the interest good. Last Thursday night he preached to a very full house from the text "Fear God and keep his commandments." Four orthodox ministers were present. Also there were persons present from ten to twenty miles around, which speaks well for the interest to hear in this place. At our Quarterly Conference June 26, 28, 29, it is thought there will be the largest gathering that has ever been in this place. Cannot Brn. Miller, Denslow, Baldwin, Adair, McClure, Marsh and others come to be with us? Place of meeting is ten miles Northeast of Grant City, ten miles South of Mr. Ayer, in Mandlin's Grove.

We want a representative from all the churches in the district. Come brethren, and come prepared to work.

From R. P. Johnson, Sparinaw, Benton Co., Ark.

Permit me to inform you and your numerous readers, of my condition spiritually at this time, and give you a short sketch of my life in the past, thinking it may benefit some who may chance to read this hasty sketch.

About twenty years ago I imbibed the platonic philosophy of the immortality of the soul, and of the soul's conscious existence between death and the resurrection, and that the good went to a sky kingdom, and the souls of the wicked went to a burning hell and there were tormented forever. In fact I believed anything but God's truth, though perfectly honest in my intentions. But now I see I was deceived and instead of believing God's word I was believing the traditions of men, and thus making void the commandments of Christ. I must tell you how I got out of this net of Satans. I belonged to that branch of the orthodox church styled the Missionary Baptists, and while a member of this church, I was attacked by a sabbatarian which set me to reading my Bible to refute, or rather to see if the Jewish Sabbath was binding on us now. In so doing I found that that doctrine was wrong and also that the doctrine of man's natural immortality was wrong. [illegible] almost all that I believed was [illegible] God's holy Word. I now thank [illegible] only Father that by his word I was [illegible] to see the errors that I honestly [illegible] which I renounced and am now [illegible] glory, honor, and immortality to be rewarded with eternal life at the second advent of Christ, which I am constrained to believe is not far in the future. This is now my faith and hope. About one year ago, myself and wife and several others were baptized in faith and hope of the coming kingdom and of immortality by a resurrection from the dead in this kingdom which will be established by Christ, not in the sky but on this earth when the curse is removed by our Lord Jesus Christ.

I am now a member of the Advent Christian church, in Benton Co., Ark. We have a lively little band of noble soldiers of the cross. They seem determined to over ride the waves of opposition and all obstacles in this vale of tears in order to gain a better life. We met today at our house of worship for the purpose of prayers and breaking bread. [illegible] Core and Eld. May preached the [illegible] one noble soul, a young mat[illegible] from the Campbellite faith, came forward and gave her hand in token of her intention to serve the Lord. We meet next Lord's day, when she will be immersed. I think her husband will soon follow her good example.

Our Young Folks.

Daisy's Puzzles.

Little Daisy is five years old,
Has a tangle of red gold,
Eyes like violets wet with dew,
Lips where pretty pearls peep through.

When the [illegible] began to say,
"This is Washington's birthday,"
"Yes," said Daisy very wise,
"He's the man who made the pies."

When the Spring began to grow,
Daisy thought her flowers were slow;
Because when they showed no shoots,
She pulled them all up by the roots.

"Why," she asks, "is one flower red?
Why has another a yellow head?
Why isn't poppy sweet like the rose,
Who carries a thorn wherever she goes?

"Why is a needle so hard to thread?
Why must children go early to bed?
Do potatoes have eyes to see how to grow?
Does the corn have ears to hear the winds blow?"

Only five summers has Daisy seen
The blossoms burst and the earth grow green;
And a curious puzzle it is to her
Why sweet things like chestnuts are hid in a burr.

Power of a Child's Prayer.

A physician who for many years had practiced his profession in the State of California, was once called to see the child of Mr. Doak, of Calaveras Co. living on the road between San Andreas and Stockton, and not far from the mining town of Campo Seco—or Dry Camp. He says: The patient was a little girl about ten years of age, bright and intelligent, and one of twins, the other being a little boy, equally as bright and well disposed. The primary symptoms had indicated inflamation of the stomach, which the attending physician had hopelessly combated with, and finally, when by metastasis it attacked the brain, with other unfavorable symptoms, had induced him to abandon the case in despair. It was at this juncture I was called in. The symptoms were exceedingly unfavorable, and my own opinion coincided with my professional brother's. However we decided to go to work. A day and night of incessant watching, and the state of the patient, caused us both to feel that the case was hopeless, and we only continued our attendance at the earnest solicitation of the child's mother. The anxious, careworn, and restless sorrow of the little brother, his deep grief as he saw his sister given over to the power of the king of terrors, had attracted our attention. He would creep up to the bedside of his little sister, silently, with pale tearful face, controlling his emotion with great effort, and then steal away again and weep bitterly. With a vague, indefinite idea of comforting the little fellow, I took him on my knee and was about to utter some platitude, when the liltle fellow, looking me in the face, his own the very picture of grief, burst out with—

"O, Doctor must sister die?"

"Yes," I replied, "but—"

Before I could go farther, he again interrupted me.

"O, Doctor, is there nothing, nothing that will save her? Can nobody, nobody save my sister?"

For an instant the teachings of a pious and tender mother flashed over my mind. They had been long neglected and almost forgotten. California, in those days, was not well calculated to fasten more deeply on the mind home teachings. There were a few whose religious training survived the ordeal, and for a long time I had hardly thought of prayer. But the question brought out with the vividness of a flash of light, and as suddenly, all that had been obscured by my course of life; and, hardly knowing what I did I spoke to him of the power that might reside in prayer. I said God had promised to answer prayer. I dared not allow the skeptical doubt that came my to own mind, to meet the ear of the innocent boy, and told him, more as my mother had often told me than with any thought of impressing a serious subject on his mind, "that the prayers of little boys even, God would hear." I left that night with some simple directions, that were given more to satisfy the mother than from having the slightest hope of eventual recovery, promising to return next morning.

In the morning, as I rode to the door, the little boy was playing around with a bright and cheerful countenance, and looked so happy that involuntarily I asked:

"Is your sister better?"

"O no, Doctor," he replied, "but she is going to get well."

"How do you know?" I asked.

"Because I prayed to God," said he, "and he told me she would."

"How did he tell you?"

The little fellow looked at me for an instant, and reverently placing his hand in the region of his heart, said:

"He told me in my heart."

Going to the room where my patient was lying, I found no change whatever; but, in spite of my own convictions, there had sprung a hope within me. The medical gentleman with whom I was in consultation came to the room, and as he did, a thought of a very simple remedy I had seen used by an old negro woman in a very dissimilar case, occurred to my mind. It became so persistently present that I mentioned it to my brother practitioner. He looked surprised, but merely remarked, "It can do no harm." I applied it. In two hours we both felt the case was out of danger.

The second day after that, as we rode from the house, my friend asked me how I came to think of so simple a remedy.

"I think that it was that boy's prayer," I replied.

"Why, Doctor, you are not so superstitious as to connect that boy's prayer with his sister's recovery," said he.

"Yes, I do," I replied; "for the life of me I can not help thinking his prayers were more powerful than our remedies."

"Then why not just let him pray, and leave our remedies alone? It was a simple coincidence."

"I thought of that myself," I replied, "but then this thought suggested itself: God could give us grain, or even bread to feed us, but he has ordained the labor of the agriculturalist as the means by which it is secured; and I have no doubt that he works in all nature through some sort of sacramental agency."

Years have past since then, and when discouragements of any kind have arisen in my path, I have thought of that child's prayer, and has done me good. —B. R., in Our Church Work.

The Crowns of Gold.

"Children, if to each of you were given a crown, what would you do with it?" asked the superintendent of a Sunday school.

I would sell mine and buy me a soldier's coat, and a tall fur hat like father's, when he marches with his regiment," was Johnny's quick response.

"I would buy a big balloon," said Willie.

Robert said he would put his crown on his head and walk through the streets, that people might know how rich he was.

I would rather have a box of carpenter's tools," said Claude.

Henry who had just been reading about the poor Indian, thought he would like to purchase Bibles and comfortable clothes and carry to them.

"Now, I would like to know what the little girls would do," said the superintendent.

"I would keep my crown, and wear it when I have my next birthday party," replied Dora smoothing back her long brown curls.

"I think I'd rather have a big wax doll, and a doll's house full of all sorts of nice furniture," eagerly spoke up little Bessie.

"I would give mine to Mrs Gray to get some medicine for sick little Jennie," timidly replied Katy Brown. They are so poor; yes, a great deal poorer than we are."

Mary had tried to speak, but there was something in her throat that almost checked her.

Presently the superintendent noticed her, and his kind "come, Mary, it is your turn now," encouraged her to reply.

"O, sir," said she, "I would lay my crown at Jesus' feet!"

Dear little readers of our paper, what would you do had you a crown of gold?

A Child's Faith.

How straight and simple is the way a child comes to Jesus! No doubt, no hesitation, only simple faith and perfect love. A little girl of my acquaintance was once looking at a picture, with which most of you may be familiar, which represents a rock in the midst of a stormy sea, bearing upon its summit a cross, to which a female figure, just recovered from the angry from the angry waves clings, faint and exhausted, while at her feet a hand grasping a part of a wreck is just disappearing in the black water.

"What does that mean?" asked the child.

"It is called 'The Rock of Ages,'" was the answer.

"That means Jesus, to whom we cling for salvation."

"You know the hymn says, 'Other refuge have I none.'"

"O yes!" said the child, after a moment's hesitation, "but that rock isn't my Jesus; when I cling to him he reaches down and clings too."

Teach the little ones of this Jesus "who reaches down and clings too," to whom we hold not so much from fear of falling, since underneath us are his everlasting arms; but because, like the trusting child whom its father safely carries, we love to cling that we may draw him closer.—National Sunday School Teacher.

Knowing and No-ing.

Henry Ward Beecher, when a schoolboy, had no fondness for study, but owing to the judicious severity of his teacher he became the subject of a distinct intellectual "conversion." He tells the story thus:

I first went to the blackboard uncertain, soft, full of whimpering. "That lesson must be learned," he said in a very quiet tone, but with a terrible intensity, and with the certainty of fate. All explanations and excuses he trod under foot with utter scornfulness. "I want that problem. I don't want any reason why I don't get it."

"I did study it two hours."

"That's nothing to me; I want that lesson. You need not study it at all, or you may it ten hours—just to suit yourself. I want the lesson. Underwood, go to the blackboard!"

"O yes, but Underwood got somebody to show him his lesson."

"What do I care how you get it? That's your business. But you must have it."

In the midst of a lesson his cold and calm voice would fall upon me in the midst of a demonstration—"No!" I hesitated, stopped, and then went back to the beginning; and on reaching the same spot again—"No!" uttered with the tone of perfect conviction, barred my progress. "The next!" and I sat down in red confusion. He too was stopped with "No!" but went right on; finished, and, as he sat down, was awarded with, "Very well."

"Well," whimpered I, "I recited it just as he did, and you said 'No!'"

"Why didn't you say Yes, and stick to it? It is not enough to know your lesson. You must know that you know it! You have learned nothing till you are sure. If all the world says No, your business is to say Yes, and to prove it!"—Exchange.

HADES AND SHEOL,

AND THE

RICH MAN AND LAZARUS,

BY ELD. L. C. COLLINS.

This is the most complete and comprehensive exposition yet written, of the question involved in the Parable of the Rich Man and Lazarus. It points out the teachings of Christ and his Apostles touching these disputed points in a manner that is at once convincing to the candid and unprejudiced mind seeking only the plain truths of the harmonized Scriptures.

It contains 48 pp. bound in paper, post paid for 15cts.

To Correspondents.

C. M. GIFFORD—In your letter dated February 6th, you ordered the paper sent to M. E. Gorsuch, at Blackbrook, Polk Co., Wis., and in your next letter dated May 10th, you inquired if the paper was being sent to the above named person at Blackbrook, Polk Co., Ill. That was the reason of our inquiring which was right.... MRS. M. E. MILES—The paper is sent regularly to Wm. McAllen. But since receiving your last letter, have added the number of his P. O. box. Hope he will get it regularly hereafter.... ISAAC LEONARD—Please give your P. O. address and we will forward books.... A. N. CORBETT—We are out of "Personality of God and the Devil."

Notice.

There will be a meeting of the Board of the Northern Illinois Advent Christian Conference, at Norwood Park, June 10th, to determine the time and place of the Annual Conference and Camp meeting also to transact other important business. A full attendance is requested. N. W. SPENCER, President

Notice Postponed.

To avoid interference with other meetings, the Conference at Jeffersonville, will be postponed until Thursday the 3d of July, at which we hope to have a good attendance. N. FIELD.

Obituary.

MACOMBER—Died at Almor, May 13, 1873, Robert C. Macomber. Aged 18 days.

"We shall sleep but not forever."

E. H. DURAND.

SMITH—Died in Cato, Mich., Seth S. Smith. Aged 21 years.

The circumstances of his death were sad indeed. He was working in a mill and by accident had his right limb sawed from the knee to the ankle, making it necessary to amputate. He lived but a week after the operation, but died with a hope of a better world [illegible] Jesus Christ, where there is no pain, sorrow or death. Funeral services from the text, "Boast not thyself of tomorrow, for thou knowest not what a day may bring forth." RAYMER E. SMITH.

The annual meeting of the Iowa Christian Conference will be held in connection with the campmeeting at New Hartford, Butler county, commencing June 11, 1873. Our constitution requires that all ministers report either in person or by letter, and we hope to see a general attendance as there will be some important business to attend to in which we are all interested.
ALONZO RAYMOND, Pres.
N. F. EGGLESTON, Sec'y.

The Iowa Christian Mission Campmeeting will be held at New Hartford, Butler county, to commence June 6 and continue over two Sabbaths. Come one and all in the spirit of Christ to labor for him and to save men. Bring your friends and children; leave your hobby horse at home as we have neither room nor food for such animals. If you come on R. R. take the train that arrives about noon from the east and west. There will be no teams waiting for night trains. Should any come at night they will go north from the depot till the bridge is passed then turn to the right hand.

The mission tent will be on the ground as usual, and a number of family tents, also a 50 foot tent for the accommodation of those who do not come provided.

Bring bedding, also sheets to be used as curtains. Tent poles, straw, and hay will be furnished. Free tent lots, occupied last year, will not be reserved longer than Wednesday morning so those who wish them must come in time or notify us. We look for a large attendance, and the Lord Jesus Christ to be with us to bless the preaching of the Word.

SECOND EDITION.

A BOOK ON SPIRITISM

BY ELD. C. C. MARSTON.

"Modern Spiritism; an examination of its origin, character and tendency."

The immoral tendency and corruption of the systems as shown by the statements of its own most noted advocates, fully developed, clearly proving that Spiritism is calculated in its very nature to undermine and destroy the morals of all good society.

THE FOUNDATION OF THE SYSTEM IS FALSE.

It is shown that Satan's great falsehood, first propagated in Eden, is the main pillar upon which the system rests. The spirit and fruits of Spiritism are shown to be Anti Christ and Anti-Christian by copious extracts. In short, suffice it to say, without giving an extended analysis of the work, that it brings out in its true colors the prominent feature of modern Spiritism.

It will be read with interest and profit by all who desire an intelligent understanding of this subject.

The work contains 60 pp., neatly bound in paper covers.

WRITING INK.

The Great Question Answered.

BY S. EBERSOLE.

[The following is the substance of a sermon preached February 2, 1873, on the occasion of the funeral of Mrs. J. Kniffie, of Black Creek P. O., Canada.]

"If a man die, shall he live again?"—Job 14:14.

That men are appointed to death cannot be questioned. It was not a question with Job. He probably knew that God had said to Adam, when he sinned: "In the sweat of thy face shalt thou eat bread, till thou return unto the ground; for out of it wast thou taken; for dust thou art, and unto dust shalt thou return." (Gen. 3:19.) Abel's death was a matter of history. Cain had passed away and the Deluge had swept off its thousands, leaving "a few, that is eight souls," to replenish the earth that now is; all this proving the language of Paul true: "It is appointed unto men once to die." (Heb. 9:27.) The death of "the beggar" and of "the rich man" is chronicled on the same page. Paul died, as well as "Alexander the coppersmith." Our friends and relatives are dying. The good and bad alike pass away, and in that sense, as the preacher has said, "one event happeneth to them all."

But as regards the nature of death, men widely differ; some believing that both spirit and body are dead, and others that the body only is dead. The Scriptures emphatically state that "the body without the spirit is dead" (James 2:26), from which we infer that the spirit without the body is alive and conscious, and hence Abraham and the rich man conversed with each other in the intermediate state. (Luke 16:9–31.) Our conclusion is, that the body only is dead, and that the question of the text is substantially this, If men die, will the dead body live again?

This question has not only been asked by Job, but by men in all ages. Some have answered it positively in the negative. Notice the Sadducees in the days of Jesus, and see how easily He silenced them. (Matt. 22:29–34.) In modern times we have Sadducees and semi-Sadducees. The latter only deny the resurrection of the wicked, while the former deny the resurrection of both good and evil—as one said to me: "I do not believe the doctrine of the resurrection of the human body." But like the Sadducees of old, they are not able to disprove the resurrection of either class.

To deny the resurrection of the human body is infidelity of the deepest hue; for says Paul, "If the dead rise not, then is Christ not raised; and if Christ be not raised, your faith is vain; ye are yet in your sins." (1 Cor. 15–16) So to deny the resurrection of the dead is to strike a death-blow at the ground work of justification, for the resurrection of Christ is the very act which justifies, as it is written: "He was delivered for our offences, and was raised again for our justification." (Rom. 4:25.)

It is painful to see the professed Christian church so fast drifting into infidelity by yielding this doctrine of the resurrection. A certain writer has truthfully said that "it is very seldom a sermon is preached on the resurrection." And Dr. Adam Clarke, the well known commentator, observes: "One remark I cannot help making; the doctrine of the resurrection appears to have been thought of much more consequence among the primitive Christians than it is now. How is this? The apostles were continually insi[illegible] it, and exciting the followers [illegible] to diligence, obedience and che[illegible]ess through it, and their successors in the present day seldom mention it!"

God, who foreknew that men would depart from the faith, has been careful to make this doctrine very prominent, both by declaration and illustration:

1. He inspired the prophets to speak distinctly on the subject.

To comfort Israel in their almost hopeless condition, when they had seen one after another drop dead to whom God had promised the land for an everlasting possession, he sends Isaiah to say, "Thy dead men shall live; together with my dead body shall they arise." (Isa. 26:19.) No language could be more explicit on the point, and it is in perfect harmony with David's expectation, as we learn from Psa. 17:15, "I will behold thy face in righteousness; I shall be satisfied when I awake with thy likeness." Compare with Psa. 71:21.

There are three things which must have been a great source of consolation to Job in his life of trial; and they will also be a comfort to the tempted followers of Jesus in every age if they realize them as true: (1.) He knew he had a living Redeemer, and to Him he went in all his trials. (Job 19:25, 26.) We may do the same—casting "all our care on Him, for he careth for us;" "seeing he ever liveth to make intercession for us." (2.) He knew that his Redeemer would "stand at the latter day upon earth." And (3) that though after the destruction of his skin by the terrible disease that was upon him, worms should destroy the body itself, yet in his flesh he should see God. The doctrine of the resurrection seems to be plainly taught here. Job manifestly expected in his flesh glorified to behold his Redeemer.

Another conclusive argument is, that God made promises to Abraham, Isaac and Jacob, which cannot be realized by them unless they are raised from the dead; for example, "The Lord said unto Abram, after that Lot was separated from him, 'Lift up now thine eyes, and look from the place where thou art, northward, and southward, and eastward, and westward; for all the land which thou seest, to thee will I give it, and to thy seed forever.'" (Gen. 13:14, 15.) It will not do to say that this promise had its fulfillment when Abraham's natural descendants entered into the land of Canaan, for Abraham was to be personally a sharer in the promise—"Unto thee will I give it;" and Stephen says: "God gave him none inheritance in it, no, not so much as to set his foot on." (Acts 7:5.) Hence, if we ever realize this promise God must raise him from the dead. That Abraham so understood it agrees with Paul's statement, (Heb. 11:9, 10), "By faith Abraham sojourned in the land of promise, as in a strange country, dwelling in tabernacles with Isaac and Jacob, the heirs with him of the same promise; for he looked for a city which hath foundations, whose builder and maker is God." Evidently the city here referred to is the same as the New Jerusalem, which John saw in vision, "coming down from God out of heaven" after the earth was made new; for the country which Abraham sought was not old Canaan, on which rested the curse, but "a better country, that is, an heavenly." (Heb. 11:13–16.) "For the promise that he should be the heir of the world was not to Abraham, or to his seed, through the law, but through the righteousness of faith." (Rom. 4:13.) Manifestly the inheritance will be enjoyed in the raised body.

2. Christ and his apostles made the doctrine prominent, that man shall live again.

Jesus said to the Sadducees: "Now that the dead are raised, even Moses showed at the bush when he calleth the Lord the God of Abraham, and the God of Isaac, and the God of Jacob; for he is not a God of the dead, but of the living." (Luke 20:37, 38.) Again, "The hour is coming, in the which all that are in the graves shall hear His voice, and shall come forth; they that have done good, unto the resurrection of life; and they that have done evil, unto the resurrection of damnation." Both classes are to have a resurrection.

When Paul stood before Felix, charged by Tertullus with heresy, he said: "I have hope towards God, which they themselves [the Jewish fathers] also allow, that there shall be a resurrection of the dead, both of the just and unjust." (Acts 24:15.) And of Agrippa he inquired: "Why should it be thought a thing incredible with you that God should raise the dead?" (Acts 26:8.)

3. The living again of the dead has been illustrated by resurrections which have occurred.

Jesus satisfied his disciples that the same body which was pierced with the spear and buried in the tomb of Joseph of Arimathea had arisen again (Luke 24:36–48); and we are told that when Christ died "the graves were opened; and many bodies of the saints which slept arose, and came out of the graves after His resurrection." (Matt. 27:52, 53.)

That there will be two resurrections and a thousand years between that of the righteous and that of the wicked, is plainly taught in the Scriptures. The righteous will be raised at the second advent: "For as in Adam all die, even so in Christ shall all be made alive, but every man in his own order; Christ the first-fruits; afterwards they that are Christ's at his coming. (1 Cor. 15:22, 23.) It is easily seen that the thousand years of Rev. 20th chapter, follow Christ's personal advent to this world, for that chapter belongs to the seventh trumpet's sounding, and there being only seven trumpets, the seventh is the last (Rev. 8:2; 11:15–18); at which time the holy dead are raised and the righteous living changed to immortality, as seen by 1 Cor. 15:50, 51, "Behold, I shew you a mystery; we shall not all sleep [or die], but we [the righteous], shall all be changed in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, at the last trump." "For the Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangel, and with the trump of God: and the dead in Christ shall rise first." (1 Thess. 4:16.) Those thus raised will reign with Christ "a thousand years," this being "the first resurrection," in which the "blessed and holy" have part.

The bodies of the living wicked will be burned in the day when Jesus shall be revealed from heaven "in flaming fire, taking vengeance on them that know not God, and that obey not the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ. (2 Thess. 1:7, 8.) That day will leave them neither root nor branch (i. e., ungodly parents and their ungodly children will alike perish), and hence we are told: "The rest of the dead lived not again until the thousand years were finished." (Chap. 20:5.) During this time their spirits will be in conscious torment, as the prophet says (chap. 24:22), "They shall be gathered together, as prisoners are gathered in the the pit, and shall be shut up in the prison, and after many days shall they be visited,"—not in mercy, but in judgment; for "when the thousand years are expired, Satan shall be loosed out of his prison, and shall go out to deceive the nations which are in the four quarters of the earth." They being resurrected will constitute the multitude of of Gog and Magog, who go up on the breadth of the earth, i. e., the new earth; (their presence there, however, will not defile it any more than Satan would have defiled the garden of Eden when he was there had our first parents not sinned.) But they are only permitted to come on it to have meted out to them what God has threatened: "And fire came down from God out of heaven, and devoured them," that is, swallowed them up—for so the same word must be understood in Matt. 13:4, "Some seeds fell by the wayside, and the fowls came and devoured them up." The fire engulfs them, and with the devil they are swept into the lake of fire, "where the beast and the false prophet are, and shall be tormented day and night forever and ever;" as Jesus also said (Matt. 25:41), "Then shall he say also unto them on the left hand [to those who have not their names written in the Lamb's book of life], depart from me, ye cursed, into everlasting fire, prepared for the devil and his angels."

Oh, that men could see the beauty of being Christ's by an humble, obedient faith! If we are His, all things are ours; "for in him dwelleth the the fullness of the Godhead bodily, and ye are complete in him."

In the words of another we can heartily say: "The first Adam broke creation into fragments; the second Adam will restore creation in all its parts. Good and evil will part forever; good and good are brought into perfect oneness, a oneness so complete as will more than recompense for the separatian. Soul and body will come together and constitute one glorified man, the thousands of members one church, the scattered stones one temple, the bride and bridegroom meet. Now there is one Lord, one faith, one baptism; then there will be one bride, one vine, one temple, one family, one city, one kingdom." Then "the kingdom and dominion, and the greatness of the kingdom under the whole heaven, shall be given to the people of the saints of the Most High, whose kingdom is an everlasting kingdom, and all dominions shall serve and obey Him." The subjects of that realm will not die as men do here, but they "which shall be accounted worthy to obtain that world and the resurrection from the dead, neither marry nor are given in marriage, neither can they die any more; for they are equal unto the angels, and are the children of God, being the children of the resurrection."

"This doctrine affords great consolation to the children of God, as they see one after another of their number fall victims to Death. With Paul they can say: "We sorrow not, even as others which have no hope; for if we believe that Jesus died and rose again, even so them also which sleep in Jesus will God bring with him." Mourning souls you who are Christ's cling closer to him.

Unconverted souls be admonished; it will be dark and terrible going through the valley of Death alone. Then hasten to Jesus, that with the Psalmist you may be able to say: "Yea though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death, I will fear no evil; for thou art with me; thy rod and thy staff they comfort me."—Advent Herald.

"What I Have Heard," Also.

BY O. D. GIBSON.

The above caption of Bro. Hough's makes me desirous of saying a little. We ought to be well posted in Bible truth and its own phraseology, for we have an artful enemy to meet who often quote what they call Scriptures. Sometimes it is in part, and sometimes it is not one word in the Bible. I heard a minister discourse not long ago, about the "battle of Armageddon," and I hear some of our brethren speak of the same. Now, it should be our business to post one another. Then, let me say, there is no such battle spoken of in the Bible. The only passage on this is Rev. 16:13–16. First, in verse 13: "Uncleans spirits, like frogs, come out of the dragon beast and false prophet. They go to the kings and whole world to gather them to the battle of the great day of God Almighty." Here is the only battle spoken of, and those who are to it are gathered there by "unclean spirits." Now, at the 15th verse, we encounter another gatherer and another class to be gathered: "Behold, I come as a thief. Blessed is he that watcheth and keepeth his garments," etc. "And he (that cometh as a thief) gathered them (that watch and keepeth his garment) together into a place called in the Hebrew tongue Armageddon." Here, then, are two gatherers and classes gathered, and two places to be gathered to. One by unclean, frog-like spirits, to the battle of the great day of God Almighty. The other by Christ, to Armageddon, a place of delights, which is the sea of glass or the street of the New Jerusalem. I desire to be one of the latter, hence I must watch and keep my garments; must expect and love His appearing. To such He will appear without sin unto salvation.

Again, the same minister told us about the "little" stone spoken of by Daniel, that was to "roll until it filled the whole earth." I wish to say there is not one word about a "little" stone, nor one word about "rolling;" but "a stone" smote the image and became a great mountain (or government), and filled the whole earth—no rolling, but a smiting, a consuming of earthly governments, and it—the kingdom or government of Christ—shall fill the whole earth, or the space "under the whole heavens." Even so, come Lord Jesus, and come quickly.

No language could be more explicit on the point, and it is in perfect harmony with David's expectation, as we learn from Psa. 17:15, "I will behold thy face in righteousness; I shall be satisfied when I awake with thy likeness." Compare with Psa. 71:21.

There are three things which must have been a great source of consolation to Job in his life of trial; and they will also be a comfort to the tempted followers of Jesus in every age if they realize them as true: (1.) He knew he had a living Redeemer, and to Him he went in all his trials. (Job 19:25, 26.) We may do the same—casting "all our care on Him, for he careth for us;" "seeing he ever liveth to make intercession for us." (2.) He knew that his Redeemer would "stand at the latter day upon earth." And (3) that though after the destruction of his skin by the terrible disease that was upon him, worms should destroy the body itself, yet in his flesh he should see God. The doctrine of the resurrection seems to be plainly taught here. Job manifestly expected in his flesh glorified to behold his Redeemer.

Another conclusive argument is, that God made promises to Abraham, Isaac and Jacob, which cannot be realized by them unless they are raised from the dead; for example, "The Lord said unto Abram, after that Lot was separated from him, 'Lift up now thine eyes, and look from the place where thou art, northward, and southward, and eastward, and westward; for all the land which thou seest, to thee will I give it, and to thy seed forever.'" (Gen. 13:14, 15.) It will not do to say that this promise had its fulfillment when Abraham's natural descendants entered into the land of Canaan, for Abraham was to be personally a sharer in the promise—"Unto thee will I give it;" and Stephen says: "God gave him none inheritance in it, no, not so much as to set his foot on." (Acts 7:5.) Hence, if we ever realize this promise God must raise him from the dead. That Abraham so understood it agrees with Paul's statement, (Heb. 11:9, 10), "By faith Abraham sojourned in the land of promise, as in a strange country, dwelling in tabernacles with Isaac and Jacob, the heirs with him of the same promise; for he looked for a city which hath foundations, whose builder and maker is God." Evidently the city here referred to is the same as the New Jerusalem, which John saw in vision, "coming down from God out of heaven" after the earth was made new; for the country which Abraham sought was not old Canaan, on which rested the curse, but "a better country, that is, an heavenly." (Heb. 11:13–16.) "For the promise that he should be the heir of the world was not to Abraham, or to his seed, through the law, but through the righteousness of faith." (Rom. 4:13.) Manifestly the inheritance will be enjoyed in the raised body.

2. Christ and his apostles made the doctrine prominent, that man shall live again.

Jesus said to the Sadducees: "Now that the dead are raised, even Moses showed at the bush when he calleth the Lord the God of Abraham, and the God of Isaac, and the God of Jacob; for he is not a God of the dead, but of the living." (Luke 20:37, 38.) Again, "The hour is coming, in the which all that are in the graves shall hear His voice, and shall come forth; they that have done good, unto the resurrection of life; and they that have done evil, unto the resurrection of damnation." Both classes are to have a resurrection.

When Paul stood before Felix, charged by Tertullus with heresy, he said: "I have hope towards God, which they themselves [the Jewish fathers] also allow, that there shall be a resurrection of the dead, both of the just and unjust." (Acts 24:15.) And of Agrippa he inquired: "Why should it be thought a thing incredible with you that God should raise the dead?" (Acts 26:8.)

3. The living again of the dead has been illustrated by resurrections which have occurred.

Jesus satisfied his disciples that the same body which was pierced with the spear and buried in the tomb of Joseph of Arimathea had arisen again (Luke 24:36–48); and we are told that when Christ died "the graves were opened; and many bodies of the saints which slept arose, and came out of the graves after His resurrection." (Matt. 27:52, 53.)

That there will be two resurrections and a thousand years between that of the righteous and that of the wicked, is plainly taught in the Scriptures. The righteous will be raised at the second advent: "For as in Adam all die, even so in Christ shall all be made alive, but every man in his own order; Christ the first-fruits; afterwards they that are Christ's at his coming. (1 Cor. 15:22, 23.) It is easily seen that the thousand years of Rev. 20th chapter, follow Christ's personal advent to this world, for that chapter belongs to the seventh trumpet's sounding, and there being only seven trumpets, the seventh is the last (Rev. 8:2; 11:15–18); at which time the holy dead are raised and the righteous living changed to immortality, as seen by 1 Cor. 15:50, 51, "Behold, I shew you a mystery; we shall not all sleep [or die], but we [the righteous], shall all be changed in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, at the last trump." "For the Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangel, and with the trump of God: and the dead in Christ shall rise first." (1 Thess. 4:16.) Those thus raised will reign with Christ "a thousand years," this being "the first resurrection," in which the "blessed and holy" have part.

The bodies of the living wicked will be burned in the day when Jesus shall be revealed from heaven "in flaming fire, taking vengeance on them that know not God, and that obey not the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ. (2 Thess. 1:7, 8.) That day will leave them neither root nor branch (i. e., ungodly parents and their ungodly children will alike perish), and hence we are told: "The rest of the dead lived not again until the thousand years were finished." (Chap. 20:5.) During this time their spirits will be in conscious torment, as the prophet says (chap. 24:22), "They shall be gathered together, as prisoners are gathered in the the pit, and shall be shut up in the prison, and after many days shall they be visited,"—not in mercy, but in judgment; for "when the thousand years are expired, Satan shall be loosed out of his prison, and shall go out to deceive the nations which are in the four quarters of the earth." They being resurrected will constitute the multitude of of Gog and Magog, who go up on the breadth of the earth, i. e., the new earth; (their presence there, however, will not defile it any more than Satan would have defiled the garden of Eden when he was there had our first parents not sinned.) But they are only permitted to come on it to have meted out to them what God has threatened: "And fire came down from God out of heaven, and devoured them," that is, swallowed them up—for so the same word must be understood in Matt. 13:4, "Some seeds fell by the wayside, and the fowls came and devoured them up." The fire engulfs them, and with the devil they are swept into the lake of fire, "where the beast and the false prophet are, and shall be tormented day and night forever and ever;" as Jesus also said (Matt. 25:41), "Then shall he say also unto them on the left hand [to those who have not their names written in the Lamb's book of life], depart from me, ye cursed, into everlasting fire, prepared for the devil and his angels."

Oh, that men could see the beauty of being Christ's by an humble, obedient faith! If we are His, all things are ours; "for in him dwelleth the the fullness of the Godhead bodily, and ye are complete in him."

In the words of another we can heartily say: "The first Adam broke creation into fragments; the second Adam will restore creation in all its parts. Good and evil will part forever; good and good are brought into perfect oneness, a oneness so complete as will more than recompense for the separation. Soul and body will come together and constitute one glorified man, the thousands of members one church, the scattered stones one temple, the bride and bridegroom meet. Now there is one Lord, one faith, one baptism; then there will be one bride, one vine, one temple, one family, one city, one kingdom." Then "the kingdom and dominion, and the greatness of the kingdom under the whole heaven, shall be given to the people of the saints of the Most High, whose kingdom is an everlasting kingdom, and all dominions shall serve and obey Him." The subjects of that realm will not die as men do here, but they "which shall be accounted worthy to obtain that world and the resurrection from the dead, neither marry nor are given in marriage, neither can they die any more; for they are equal unto the angels, and are the children of God, being the children of the resurrection."

"This doctrine affords great consolation to the children of God, as they see one after another of their number fall victims to Death. With Paul they can say: "We sorrow not, even as others which have no hope; for if we believe that Jesus died and rose again, even so them also which sleep in Jesus will God bring with him." Mourning souls you who are Christ's cling closer to him.

Unconverted souls be admonished; it will be dark and terrible going through the valley of Death alone. Then hasten to Jesus, that with the Psalmist you may be able to say: "Yea though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death, I will fear no evil; for thou art with me; thy rod and thy staff they comfort me."—Advent Herald.

"What I Have Heard," Also.

BY O. D. GIBSON.

The above caption of Bro. Hough's makes me desirous of saying a little. We ought to be well posted in Bible truth and its own phraseology, for we have an artful enemy to meet who often quote what they call Scriptures. Sometimes it is in part, and sometimes it is not one word in the Bible. I heard a minister discourse not long ago, about the "battle of Armageddon," and I hear some of our brethren speak of the same. Now, it should be our business to post one another. Then, let me say, there is no such battle spoken of in the Bible. The only passage on this is Rev. 16:13–16. First, in verse 13: "Uncleans spirits, like frogs, come out of the dragon beast and false prophet. They go to the kings and whole world to gather them to the battle of the great day of God Almighty." Here is the only battle spoken of, and those who are to it are gathered there by "unclean spirits." Now, at the 15th verse, we encounter another gatherer and another class to be gathered: "Behold, I come as a thief. Blessed is he that watcheth and keepeth his garments," etc. "And he (that cometh as a thief) gathered them (that watch and keepeth his garment) together into a place called in the Hebrew tongue Armageddon." Here, then, are two gatherers and classes gathered, and two places to be gathered to. One by unclean, frog-like spirits, to the battle of the great day of God Almighty. The other by Christ, to Armageddon, a place of delights, which is the sea of glass or the street of the New Jerusalem. I desire to be one of the latter, hence I must watch and keep my garments; must expect and love His appearing. To such He will appear without sin unto salvation.

Again, the same minister told us about the "little" stone spoken of by Daniel, that was to "roll until it filled the whole earth." I wish to say there is not one word about a "little" stone, nor one word about "rolling;" but "a stone" smote the image and became a great mountain (or government), and filled the whole earth—no rolling, but a smiting, a consuming of earthly governments, and it—the kingdom or government of Christ—shall fill the whole earth, or the space "under the whole heavens." Even so, come Lord Jesus, and come quickly.

A Minister's Trials and Rewards.

BY MRS. H. V. REED.

Do we consider how much our ministers have to bear? Do we realize that any burdens fall upon their shoulders? Suppose we picture to ourselves a young man just entering upon the vast arena of earth's broad fields, with a quick, vivid imagination, glowing talents, and ambition enough to rule a realm.

Already have the honors of the bar caught his attention, and his heart throbs over his vivid dreams of future greatness; his eye is fixed upon legislative halls where great minds are enchained by the power of his own; he can almost hear his own voice pealing through the lofty arches of an American forum; he can almost see a thronged senate bowing before his eloquence. Oh! surely his path must be strewn with flowers, for it is as bright as a dream of Eden!

But another subject has been presented to his view—the music of the kingdom has struck his ravished ear—he hears the burden of Calvary's sad notes, and the rich tones of triumph are rolling down to him from the chariot wheels of the coming One. The sound of revelry arises from a dying world that is sporting on the brink of ruin; while faith points with her radiant finger to the star of Bethlehem. Shall he go on in the path he has chosen, and twine his brow with the laurels of fame, or shall he turn and devote all his energies to the task of teaching others to win the diadem of immortality. Oh! who can tell of the struggle that follows? Who can testify to those hours of midnight anguish which are only witnessed by that Eye before which the angels bow?

Suddenly across the cloud gleams the bow of promise, and from that aching heart arises the cry, "though he slay me yet will I trust in him." The laurel wreath is thrown aside, left to wither in the scorching sun of prosperity. A brighter crown is placed before him—a starry diadem awaits his feverish brow.

No matter if the pathway to it lies lower than the other, it goes through the green valleys of faith, and among the fountains of peace. Perhaps the chaplets of fame conceal thorns beneath the flowers, but can there be trials here? The path is so lowly, so far from the disgusting blaze of revelry, surely the storms of earth must blow over this quiet vale. And yet there is labor here, and in the solemn midnight he communes with the mighty dead, and with torch in hand lighted at the fires of genius, he scales the dizzy hights of eloquence, and fathoms the deep recesses of logic; he wanders through the archive of biblical lore, admiring at every step the impress of its great Author. He toils long and well, it almost seems sometimes, as if his blood had turned to liquid fire, as it boiled over his excited brain. Those cherished friends that he has so long and so fondly loved turn away from him, now that he clings so closely to the cross; and where shall he turn for the sympathy his warm heart craves? Among the members of his church are those who consider themselves model Christians—a self-appointed committee to watch his words and criticise his movements. They would not smile—no, not for the world; they walk this bright earth with their heads bowed like a bulrush, and their minds clothed in sackcloth, they consider this acceptable to the God who painted the rainbow, expanded the lily, and tinted the rose. The same God who has woven over our heads the gold and purple robe of sunset, and formed thousands of little feathered throats which are rare music boxes, tuned and wound by the same fingers that keyed the music of the spheres to its sublime harmonies.

They cannot see the glories of earth, no mercy falls from the lips of their imaginary Savior — no compassion breathes in his voice, no love beams in his eye—the sword of justice is never sheathed by the hand of mercy. Oh! there is no balm for a weary heart in their marble bosoms.

There are others within the same holy band who love religion just as long as it does not trouble their coffers: the most sensitive chord in their whole beings run directly through the purse: they go to meetings, and take an active part there, for the interest counts up as fast as if they were at home. They love their dear minister. Oh, how they do love him! He is so eloquent, so learned, and can defend their faith so well! But is he destitute? "Oh! the times are so hard"—and they turn away to count that roll of bills again, to see if the gold is in its place, and to make out another account, or close a mortgage on the lost property of some unfortunate brother. They have money for railroad stocks, for copper mines, and for twenty-five per cent. compound interest, but none for their minister!

And there are others who mean well enough, but they do not think, they do not consider that their ministers need pecuniary aid, because they do not ask for it! Give them their dues, it is all they ask; they might have won gold in another sphere, but they turned away from its glitter to labor for you and yours. Their hearts are aching for other's woes, but can they relieve the needy?

Your minister is your best earthly friend; then see to it well that his wants are supplied. Oh! do you not love to hear the words of holy cheer falling from his heaven-missioned lips, and folding themselves like snow-white wings above the weary heart of despair? It is pleasant to hear him preach day after day, and night after night, until his physical frame is well nigh exhausted, but do you take care of him then? Oh! think of him oftener, and of yourselves more seldom; let him know that you appreciate his talents and his arduous labors. Surely, these slender shoulders have enough to bear, if you yield him all the aid you can.

Think you it requires no sacrifice for him to lay aside the distinctions of that intellect he prizes so highly, and sit meekly at the feet of an ignorant disciple, because he is a disciple? He has counted all things naught for dear Gethsemane's sake, and is treading up and down the rocky paths of earth to say to its children "Behold the Lamb of God." And yet his trials stop not here; we do not know how often a cloud floats across his mental vision, and his heart aches with its heavy burden of responsibility, as he murmurs "who is sufficient for these things?"

We do not know how much he suffers from a deep feeling of his own unworthiness or inability to proclaim the precious tidings of a Savior's love. We do not see him prostrated before the throne pleading for more strentgh. Oh! is he not sometimes weary of the struggle—weary of constant toil, of unappreciated labors? Is he not sometime heartsick and almost fainting with fatigue? And yet, O servant of the Most High, surely there is a rich reward! "How beautiful upon the mountains are the feet of him that bringeth good tidings, that publisheth peace."

Where is there a post of honor higher than that of God's own chosen ambassador commissioned to preach the vast plan of redemption to a lost world—to bear the golden ark of truth, and point by the light of faith through the rich lines of promise to the Prince of the house of David?

The laurel may never weave its fading chaplets around thy brow, the lightning of fame may never seer thy forehead, yet will thy clarion voice be heard afar off, and while those pause to catch its notes who have never listened to household words, it will echo through the dim vista of the future. Thy thoughts will find a response in hearts that know thee not, and thy memory will live embalmed in gratitude when thou hast laid down like a weary child to sleep the dreamless sleep of death. Trial is everywhere; the air is tainted, the soil barren, the ocean tempest-tossed. Whether we are in the fields or forest, on Persian plains, or Alpine summits, in torrid heat or amid the polar solitudes, beneath Italian skies, or surrounded by Russian snows, everywhere we find the impress of the curse. But in thy journeying across the sands of worldly care, thou art guided as were the Israelites of old. When the day star beams on high and life seems like a fairy dream, all around is so bright and fair, thine eye may only see the pillar of clouds, but when all earthly light has fled, when the roses are faded and only the thorns are visible, then indeed do the promises gleam like stars on eternity's ocean.

It is thy privilege to guard the sacred shield of truth on whose safety depends the welfare of thy fellow-beings. Thou art chosen to watch over thy charge, to interpret the voice of prophecy, and utter the oracles of love and wisdom. No selfish dream must darken the bright tablet of thy zeal; no cool form of human ambition must cool thy love, or throw its shadow across the pure stream of thought that flows through thy brain. To be pure in worldly goods, despised by the worldly wise, half hated by the worldly ambitious and only half loved by those on whom thy best affections have been lavished—such is thine earthly fate thou messenger of good tidings! Thou wilt give out thy thoughts like music on the wind—like incense on the tempest, and yet rejoice in thy destiny: the incense may be borne afar, but it will yet breathe sweetness upon some weary brow. The music may be wasted upon the blast, but some faint notes will reach and cheer a brother's aching heart.

Surely thy position is a glorious one; some of the fruits offered to thy thirsting lips may be bitter as the waters of Marah, but they are plucked from the tree which is "for the healing of the nations." And thy weary bark shall soon find rest in a peaceful haven, for there is one who has borne the burden of life, and knows its sorrows and temptations, its thorns and briers, its wormwood and its gall. He bare the crown of thorns that thou mightest wear the roses of victory. He drained the dregs of human anguish that thou mightest drink the wine of immortality. Is not this love worth the sacrificing of human joys? Then go on faithful watchman, and win stars for thy diadem. Toil on in thy chosen path of noble strivings, and look for thy reward when thou shalt hear the welcome plaudit, "Well done, thou good and faithful servant."

"Wheresoever duty calls thee,
Where the truth demands thy aid,
Go thou to the mighty battle,
Firmly, boldly, undismayed."

And may the God of Israel bless and strengthen your noble hearts, wherever ye are toiling and hoping, is the earnest prayer of the writer.

The Price Paid.

BY S. K. GIBSON.

The defenders of the immortal soul theory, set up the claim that the price paid for the redemption of many, is more than adequate to the demand, "if man is not invested with eternal consciousness." For God to make man a material being, "a terrestrial animal," and then to give his only Son to die, to pour out his soul unto death in all the agony of the cross, staggers the faith of the creed bound theoryist, and he "cannot see it." He thinks it would have been better to let man slumber on to all eternity, than to have given him a being again by and through the death of Christ and his resurrection. And again, that as a terrestrial animal he has shown more diversified diabolism than any other terrestrial animal; and how God as a good being could pay such a price for such a wicked terrestrial creature as man, cannot be comprehended unless, "God had pleasure in the unrighteousness and depravity of his creatures." Says one "despoil man of his essential eternal consciousness, and what other adequate reason can be given for God's effort in man's redemption?" Then, this kind of theology would much sooner believe that God is implicated in the sin of man, and that he looks with pleasure upon his unrighteousness; than to admit that God as a good being, could pay such a price as he did to save a mortal creature so full of malignity as man?

Then the character of God is involved in this question of man's immortality! Astonishing!! The question in the mind of this theology, stands thus, man is either in possession of eternal life, or God is implicated in his malignity and sinfulness, that is, according to the price paid. Now in what light does the Bible reflect the character of God? "God is love." Here is an attribute of God's. Then he must act upon the principle of love, with all his creatures whether they be good or bad. "He so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son that whosoever believeth on him might not perish but have everlasting life. "Not willing that any should perish, but that all should come to repentance." "Christ came not to call the righteous, but sinners to repentance." That God's goodness and love does save sinful and malignant men, when they believe and repent; and because they do believe and repent, and not because they possess eternal consciousness, or that God loves evil.

God created man a little lower than the angels, and not equal with them: and if man shows more diversified and intense diabolism than any other terrestrial animal, may it not be because of his superior organism and intelligence? And may not this diversity be just that which marks the essential qualities, inviting God's special favor in his behalf? And is it really degrading for God, and beneath his dignity and character as a God of love to reach down to intellectual man made in the image of himself, though mortal, and save him from mortality and death: It is not because God loves sin that he saves sinful men, for he proposes to save man from his sins and not in his sins. And does it not comport with the character of a good and loving God to change bad men and make them good men?

Again, are malignant men without immortal souls any worse than the same with? and does it require any less a sacrifice to save a mortal man than an immortal one? And which would be the most like Diabolus, a terrestrial creature, mortal and pertal and perishing, or one immortal and possessing the power of eternal consciousness?

Now it seems to me it would be better to wipe out that theology that would thus involve the character of our loving Creator and Father. Shall we doubt the character of God? Who can and claim any faith in the Word of God: Better doubt the theories and speculations of men. "Hath not God made foolish the wisdom of this world?"

The Seven Churches.

LAODICEA.

"And unto the church of the Laodiceans write: These things saith the Amen, the faithful and true witness, the beginning of the creation of God: I know thy works, that thou art neither cold nor hot. I would thou wert cold or hot. So, then, because thou art lukewarm, and neither cold nor hot, I will spue thee out of my mouth. Because thou sayest, I am rich, and increased with goods, and have need of nothing; and knowest not that thou art wretched, and miserable, and poor, and blind, and naked; I counsel thee to buy of me gold tried in the fire that thou mayest be rich; and white raiment, that thou mayest be clothed, and that the shame of thy nakedness do not appear; and anoint thine eyes with eye-salve, that thou mayest see. As many as I love I rebuke and chasten; be zealous, therefore, and repent. Behold, I stand at the door, and knock; if any man hear my voice, and open the door, I will come in to him, and will sup with him; and he with me. To him that overcometh will I grant to sit with me in my throne, even as I also overcame, and am set down with my Father in his throne. He that hath an ear, let him hear what the Spirit saith unto the churches." (Rev. 3:14–22.)

We come now to the most unpleasant part of our subject. We have reviewed ages of persecution and martyrdom, but the fact that there were martyrs evinces the power of truth. We have recorded the sad history of apostacy, but in the midst of it all there was a goodly number of faithful ones, and redeeming features worthy of notice. Here, however, is a period of church history that presents a dark picture indeed. Much warning and counsel is given to the Laodiceans, but no word of commendation. The power of truth and love, manifest in the Philadelphian period, in the presentation of a virtuous church, seems to have been nearly if not quite destroyed, and we have an age of corruption which threatens to ruin all. There is a spark of spiritual life in some which Christ endeavors to fan to a flame, but it is so faint that it is rather implied than expressed. It is a period of lukewarmness, deception, wretchedness, misery, blindness, and nakedness, and yet it is the last period, the last phase of professed Christendom—the one that closes with the dispensation and the appearing of the Son of man in judgment.

Man has ever sought evidence of his upward tendency, but has ever failed to find it in a truthful record, except by distortion or perversion. The history of the past, though it tells of man's increasing wisdom, tells also of his increasing wickedness. Civilization may have thrown the cloak of refinement over the ugly form of Sin, but beneath it the monster has worked on with more subtlety and increasing strength. The outside of the sepulcher may be beautifully "whited," but within are "dead men's bones," and "all uncleanness."

This deterioration was revealed in advance in the symbolic imagery of the prophets. Gold, silver, brass, iron and miry clay, was the order of the vision, and it revealed the comparative relation of earth's kingdoms from Babylon to the present. (See Dan. 2.) Nor has history reversed the order. The descending gradations were long ago written in God's Book, and history has been only turning its leaves and proving its inspiration. But this downward tendency was not predicted alone of nations. These seven epistles reveal the same of the church. From the comparative simplicity and purity of the apostolic age we have descended to a richly adorned and worldly church, who, while she is the loudest of any in her pretensions to goodness, is nauseating to him whose name she bears. This is a sad comment on the theory of a spiritual millenuium as the last phase of church history on earth! The analogies of the past forbid that this dispensation shall close with a period of peace and blessedness, for its divinely drawn parallels are the "days before the flood" and those of "Sodom and Gomorrah."

Laodicea," as already noted, is a pound of laos, "people, the people large, the mass," and dikee, "judg- nt"—"the judgment of the people." e idea presented is that of a demo- tic church—a church ruled by pub opinion or conformed to the views the masses. It may also be taken indicating the approaching "judg- nt of the people" at Christ's ap ring. Either view is in harmony h the facts.

The Philadelphian era of zeal and e, produced and characterized by power of the message of the edy advent, closed with the disap- ntment which came with the pass- of the time. The faith of thous- ls waned, and, with their faith their e. Failing to take heed to the ad- nition to "hold fast" and "keep the rd" or doctrine of Christ's "pa- nce," they were not prepared for e hour of temptation," which now unexpectedly came upon them. The roach which they met they were able, because unwilling, to bear, d they fled at the voice of public inion back to the popularity of their mer positions. Nominal Christian- , frightened by the shadow of ap- aching judgment, returned to her nities and pleasures as soon as that adow seemed removed. Worldlings, a great extent awed by the same ead anticipation, became bold in the of the scoffer's question—"Where the promise of his coming?" The ndard of religion was lowered, form ok the place of power, and Laodice- lukewarmness and apostasy set in, ile the true church entered the tar- ing time as indicated in the parable. ee Mat. 25:5.)

In the church, as such, of to-day we ve the duplicate of the picture pre- nted to the Revelator—a church rgely swayed by public opinion. The udgment of the people" is as final in e church as in the state. There are w public teachers who dare proclaim e unvarnished truth. The abound- g iniquity of the age is winked at, attributed to the weakness of human ature and excused. Science and hilosophy, with their inseparable ompanion, Skepticism, have entered e church, and rule instead of Divine evelation. True, it is an age of hurch-going; and were we to judge f the spiritual condition of the mem- ership by the number of edifices rected, and the amount of money ex- ended, we might allow that the pro- ession made represented the facts; but his is not the true criterion. Judged y the standard of spirituality, seen in he light of the teachings of Christ nd his apostles, we must admit the icture of the church of to-day, pre- ented in the epistle to the Laodiceans o less true than sad.

The complaint of Christ represents ust such a church. It is that she is "neither cold nor hot," neither fully dentified with the right or the wrong She is in the intermediate state of indecision, halting between two opinions, partly influenced by good and partly by evil, vainly striving to serve God and mammon. Half her force is arrayed against the other half, and thus is she rendered incapable of contending with her outward foes by the conflict within. This is the most obnoxious position possible to occupy. Cold or hot water is gratifying, or, at least, endurable, but lukewarm is nauseating. "I would thou wert cold or hot" expresses both the true desire of Christ and his disciples, as they look at the mass of the professed religionists of our time. An infidel does less harm to the cause of Christ than the lukewarm professor, an open foe than an insidious adversary. What wonder then, that Christ declares that he is to 'spue' this church out of his mouth?

We understand the "hour of temptation," predicted in the epistle to the Philadelphians, to be identical with the Laodicean period, and answering to Paul's "perilous times" of "the last days." He predicts that men shall be "lovers of their own selves, covetous, boasters, proud, blasphemous, disobedient to parents, unthankful, unholy, without natural affection, truce breakers, false accusers, incontinent, fierce, despisers of those that are good, traitors, heady, highminded, lovers of pleasure more than lovers of God." (2 Tim. 3:2–4.) Nor is the apostle here writing of avowed worldlings; for he immediately adds, verse 5: "Having a form of godliness, but denying the power thereof; from such turn away." This answers to the description given in the epistle: "Thou sayest, I am rich and increased with goods, and have need of nothing; and knowest not that thou art wretched, and miserable, and poor, and blind, and naked." Here is a strong contrast between the supposition and the real fact. Such deception could not exist with respect to natural wealth, but with respect to the spiritual it is possible. The form is mistaken for the power, and hence many are supposing that the world is fast growing better, while it really is "waxing worse and worse." Here is the difference between God's religion and that of man. The latter cuts off a few of the gnarled branches; the former lays the axe at the root of the tree. One makes an external application, vainly hoping that thereby the deep-seated trouble will be removed; the other places the remedy in immediate contact with the great vital centers—the only true method of cure. One treats the symptoms, the other, the disease. Man's religion, however, will not save. No amount of externals will make up for the loss of the internal, the vital. An automaton is not a living man; neither is a man necessarily a member of Christ's spiritual body because he moves at the bidding of some professedly Christian church. The incense of ritualism is not the prayer of saints. Morality is not saving of itself, for it may be found in the most confirmed infidel. The standard of Christ is not morality, but spirituality. The former may be found without the latter; the reverse, however, is not true. Said Christ: "Many will say to me in that day, Lord, Lord, have we not prophesied in thy name, and in thy name cast out devils, and in thy name done many wonderful works? And then will I profess unto them, I never knew you; depart from me ye workers of iniquity." (Mat. 6:22, 23.)

Although the material wealth of the church of the last days is not directly referred to in the epistle, we have seen how easy it is to judge of the spiritual by the natural. Thus does the church of to-day, and thus is she deceived. Her church property is valued at hundreds of millions of dollars. Upon this she looks as so much evidence of real prosperity, while, to a great extent, it is evidence of worldly conformity; for if the outlet to her treasury had been properly proportioned to the inlet, it had never accumulated. An adherence to the requirements of the gospel does not permit the laying up of vast stores of earthly goods. The true steward of the Lord may have entrusted to him large sums, but as he has freely received, so freely he gives. He feels that the silver and gold belong unto the Lord and that he is but a steward, and almoner of the Lord's bounty. As with the individual, so with the church. She is the treasury of the Lord, from which goes forth the earthly means of preaching his gospel. If she performs this duty faithfully, she will never need to pull down her barns and build greater to contain her superabundant goods. The church of to-day has followed the example of the foolish man (see Luke 13:16–20), and, like ancient Israel, her table has become a snare unto her. She thinks herself rich, but she is poor. "Ichabod" is "written upon her wall." "The glory is departed."—Herald of Life.

Apostles Weeping.

When we are told that "the babe wept" (Exod. 2:6) we are not surprised, but a great man weeping is not such a common sight. The Son of God in tears must have astonished angles, and an apostle weeping may well arrest the attention of men.

Peter wept at the remembrance of his sin in denying his Lord (Mark 14:72). In the words of the pious and practical Matthew Henry, we observe: "His sorrow was serious, 'he wept bitterly.' Sorrow for sin must not be slight, but great and deep, like that for an only son. Those that have sinned sweetly, must weep bitterly; for, sooner or later, sin will be bitterness. This deep sorrow is requisite, not to satisfy divine justice (a sea of tears would not do that), but to evidence that there is a real change of mind, which is the essence of repentance, to make the pardon the more welcome and sin for the future the more loathsome. Peter, who wept so bitterly for denying Christ, never denied him again, but confessed him often and openly, and in the mouth of danger; so far from ever saying, 'I know not the man,' that he made 'all the house of Israel know assuredly that this same Jesus was Lord and Christ.' True repentance for any sin will be best evidenced by our abounding in the contrary grace and duty: that is a sign of our weeping, not only bitterly, but sincerely. Some of the ancients say, that as long as Peter lived, he never heard a cock crow but it set him to weeping. Those that have truly sorrowed for sin, will sorrow upon every remembrance of it; yet not so as to hinder, but rather to increase, their joy in God, and in his mercy and grace." A good lesson from Peter's tears.

Paul wept when he thought and wrote of those who were "the enemies of the cross of Christ" (Phil. 3:18). If Jeremiah was a weeping prophet, Paul was a weeping preacher. He did not weep because he was weak-minded and fainthearted—for a more courageous man than he it would be hard to find,—but because the spirit of the Master was in him, moving him to love and tenderness. How apt we are to speak of the failings and inconsistencies of professors with a censorious or exultant spirit! Not so Paul: he was bold to reprove when necessary, and fearlessly defended the truth before peasant and potentate alike, but when in some quiet retreat he dictated to an amanuensis his epistles, the tears rolled down his cheeks as the words and deeds of false professors came to his mind. "Paul weeps when others laugh and are wanton," says Chrysostom, "so full of sympathy is he—so does he bear all men in his heart." Noble example!

John wept much when he found there was no created being in the universe worthy to take the sealed book from the hand of the Enthroned One and reveal its contents (Rev. 5:3–5), on which Wesley pertinently remarks: "The Revelation was not written without tears it will be understood. How far are they from the temper of St. John who inquire after anything rather than the contents of this book! yea, who applaud their own clemency if they excuse those that do inquire into them!" "In nothing," says Barnes, "do we feel that we are more absolutely in need of divine help than in our attempts to unveil the future, and were it not for revelation man might weep in despair." True, but the revelation is made: "the Lion of the tribe of Judah" opens the book; the hand of Him who wept over Jerusalem and at the grave of Lazarus dries the weeper's tears—John is comforted.

If, with Peter we have wept over our own sins, with Paul over the sins of others, and with John for deeper insight into the things of God, we may take to our heart the gracious words of our Redeemer: "Blessed are ye that weep now, for ye shall laugh" (Luke 6:

cally called) an immortal soul in the first man at his creation?

5. Adam was made of the dust; is it not said, that this man of dust became a living soul? and not an immortal soul!

6. If the soul is an immortal or spiritual thing, must it not die a spiritual death? seeing that the Scriptures say: "The soul that sinneth it shall die." See Ezk. xiv. 4.

7. As nothing can die except what is mortal, if the soul dies a spiritual death, must it not be spiritually mortal?

8. If the soul is a spiritual thing, and immortal, it must have spiritual immortality. How then can it die a spiritual death?

9. If literal death destroys a literal thing, must not a spiritual death, destroy a spiritual thing?

10. How could David say: "God will redeem my soul from the power of the grave," if the grave has no dominion over the soul?

11. If the soul is the conscious and responsible part, how is it, that by repentance, it escapes to Paradise at death, and leaves the innocent part, (the body) to suffer the penalty?

12. If the righteous go to glory at death, did not the serpent speak the truth in Gen. iii. 4?

13. But if God spake the truth, does not that which man calls the soul, surely die?

14. If so, how can the clergy say, that modern spiritualism is of the devil? do they pretend to say the devil is proving the immortality of the soul, which they have long tried to do, but always failed?

O consistency, thou art indeed a jewel. When will man become wise unto salvation, and drop the traditions of men, and cling to the Word of the living God, which is sure and steadfast and immutable.

When will they cease to "heap unto themselves teachers, having itching ears?" We fear not until the "Just one" comes and puts away the traditions and commandments of men.—J. S., in Freeport Bulletin.

Admonitions.

"Our best friends are those who tell us of our faults and teach us how to correct them."

We occasionally get a gentle reprimand for mistakes we make in presenting matter before the public which it is thought would be better withheld. While we entertain the best of feelings toward those who have the goodness thus to give us their opinions, we hope they will make due allowance for us under the circumstances in which we are often placed. We, just like other people, are often deceived in the motives of our writers. Not being informed on both sides of the question we sometimes admit articles that we afterwards regret it as deeply as do our readers. The position of an editor of a religious paper is a peculiar one and none can fully understand it but those who have learned it by experience. Our first and leading object is to ease God and labor for the promo- on of his cause or the salvation of s people, and secondly, so far as is ssible, meet the wishes and expecta- ons of our patrons. To fully meet e desires of all is impossible, as in tempting to please one by granting special request we may displease ndreds of others, so that when our dgment anticipates such results we ways think it prudent to disappoint e few rather than offend the many; d we hope all of our readers will stify us in this position even if it hould cause some of their productions meet their destiny in the waste sket. There is one thing we wish stinctly understood; the basis upon hich we accept and reject is erit and demerit, with as little favor- s as possible. We are fully aware the responsibilities under which we e placed and therefore wish to dis- arge our duty in such a way as to meet the approbation of God rather than of man, therefore we always accept kindly, the ideas and suggestions of our brethren and sisters relative to our labor and duties, and endeavor to be profited by them.—The Weekly Pilgrim.

"Soul" as a By-word.

BY D. L. WEAVER.

We find in God's Book the word soul applied in such a variety of ways that it is very hard indeed to try to make it all immortal. We would not for a moment accuse the prophets of using by-words; yet there is a connecting link. We find in Gen. 8:7, soul as a personage; next, Gen. 34:8, we find it used in connection with the mind; 35:18, as the (spirit of) life; 1 Sam. 18:1, we find two souls bound together; again we find it as the heart, etc.

We want to believe all our orthodox brethren when we hear them telling about immortal souls and spirits. Never-dying, endless good bad and indifferent souls, but we have to bend God's Word most too far; and, if the soul is immortal, we cannot help thinking that the prophets and apostles must have used it more as a by-word than from real necessity, and, in that case unbelievers are not so much to blame for not embracing the gospel.

A Thrilling Incident.

In the accounts that have been published of the great disaster on the Atlantic, mention is made of an incident that touched the hearts of all who witnessed it, and should move the hearts of all who read it. It was concerning a little boy, the only child, out of a large number, that was saved on that dreadful night. While hundreds of men, women and children were clinging to the rigging of the ship and struggling for life, one little boy by extraordinary efforts, succeeded in climbing upon the back of a man. To

WHAT PART OF MAN BECOOMES UNCONSCIOUS IN DEATH?

Every reader of the Bible must admit that death reduces some part of man to a state of unconsciousnes, for such statements as these are not meaningless, "In death there is no remembrance of thee;" "In that very day his thoughts perish;" "The dead know not anything." Now, as it is an impossibility to reduce anything to a state of unconsciousness unless it had previously been in possession of consciousness, the conscious part of man must be affected by the stroke of death. If it is true that the body is void of consciousness in life, the soul being the only conscious part of man, and if it is true that this conscious part of man escapes unharmed by the stroke of death, still retaining its consciousness, what part of man is reduced to unconsciousness by the stroke of death? Not the body, if that never was the conscious part of man; not the soul, if that has made its escape unharmed, retaining its consciousness: so with this view death does not make either the soul or the body unconscious. Then what becomes of these Scripture declarations, "The dead know not anything....their love, their hatred, and their envy is now perished?" If these are passions of the soul, how can they perish under the stroke of death, if the soul escapes its power?

We repeat, if the body never possessed consciousness, it can never become unconscious; yet the Bible often represents some part of man as unconscious in death. If death produces unconsciousness in any part of man, it must be that part which previously possessed consciousness. If we kill an unconscious body, and the conscious soul escapes without injury, still retaining its consciousness, nothing is rendered unconscious by the act of death.

But when we learn that man is a conscious being himself, instead of being a mere tenement for another conscious being to dwell in, we can see how death produces unconsciousness, by killing a conscious being. That the material man is the accountable being, and consequently the conscious man in life, is evident from the fact that God is to "judge" the very man that falls under the power of "death," (Rev. 20: 13,) instead of judging a deathless soul. Man himself is the responsible being, and death conquers and holds him till the resurrection brings him up to judgment.

WISCONSIN CAMP MEETING.

This meeting proved one of interest to the cause, giving a new impetus to the membership and ministry at large throughout the State. Eld. L. C. Collins, from THE TIMES office, and Eld. S. C. Wellcome, from Minnesota, were present to help. Five were baptized by Eld. Howard, some gave their hearts to God, and others were refreshed. The attendance was good.

Christian Liberality.

BY VIRGIL HUNT.

How many there are who profess to be free from all sectarianism; who claim to stand on liberal and Bible Christianity: but, alas! if we dare to present anything contrary to the doctrine educated into them, how deep then do we find this boasted liberality to be? Generally just deep enough to make the cry "heresy," "dangerous doctrine," away with it!

Now, dear reader, whatever you may be, Adventist, Methodist, or what not, can you call this true, Christian liberality? If you can, you can do more than the writer. To me it is the most unchristian sectarianism that can be. Do you ask me what Christian liberality is? I will tell you what I conceive it to be.

First, it is not to believe every wind of doctrine that comes to our ears. No; it is not to say amen to what every preacher says—not at all. Neither is it to cry him down, calling him an avowed heretic, skeptic, or infidel. But it is to hear all with a kind Christian spirit. It is to say, Brother, I do not, as yet, believe with you, but am willing to investigate the subject. You seem to present your views with Christian fervor, and as I lay no claims to infallibility, perhaps you are right and I wrong. The brother should reply: All I ask of you is to examine it, test it by the good Book; and if you should not then come to believe with me, we will not fall out. Mayhap we are both a little in the wrong; and, as two wrongs never make one right, let us carefully and prayerfully, as becomes two Christian brothers, examine our differences together. Oh! how many have imagined themselves just right, got the whole truth, no more nor less. "I don't want anything different—it is good enough for me," etc.

Suppose the Adventists, when they came off from the other churches, and cried mightily "Behold, the Lord cometh," had stopped there and said this great truth is enough for us, we are all right now: yes, got the whole truth now, what would have become of other kindred truths, man's nature and destiny, etc. Dear brethren, let us live to learn, let us treat others who may differ from us in little matters of faith with true Christian liberality, remembering we see now as through a glass darkly.

In Camp.

At this date, June 8th, 1873, the second day of the meeting, we are greatly encouraged. There are two large tents and six small, family-tents, also a large grocery stand now on the ground. Brethren from different parts are coming distances; one brother from Nebraska, 250 miles west, and others from the east. It is raining this morning, but the camp is preparing for an interesting day. Brethren pray for us. Let there be a united people looking for the Lord.

Vain Philosophy--No. 1.

BY H. V. REED.

"Beware lest any man spoil you through philosophy and vain deceit, after the tradition of men, and after the rudiments of the world and not after Christ."—Col. 2: 8.

The Apostle in the above text, sets forth three systems of error, the tendency of which was to lead men from the simplicity that is in Christ. The church at Colosse was surrounded by errors of almost every kind, and it became necessary for the Apostle to give them an earnest warning and prepare them to withstand the devices of men, and to be steadfast in Christ. These errors may be stated summarily as follows:

1. Philosophy.
2. Tradition.
3. Rudiments of the world.

In discussing these propositions, it is not our intention to present a lengthy essay, but to invite the reader to a few items of interest which may prove instructive to those who are seeking truth from the Holy Oracles, and to enter our protest against some of the current notions, the belief of which is deemed essential to salvation; and the denial of which is considered treason against the government of God. We shall investigate the subject as presented in the arrangement above, which brings us to discuss

1. Philosophy.

This word is transferred from the Greek, and strictly means love of wisdom; but in the text at the head of this article it is used to denote that system of learning so popular among the Greeks and Romans in the days of Jesus and his apostles, and styled by Paul "The wisdom of the world." The principles of this system may be stated as follows:

1. Polytheism. This notion obtained in all parts of the world, and men who had become heroes were deified after death and worshiped as Gods. Their notions were in oppositson to the teachings of Jesus and his associates, which presented but "one God the Father."

2. They believed in the immortality of the soul. This theory was entertained by all classes, with but few exceptions and in the days of Paul, was entertained as one of the leading tenents of Grecian philosophy. Says Dr. Dick, "It is well known that Plato, Socrates, and other Greek philosophers held the doctrine of the soul's immortality." And we need only remark that these philosophers were endorsed as exponents of the mysteries of nature and religion in the days of Jesus and his apostles. Hence another principle of that philosophy which taught the deathless nature of the soul contradicts the plainest truths of Revelation; which teaches that the soul dies. In proof of this assertion the reader is requested to read Ezek. 18: 4; Psa. 78: 50; Job 7: 15; James 5: 20; Josh. 10: 31, 35, 37; Josh. 11: 11.

3. They rejected the resurrection of the dead. And why should they not if this theory were true; that man became a god at death, and passed into divine society. Why humble him in some future day, and clothe an immortal god with gross materiality?

When Paul appeared before the philosophers at Mars' Hill, and preached to them Jesus and the resurrection, they called it "new doctrine," and thought him a babbler, bringing strange things to their ears, and a setter forth of strange gods. (Acts.17:) And when the apostle presented the resurrection, "some mocked," and others would hear him again; their theory was such that the resurrection seemed unnecessary. As man never dies, it is needless to assert his resurrection.

The apostle well understood the tendencies of this philosophy, and therefore warned the disciples against it.

Now let us compare that system of wisdom in former times, with what is now termed Christian Philosophy.

1. Anciently they taught a society of gods in one. We have the same now taught in what is called the Trinity. Three gods in one, and yet but one God. Now if that system anciently could with propriety be called polytheism, because of a belief in a society of gods, are we not justified in the same opinion when applied to the three gods-in-one theory?

2. The ancient philosophy suspended its hope of a future state upon the nature of the soul. So does what is termed the Christian philosophy of our day. Hence there is a perfect analogy between the two. One however is called heathen and the other christian philosophy; whereas the truth is, it is heathenism Christianized. This may be considered rash, but truth many times when spoken in love, becomes rash because of the enormity of the thing uttered.

3. The resurrection was entirely overlooked by ancient philosophy. So it is now, by those who believe in the soul's immortality. It is deemed as non essentail so far as man's future state is concerned, whereas in apostolic times the resurrection was presented as the only way for man to live again. Paul says, "If the dead rise not then they which have fallen asleep in Christ are perished." 1. Cor. 15: 18. Again, what advantageth it me if the dead rise not? Let us eat and drink, for tomorrow we die. Death would be an eternal sleep, and herein would the philosophy of France become true. But the resurrection is now denied upon what are called phylosophical principles; the first object is; "That it is impossible for God to raise the dead man. And yet these Christian philosophers admit that God made man in the first place. It would only be just to ask, has God lost his power? The power that first formed, can re-form, if yet in existence. But in reply to the main point of the objection. The resurrection is based upon: 1. The promise that the dead shall be raised, and, 2nd, upon the ability to execute the promise. If the objector can show that either of the above positions is not true, he can frame an argument against the resurrection; but until this is done, the theory stands as firm as the pillars of the throne of him who made the promise.

2. Philosophy has made another discovery, which is, that the human body changes once in seven years. How they can be so definite is certainly a query which they alone can answer. It is argued from this supposed change that the resurrection of the dead is untrue. But allow us to remark, that the above position involves itself into several absurdities.

1. No body would ever become more that seven years of age; and the world would present a system of eternal boyhood.

2. Any scar inflicted on the body would become extinct at the end of seven years.

3. Any disease that is contagious would be experienced every seven years as the body entirely changes during that time.

Hence we should not expect to see old men leaning on their staffs, but eternal youth blooming on their brows. But even allowing the theory to be true, it can form no objection to the resurrection of the dead; for though the body may change, the body thus changed can be raised if the power is adequate to the promise made. Other objections might be noticed, but time forbids at present. It is a divine maxim, that "the world by wisdom knew not God," and that "the wisdom of the world is foolishness with God." 1 Cor. 1: And if ever this was exemplified in all its truthful bearings, it is in our own times when men are doing their utmost to avoid the plain truths of Revelation.

Philosophy has in all ages been a lasting stain on the divine truths of God, and in regard to it, Mosheim well remarks:

"It must, however, be acknowledged that the principles laid down by many of them, (the philosophers) went wholly to extinguish every sense of God and of religion, and completely to do away with all distinction between good and evil." Mosh. Vol. 1, p. 28. And history will justify us in saying further, that philosophy has done more to shut out the light of eternal truth, then all the decrees of kings, and persecutions of the world. It is the wisdom of the world which cometh to naught and is not from above, but is earthly, sensual devilish. James 3:—But the wisdom which is from above is "first pure then peaceable, gentle and easy to be entreated, full of mercy and good fruits." James 3: And finally Jesus is made unto us, "wisdom and righteousness sanctification and redemption." 1 Cor. 1: 30 And in these we behold the philosophy of heaven, pure as the light which circles around the throne of the Eternal. It is wisdom in that it has a consistent plan of developement; it is righteousness because it presents a law of truth for man to obey. It is sanctification because it sets man apart from the world to work in harmony with the things of God. It is redemption because it will redeem earth and the saints from the bondage of corruption into the glorious liberty of the sons of God. Rom. 8: Let us, then, have this heavenly wisdom, and by it adorn our lives, that we may live to adore the author of all true wisdom forever. But in conclusion we exhort the reader in the language of Paul and Timothy, "Avoiding profane and vain babblings, and oppositions of science falsely so called."—1 Tim. 6: 20.

The Pure in Heart.

BY MARTHA TRASK.

Blessed are the pure in heart, for they shall see God. (Mat. 5: 8.) The question is, who are the pure in heart? David asked the question, "Lord, who shall abide in thy tabernacle; who shall dwell in Thy holy hill?" We understand from the Bible that hill, or mountain, represents government or kingdom; who shall dwell in Thy holy hill? (or dwell in thy kingdom.) And if we dwell in the kingdom we will see God there. The answer is, "He that walketh uprightly and worketh righteousness, and speaketh the truth in his heart; he that backbiteth not with his tongue, nor doeth evil to his neighbor, nor taketh up a reproach against his neighbor. In whose eyes a vile person is contemned; but he honoreth them that fear the Lord. He that sweareth to his own heart and changeth not; he that putteth not out his money to usury. He that doth these things shall never be moved." Here we have a class of people that will dwell in the holy hill, or that will see God. It is essential to our future life that we work righteousness in everything we do. The eyes of the ungodly are upon us; they are watching us to see if we live up to our profession, and we never will accomplish our mission in this life until we are cleansed from all sin. "Let all bitterness, and wrath, and clamor, and evil speaking be put away from you with all malice; and be ye kind one to another, tender-hearted, forgiving one another, even as God, for Christ's sake, hath forgiven you. But if ye have bitter envying and strife in your hearts, this wisdom cometh not from above, but is earthly, sensual, devilish. For where envying and strife is, there is confusion and every evil work." Paul says: "Follow peace with all men and holiness, without which no man shall see the Lord." Why are there so many opposing purity of heart, when the Word declares that without it no man shall see the Lord? One good old sister was heard to say, not long since, she did not believe that any one could live without sinning; it was impossible, she thought. Just so it is impossible to keep the weeds out of your garden; if you cut them off they spring up again and you are never rid of them; but root up every weed, pick out all the roots that are in the ground (heart), think you the weeds will be as large the next morning? I think not. If we say we cannot live without sin, then we make God a liar. "Know ye not that to whom ye yield youselves servants to obey, His servants ye are to whom ye obey, whether of sin unto death, or of obedience unto righteousness." "He that hath clean hands and a pure heart." Are we clean? Is there no "spot nor wrinkle" upon us? Are we ready to suffer reproach without a murmur? Is our will completely given up to the will of Christ? When we say all is on the altar we say a good deal. If all is on the altar what a sweet rest we have in God; by faith we can look up and see Him, and he smiles on us and gives us peace and joy that no tongue can describe. All our sorrows, affections and, above all, our stubborn will, is completely swallowed up in love to God and love to our neighbors. Glory to God for power that will change these sinful hearts and give us peace with God and good will to men. I love this power that keeps us from trials and temptations. I can look back and see the time that with all the power I could bring to bear I would be overtaken in a temptation and commit sin, but glory be to God, his grace is sufficient for me now, and I can look temptation in the face and feel that Jesus is my Savior from all sin. Not a doubt doth now arise to hide my Saviour from my eyes. God has called us to be pure in heart. On what principle am I justified in neglecting this calling? God is displeased with the carnal nature that still lurks within our hearts. His holiness loathes it. He calls us to the fountain of Christ's blood, where we may be made clean. Shall we obey, or disobey? God has not called us unto uncleanness, but unto holiness. "This is the will of God, even your sanctification." May God help each one of us to take this free-will offering while we have the opportunity, for none but the pure in heart shall see God.

Believers to be found in all Churches.

Nay, I believe that even in the church of Rome there are very many of God's own people. Who can doubt that John Huss, who lived and died like a priest, was a Christian? Who can doubt that Fenelon and Pascal and Massillion were also Christains? Who can doubt even this was the case? Take one instance, related by Merle D'Aubigne, whose history of the Reformation I would recommend you to read. He says that in an old convent that was destroyed not many years ago there was found an iron chest, about a foot in length and a half foot in depth. This chest was built into the solid wall, and in it was found a parchment document signed by one of the monks belonging to the monastery, and written on it was this—"Thou knowest, blessed Jesus, that I look to thee as my only Savior, and to thy name as the only name; and I look for happiness from thy blood alone; but thou knowest that I dare not say so in this convent. And therefore I write my testimony, inclosing it here, hoping that it may witness for me in that day." Now, who can doubt but that he was a true Christian? I believe there are most thorough Roman Catholic priests who are officiating in the church of England—in it, but not of it. When you see a flower in the desert in the midst of a burning sand, it is not the creation of the place where it grows, but of the sweet sunshine and the dewdrops that fall from the skies cause it to grow. I have seen amid the Alps beautiful flowers growing under the shadow of the avalanche—not the creation of the frost and snow, but a creation in spite of the frost and the snow. So I believe that in the church of Rome there are now Christians, living stones, who think they are resting upon Peter, and will discover at the judgment morning that in spite of their mistakes they were resting on the Rock of Ages, and we are thankful for it.—Dr. Cumming.

Managing Men.

During the Revolutionary war both Gen. Schuyler and Gen. Montgomery, who were just then in charge of the important project of the invasion of Canada, became exceedingly annoyed at the hindrances and perplexities involving them. They were in all sorts of difficulties—matters did not run straight; troops were insubordinate; provisions failed to come to hand; arms and ammunition were lacking; jealousies were breaking out among the officers; everything seemed to be in as bad a case as a man's trout line tangled in the bushes, at which he jerks and fusses, while the trout go swimming gayly on uncaught. They determined to resign. That is the quickest and easiest way out. News reaches Washington. He addresses to General Schuyler this calm and noble letter:

"I am sorry," he says, "that you and Gen. Montgomery incline to quit the service. Let me ask you, sirs, when is the time for brave men to exert themselves in the cause of liberty and their country, if this is not? Should any difficulties that they may have to encounter at this important crisis deter them? God knows, there is not a difficulty that you both very justly complain of, that I have not in an eminent degree experienced, that I am not every day experiencing; but we must bear up against them, and make the best of mankind as it is, since we cannot have men to our wish." We have thought much, since we read them, of these last words. They have been to us a kind of talisman of success. There is not any man in any walk of life who does not find himself confronted with the necessity of managing those around him. And the difficulty is that you must all the time be working with crooked sticks. No man is a perfectly straight stick. Every man has his twists of prejudice, and kinks of habit, and gnarled knots of obstinacy. You lay your plans. Your plans lie perfectly straight in your head, but when you come to actualize your plan in men, then the men never will lie straight. Somebody wants this, some other body that: this man will perhaps, that man won't anyhow; and you are quite apt to find yourself in as bad a plight as was Schuyler and Montgomery.

Now, there are two ways of managing. One way, the easiest and the shortest, is their proposed way. Allow yourself to be annoyed, get mad, throw the whole thing up, resign. But no purpose can ever be accomplished so. Such a way may let you out of the difficulty, but it is the death of your plan surely. The other way—the longest way, the hardest way, but the only successful way—is to remember and to act upon that goldent sentence of Washington: "Make the best of mankind as it is, since we cannot have men as we wish." Be content to do the utmost you can with crooked sticks, since you never can get straight ones. It was thus that Washington succeeded. Not by angrily resigning when difficulties arose, as these generals testily threatened to; but by a calm, grand, wise, patient persistence, which was contented with the half loaf when it could not get the whole: which with unrelaxing diligence made the best it could out of what was best in men, and at the same time silently endured the worst in them.

We think that of all men in the world pastors most need to learn and use this lesson—most need to enter into the skill of managing wrapped up in these words: "Make the best of mankind as it is, since we cannot have men as we wish." It was thus Paul wrought with men. Here is an instance: "As touching our brother Apollos, I greatly desired him to come unto you with the brethren: but his will was not at all to come at this time; but he will come when he shall have convenient time." There it is, you see. Paul had a plan for Apollos. Apollos would not carry it out. Well, we will wait for brother Apollos, then, says Paul; his convenient time will come at last; meanwhile he is brother Apollos, loved, honored, a little contrary, but sure to come out right in the end. Patient apostle, hopeful apostle, and so successful apostle.—Journal and Messenger.

Ho for Camp!

Let Michigan brethren wake up and prepare for camp. The 28th of June will soon be here, and a splendid ground will be fitted for your reception. There are arrangements made for boarding on the ground at reasonable rates. There will be a special train from Jackson every day except Sunday. Trains from the north will pass the ground at 8 A. M. 6.25 P. M. Trains from the south will pass the grounds at 2.35 and 7.25 P. M. Come, brothers, from every part of the State; bring your tents and families; leave hindrances and grievances at home; come resolved to make our yearly feast one of rich dainties for the Church of Christ. The day of our trials will soon be over, and we shall rest in our eternal home.

Religious Activity.

There are many who have clear conceptions of truth and strong feelings, but from a lack of executive energy they do not carry out as they should the principles they profess. "Hell," as one writer observer, "is paved with good intentions." We can see from this why more good is not accomplished in the world. Man is naturally indolent. He must needs arouse himself to strike for truth and right.

There are some who act as if religious activity were not necessary to the salvation of the soul. But we read in the word of God that "faith without works is dead,"—that without works believers cannot be justified before men,—that only those who work will receive a reward at the coming of Christ; and the apostle in exerting his brethren says, "Wherefore let us not sleep as do others, but let us watch and be sober." Surely we ought now to arouse ourselves, and devote the remainder of our days to God's service. There is no time to be lost. Improve each golden moment.—Advent Herald.

For Us.

It is a blessed thought that the Bible was written for us. That the Spirit of God looked along the ages and saw that in such an event or circumstance of life, we should need just such counsel and help. And then he inspired men to write it down. Not for our good only, but for thousands who have gone before and who will come after. No promise is there but has been proved thousands of times, no warning, but many have taken it home.

It is like a good chart, which has everything on it, that a mariner in every sea may need. Its truths never wear out. Says one who has been a deep student of it, "The Bible will bear a thousand readings, and the man who has gone over it the most frequently and [illegible]refully, is the surest to find new w[illegible]s there."—Weekly Pilgim.

WHEN, where, and how to pray! Always, "without ceasing. Where? In all places; especially that place which, being sanctified to this use, is therefore called the house of prayer. How? From the heart, "lifting up pure and clean hands." That is to say, in faith and in love. Our prayer, feathered with these two wings, flieth straight into heaven.—Archbishop Sundy.

BIBLE REVISION.—The Old Testament Revision Company having gone the first time through the pentateuch, have now arrived at the Book of Numbers. Many members of the company are favorable to an immediate publication of the Pentateuch.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

AT HOME.

—As an indication of the strength of the farmers' associations in Iowa, it may be noted that at the Grange picnic, at Mound Pleasant Iowa, yesterday, there were 10,000 patrons in attendance from Henry and the adjoining counties.

—The cholera is better at Nashville, but worse at Memphis. Twenty-four victims of the disease were buried in the latter city yesterday, against eighteen the day before. It is hoped that the heavy rains which have succeeded the hot and sultry weather of the last week will tend to check its ravages.

—The Secretary of the Interior has decided that, under the sixth section of the act of Congress granting lands to aid the construction of the Northern Pacific Railroad, the filing of the map of the general route protects the Company from pre-emptive settlements within the granted limits, which in the States are twenty miles on each side of line.

The Polaris survivors have been secretly examined by Secretary Robeson, as to the cause of Capt. Hall's death, and the failure of the expedition. Nothing is officially disclosed of the results of the investigation, but it has "leaked" out that it shows Capt. Buddington, who was placed in so unfavorable a light by Esquimaux Joe's story, to be guilty at the least, of having deliberately deserted the Tyson party. He is said, while intoxicated, to have driven them at the peril of their lives off the ship to the ice-floe, where he left them with a scanty supply of provisions to take their chances of rescue or death.

—Under the clear and well written opinion of Attorney-General Williams, there is no doubt that the Modoc murderers of Gen. Canby and Mr. Thomas will be brought to a speedy trial before a military commission and sentenced to be hanged. Gen. Davis has already indicated his conviction of the necessity of proceeding in this way in order to impress upon the hostile Indians everywhere that they may not with impunity break faith and commit murder; and now that the legal department of the government has clearly demonstrated his right to try Captain Jack and his murderous companions without further formality, the Indian sentimentalists will scarcely be able to defeat his policy.

—Seventeen of the sixty-three Cottonwood Modocs, who surrendered a few days ago near Fairchild's ranch, were on their way to Gen. Davis' camp under the escort of one of the Fairchilds, and were intercepted by some Oregon volunteers, who deliberately shot every male of the party. Nothing but the unexbected arrival of a detachment of troops seems to have prevented the murder of the twelve women and children. None of the Indians were armed, and the affair was simply a butchery no less atrocious than the assassination of Gen. Canby. Among the victims were Shacknasty Jim and Bogus Charley, and it is said that none of them were under an indictment for murder, and that they had not participated in any of the treacheries of the band.

—Washington officials are now eager for the absorption of Gautemala into the Union, and no less than two Gautemalans have waited upon the President, to assure him of the yearning of their fellow countrymen to be annexed. Another annexation project is proposed, as a preventive for any trouble between this country and Mexico over such transgressions of the boundary line as Mackenzie's recent Indian raid. What are known as the Mexican frontier States, are to be transferred to our dominion. In this way the boundary line would be shortened, the debatable land where the Indian marauders take refuge would be wholly under our sovereignty, and with the consideration which Mexico would receive for the cession of the territory she would be able to pay her debts.

—Of the many ideas advanced as to what shall be done with the Modocs who are not to be tried by the military commission, there is one view which meets with much favor among army officers, and that is to send the whole gang to Alaska. The Seminoles were a constant source of trouble in Florida, but since they were transported to Arkansas, fifteen or twenty years ago, they have been quiet. The transportation of the Modocs to Alaska would have a beneficial effect, it is agreed, upon hostile tribes, and serve to keep down any troublesome spirit among them. It is demanded that some very severe measures must be adopted to punish the unruly Indians, which, at the same time, will have its effect as a warning to other tribes. The Sioux, for instance, a powerful nation, embracing many tribes, having probably 18,000 or 20,000 warriors, now run over some nine hundred miles of territory, from the Republican River, in Kansas, to the British possessions, and should they get on the war-path, it would require thousands of troops and millions of money to subdue them.

—Capt. Jack spoke as follows, when he had his first interview with Gen. Davis. He tries to implicate Allen David, the Klamath chief, and denies being present when Gen. Canby was killed. He also said: "I don't know how to open the subject about Allen David. I received a message last winter in the lava beds by old Sconchin, a subject of his, from Allen David, as follows: 'I don't want you to lower your gun and fight like a squaw, but you must fight like a man.' At first I thought this message was a lie, but it came so often that I believed. I was about to lay down my arms when I got the message. Allen David told Sconchin to tell me to fight, that he thought the whites were going to fight him, and he would soon let Jack know what he was going to do. Allen said, 'Hold on to your guns. I am getting ammunition; will join you in a few days, and am selling property to buy powder.' Allen further said, 'Don't act like a woman; be a man. I will join you soon; have lots of people; want to get guns first: whatever offers the commissioners may make don't believe what they say; they are trying to fool you.' I was going to give up and surrender when I got this message. I expected when I killed the commissioners that Allen David would be with me the next day or very soon, and I had already given up my arms. I ate the food of the government, and did not want to do any fighting after eating their food. When I got this message it made me act as though I acted for Allen David, and expected him to join me. Soon Allen David caused me to leave the reservation. I had bad feelings towards the Klamaths. So many such messages came that I believed them. I thought he meant it, so I acted. He and I were more good friends but he urged me to do this last winter. I was going wherever they wanted me, and wanted some quiet place not on the rocks. Allen David was always pushing me up. The Klamath chiefs said the same. They talked as if Allen David was a big chief. He said we must not think the Klamaths w[illegible] women. They were not going to lay down their arms to the whites. I had all the trouble, and did all the fighting. He did the looking on, and though they tried to get me into a scrape, I want you to know why I commenced this war last winter on Lost River. Applegate and Brown came and said the big chief was coming to talk, and we must go to the reservation. The soldiers came and surrounded us before day. They held no council. I did not expect that. I was asleep. I told them not to shoot when my boys got their guns. The soldiers fired the first gun. I did not think they wanted to talk. After the soldiers began to fire on my people, some of my boys fired back. I did not. I took my things and ran as fast as I could go away to old Sconchin's reservation, who said he had nothing to say for himself. He only brought message from Allen David." As to Gen. Canby's things he had on, he said, "I can't say anything about it. I went away. The boys who killed Gen. Canby got the things. I was there but went off as soon as I found I could not stop them. Jack, on being questioned, said that Bogus Charley and Shacknasty Jim killed Gen. Canby. Allen David advised us to kill Canby, so he did it. I am telling the truth. I did not kill him. I had it done, but did not do it." He added in conclusion: "I don't lie. Bring them in that saw. I want to face them. If I had my chains off I would tell on all the men who did these things." Sconchin says he did shoot at Meacham, but all the Modocs knew he was a poor shot, and could not hit anything. Jack's answers are of course a tissue of lies, but many agree that old Sconchin from the reservation, was the messenger, and took the money given him by Capt. Jack to charge Allen David, Klamath Chief, with urging them to make war and kill Canby.

The Christian Life.

Saved.

By F. B

Yes, saved! Fully [illegible] m sin! Saved now? [illegible] iptures read: "Unto us [illegible] saved." (1 Cor. 1:18.) "Ye [illegible] aved." (1 Cor. 15:2) "In them th[illegible] are saved." (5 Cor. 2:15.) "He saved us." (Titus 3:5.) This is present salvation.

To be saved is to be delivered from some danger or evil. The evil now present is sin. It dwells in the world as the work of Satan. It dwells in the human being, and is a part and parcel of his very nature in a moral sense. It is not confined to his thoughts or desires merely. It is a corruption of evil working in the very members of his body.

Its roots are there. It crops out in wicked actions. But there would never be any wickedness if there were no roots to produce it. The seeds of sin were sown in Eden, and it became rooted in humanity, and thus all mankind are sinful. Sinning may increase and strengthen sinfulness, but it is not the primary cause of it. Men try to stop sinning without getting rid of a sinful nature, and they find it hard work. They fail. They leave off wickedness in its grosser forms, but their beings are corrupt through sinful lust. It breaks out in spite of them. Man's nature is sinful. He is "carnal, sold under sin."

To be saved from sin is to be delivered from all this. It is to have the nature changed. Sin must be rooted out, and kept from being sown in again. Human hatred, envy, malice, and the like must be taken entirely. They must be killed out. Then God's Holy Spirit must dwell within so as to keep out the seeds, which Satan sows, from taking root again. Thus the man becomes a "new creature" in Christ Jesus. Where is the old nature? Gone. "Old things are passed away: behold, all things are become new." Carnal feelings are gone. Sin is gone out of the man. Satan finds no counterpart of himself in the man. He is filled with Christ and with God. "He dwells in God and God in him."

Such an one is saved. He is clean. He is "white as snow." Jesus made him so. Jesus delivered him. Jesus keeps him thus. To Jesus be all the praise.

How to Fill a Church.

The New York Herald speaks very sensibly on this subject as follows:

There is one recipe given in the Bible for filling churches and for destroying worldliness which we would commend to those ministers who have so often to preach to empty pews and worldly Christians. It is one given by the Lord Jesus Christ himself, and, like all of his recipes, it is simple and easily remembered: 'And I, if I be lifted up, will draw all men unto me.' There is no promise anywhere in the Word that philosophical essays, scientific lectures or disquisitions, or sensational sermons will do this. But lifting up Christ spiritually before the people will do it, and multitudes will flock to listen to his words as they did in the days of his flesh when from Jerusalem and Judea and Galilee and the regions round about they gathered to hear the gracious words that proceeded out of his mouth. He is as certainly, though not as visibly, present with his church and people now as he was then, and the lifting up of his cross and its atonement to-day or in the future will draw all men unto him and fill the churches that are now empty.

A FRIEND of mine has some diamonds. He tells me that if he sets these diamonds out in the strong sunlight for a time and then removes them into a dark room, they will shine brilliantly even amidst the darkness. But after a little while this brilliancy becomes dim, and finally goes out altogether. The precious stones must be taken into the sunshine again if they are to be seen in the gloom. And is not this a parable of the life of Christians? God calls them his "jewels;" and if their divine lustre is to be seen amidst the darkness of the world, they must often seek to look upon the face of the Sun of Righteousness. If they are careless about this, their brightness will soon grow dim; but if they are faithful, that brightness shall be constantly renewed.

"How do you know," a Bedouin was asked, "that there is a God?" "In the same way," he replied, "that I know, on looking at the sand, when a man or beast has crossed the desert—by his footprints in the world around me."—Liddon.

GREAT SECOND ADVENT CONFERENCE.

The meetings of this Conference, which flagged a little in interest on Tuesday, revived their tone and spirit on Wednesday. The evening of that day Lord Shaftesbury took the chair. He briefly introduced as the first speaker,

The Rev. CANON TREVOR, who said he had been a student of prophecy for the last forty years. With him it was a study, still, and he held it as a settled assurance that God is pleased to give light on prophetic Scripture to all those who seek for it simply, child-like, and prayerfully. All present were agreed on the pre-millennial advent of the Saviour, and that that coming will be sudden and unexpected, as far as the world is concerned. Nothing should prevent us from expecting the Son of Man at any moment. What will take place at his coming? We shall see Him. His coming and reign will be a manifestation. We now walk by faith. His coming will be a transition from faith to sight. We, the saints, shall have the coronation and investiture of our Lord. The millennium is a new dispensation—it is a period of time having beginning and end. It differs from eternity, being measured by years. Man's life will be lengthened during that age. But it will not be the consummation; only a transition age. Mr. Pardon had beautifully said: "As we take an intermediate star to measure the distance between us and some distant star, so it was with us, the millennium, and the kingdom of eternity." It will be objected that an account of the millennium occurs only in Rev. 20; but in the prophets events are grouped together with the second advent, which cannot be carried forward to, or happen in, eternity. Rev. 20, to Him was the key to those promises and prophecies. The Book was like a puzzle, piece fitting in with piece until the design was made up. To see the order in which the enemies of the Lord are to be cast down we must go back to the Revelation. The first overthrown is Babylon We read of this Babylon in the 17th chapter. In this chapter, also, we read his sentence. In the 18th chapter we read the execution of that sentence. In the 17th she is in all her glory; in the 18th she is destroyed. As to who this "Babylon" symbolizes he would give his convictions. His opinions had not been hastily formed. He believed Babylon symbolized an Ecclesiastical power. It sits on seven hills. It is the Romish church. This was the reformer's faith. God opened their eyes to identify the woman and the Babylon of Revelation of 17. As long as they believed the Roman church the good, old, true church, they would endure almost anything rather than leave her; but when God enlightened them by the apocalypse they heard the voice crying, "Come out of her, my people," and they obeyed. The Beast is the next enemy that the Lord deals with. It must not be confounded with the rider. It is God's symbol for a civil power. Babylon is not to be destroyed by the appearing of Jesus, but by ten kings, or human agency. The Beast and False Prophet survive Babylon. After Babylon is down there will be a tribulation. An infidel power is the successor to the ecclesiastic—a political antagonism to Christ shall have the power. And he believed the appearing of the Lord would be in the midst of great confusion. In the 19th chapter of Revelation we read of victory. There we see the true Israelites singing the song of triumph, after the enemies of the Lord are punished. To such the kingdom under the whole heaven is given, and "judgment was given unto them," and they "sat on thrones." They are gathered up with the Lord. The first resurrection past, and the saints gathered to Jesus the conversion of the Jews takes place. He granted that even in this age the work of evangelization among the Jews had not been without fruit. A remnant has been saved by grace. But he thinks there is a second remnant, or a completion of the remnant, to be saved at the end of this age. A few days prior he had seen an advertisement in a Jewish paper inviting the Jews home to their own land. Those converted now he believed would be gathered with the Church; the others he expected would be converted afterwards. He looked for two Jerusalems—the earthly, restored; the heavenly, visible and shining down on the earthly. Next came the destruction of antichrist (Rev. 19), and the False Prophet with him. This will take place at the battle of Armageddon. The False Prophet he interprets as the semi-papal power; the ritualistic element, Rome having gone from the scene. Then came the binding of Satan. He has never yet been bound as here described. Now he "goeth about as a roaring lion." Then he will be imprisoned. Nations will then flock to Jerusalem, and there will be a higher condition of blessing than there was in paradise of old. Why? Because there will be no tempter outside men—only the depravity of their own hearts to contend with. This is to happen at the commencement of the millennium; at the close, after a thousand years, Satan is loosed and goes out to deceive the nations. Gog and Magog are gathered by him to battle against the Lord. But the Gog and Magog here are not the same as those mentioned in the 38th and 39th of Ezekiel. The Devil is the same at the end of the thousand years, sinful at its close; and to prove the eternity of the opposition to God, the eternity of sin, and consequently the eternity of punishment, he wanted no other or better argument than the eternal and infinite enmity of the Devil afforded him. And those who are like him will receive an eternity of punishment. Then at the end there was the great white throne, not surrounded with the rainbow now. The wicked dead would be raised to taste the second death; and there, in the bottomless pit, there where the worm dieth not, there where the fire is not quenched, there in separation from God, they remain forever. It is the second death, with no resurrection. Then the other side, where shadows do not bewilder, and suns do not dazzle, and trials do not embitter, etc., etc., the saints shall dwell evermore.

Do we love His appearing? is the question he would propose to that meeting. There were many tests as to who are Christians. This is the best: "Do you wish to see Jesus? Do you long for Him?" We like to see those we love—to see their smile and hear their voices. He was much struck a few days ago with the Lord's question to Peter: He did not say, "Believest thou in Me?" Peter had confessed faith in Christ; but he said, "Lovest thou Me?" and he, the speaker, would have all those present, in prospect of Christ's second coming, feel the question as asked of them: "Lovest thou Me?"

R. BAXTER spoke next. He is a man of singular and magnificent appearance and bearing. He asked: Are we loving the appearing of Jesus? The angels testified of His return when he ascended. The disciples saw Him go personally; he would return so. In Rev. 1 it said: "Behold, He cometh with clouds;" not spiritually, but "with clouds." There can be no doubt about the reality of His coming, for "every eye shall see Him." In the first epistle to the Thessolanians it said that the converts to Christianity from among the heathen were turned from idols to serve the living and true God, and wait for his Son from heaven." The promises of Christ's return were given when the Holy Spirit was present. So we may settle it in our faith—it is not a spiritual but personal coming of the Lord which Scripture teaches. Is it a speculative doctrine? or part of the gospel of Christ? Certainly the latter; because it was part of the trust on which the souls of the early Thessalonians rested. Every chapter in Paul's first and second epistles to that people contains a distinct reference to his coming. In 2 Thess. 1, it was said they should receive their reward when the Lord came. The second advent faith is practical—doctrinal—real; part of the Christian's faith, and the Christian's hope. "Where is faith in the finished work of Christ if we believe not in His second coming?" Jesus, our atonement, washes us; Jesus, gone up on high, ministering not in the word, but in the Spirit, baptises with the Holy Ghost. Who baptises? Jesus. If we are quickened it is Jesus who has done it. Christ, our Atonement, our Righteousness, our Quickener, our Life (coming again), our Translator into the glory. What is the gospel without this crowning work? He giveth the glory; He crowneth with glory. There is in the testimony of the gospel, as an essential part of it, the glory—the coming. The cleansing, the righteousness, the quickening crowned with glory. Without it, it is salvation without glory. Without the second coming we have not a complete gospel. How know we when it comes? One book has blessing in its reading; and shame to possessors that they study it so little. There we have events even to the ripening and our admission into the glory. The Apocalypse has been the stay of the Church in suffering. The vision has been opened to them. They could strengthen their hearts and abide in patience because of it; as they read "Here is the patience of the saints." In taking a retrospective view of the wickedness of the world, the glory comes in as a light to us in these dark days. The return of the Lord is a practical comfort, strength and joy to us. It keeps us in patience. He opened the Revelation and found these three series of sevens: The seven seals open God's purpose concerning his visible church on earth; the seven trumpets show God's retributive dealings on and with the nations of the earth; the seven vials, God's dealings in retribution on the apostacy. The apostacy—what is that? Its principal aspects were plain, distinct, simple. Its three forms were the great dragon, idolatory in its nakedness, the twin beast of the earth—Popery; 1260 years old, idolatry in its Papal form; the blood-drunken woman, the beast from the bottomless pit, breaking the governments of the earth. Commentators may help to the undertaking of prophecy, but the Word itself can alone guide. He would recommend comparison of symbols with symbols, and would conclude by asking: "Are you looking, longing, ready for the second coming?" He loved us; dost thou love Him? The measure of His love unto death; what is the measure of thy love? Measure it—measure it, as in God's sight. He loves us still. He sends the Holy Spirit to plead with our consciences by His Word. "Simon, son of Jonas, lovest thou Me more than these?" If thou lovest, thou wilt be longing for His coming. Have communion in prayer with Jesus for the kingdom of God. Watching, praying for Him we shall welcome him at his coming. Joy and ecstacy shall be ours when He cometh. Made like Him, we shall abide with him ever.

C. D. MARSTON next spoke. He said man had dominion given him at the first; Satan holds it to-day, but Man, the Lord Jesus, is to be the head again. To-day we are offered a choice between acknowledgement of hardships. The Lord is mightier than all rulers, and laughs at men's usual choice. God's decree is, that Jesus shall be head, and reign in Zion. Daniel saw the Son of Man, in vision, have the dominion given him The Lord Jesus shall receive the kingdom, and Satan shall be cast out. The people of God on earth have an interest in all this, and in the redemption by Christ, which was necessary in order to the possession of the inheritance. Jesus is seated on his Father's throne. He is gone into the temple—"heaven itself"—for a time, like the High Priest of old, who went into the typical temple, but only for a time, not to remain there; but to fulfill a part of His office. He would remind all of the apostles' words: "Unto them that look for Him he shall appear a second time without sin unto salvation." They are cheering, encouraging, sustaining. Ours is the victory; we are on the winning side. We are united so compactly with Jesus that we are already by representation in the presence of God, in Jesus, on the throne. Our union with Jesus is real and sweet. "My beloved is mine." "Who loved me?"—not union with a church merely. The Prince of Life said to him: "Live." "I give unto them eternal life," said the Saviour. We draw out of His fullness. We are by divine love as eternal as He. He shall appear a second time to our salvation. The end proposed is to make the Church "a glorious Church." Christ says: "Thou art all fair, my love; there is no spot in thee." The people waited without with anxiety while the High Priest was offering and pleading the blood of atonement. His office was an awful and a nervous one, and when He reappeared the people were relieved of anxiety. Jesus has gone into heaven—not to remain there; therefore we are looking for Him. Now is acceptance, triumph and glory. We shall feel interest in Christ's great affection toward man and devotion to him according to our realization of the salvation which shall be brought unto us at the second advent. Here we are, outside, waiting for Him, and we are asking ourselves personally: How shall I receive Him? in what position? in what disposition? Let us decide to be looking for Him as our friend, our brother and our King.

Lord SHAFTESBURY, the Chairman, having been solicited to make a few remarks, spoke as follows:

My Dear Friends.—Mr. Skrine has requested me to say a few words, to express my sense of the value of this subject; and I do so with great reluctance because, although I have had it much upon my heart, yet I have never studied the matter for dogmatic or didactic purposes. When my heart has said: "When will he come?" the ready answer has been "As a thief in the night;" and when the thought has arisen, "In what manner will He come?" my heart has said, in the words of the angels, "This same Jesus shall so come in like manner as ye have seen Him go into heaven." But with satisfaction, I may say, that this subject has been upon my heart for years and years, not every month, or day, but I [illegible] 't has been with me nearly every h[illegible] the joy of my life; it has been [illegible] inmost soul; and, although [illegible] cann[illegible] lk theologically upon the matter [illegible] enter into the arguments introduced t[illegible] ight with so much force and purity, I [illegible] say that, in reference to the state of th[illegible] es, and the signs which are around us, I cannot see any remedy or solution but that suggested by the fact of the second advent of Christ, to restore equanimity to the earth.

Mr. Baxter has pointed out the social convulsions, natural perplexities and troubles which are around us in these days, and it is impossible to observe the condition of things, and the aspect of society, without coming to the conclusion that some testimony and warning of this kind must be energetically borne, to bring us to a condition of piety, and purity, and peace. And I do hope that these meetings may be the beginning of a constant persistent course of practical preaching upon the subject.

It is not enough to have occasional services, and sermons, and meetings, and to read an odd book or pamphlet or tract; but it must be constantly and regularly preached by the clergy from every pulpit, and proclaimed everywhere, even at the corners of the streets. And I believe if this great matter was so treated, you might still produce a very practical and extensive result upon all classes, and especially upon the English people; upon the refined and educated classes, as well as upon the masses of our working population.

From long continued knowledge of the working-classes, I believe there would be no one subject they would receive with greater delight; no one doctrine which would produce a greater effect upon their lives and their general conduct, than the bringing before them, in their miseries, sorrows, and sufferings, the grand consolations of the second advent.

And I know of no ground upon which we can more readily overcome our religious differences—church and non-conformist—than this; to go forth and preach day by day and night by night, the great and glorious truth of the second advent of our blessed Lord. I know of nothing which would produce so great an effect upon all, great and small, as to say to them: "Watch ye, therefore, for ye know neither the day nor the hour wherein the Son of Man cometh."

Surely this is a noble witness from a noble lord.

St. Paul Quarterly Meeting.

I would report that the Second Quarterly Conference for the St. Paul district has been held pursuant to notice, and that the meetings were excellent and heavenly in their influence upon all who attended. Our week day meetings at Monticello were small in numbers, but heavenly. There were none who attended but felt that it was good to be there. On the Lord's day our congregation was large and attentive to the Word that was spoken. We trust a good impression was made and left upon the minds of all present.

Our next Quarterly Conference for the same district was held at Prairie Creek, five miles east of Northfield, instead of Northfield, as per notice. A goodly number of the friends came in from the surrounding country, and the people living in the neighborhood where the meetings were held came in, giving us full houses and paying the best of attention to the truths presented by those who preached. We trust seed was sown that will spring up into eternal life.

Sister Dubey expects to make this place a point for preaching once in four weeks; may the Lord bless her in the work of preparing a people for the coming of the Master, and may the friends see that her hands are stayed up after a godly sort, so that she may not want for any good thing. Dear brethren and sisters scattered abroad: I am still a reader of THE TIMES, and long for its coming each week. Why do I love it? Because it is a bold herald of God's truth; it does not compromise the truth for the sake of popularity, but gives its readers the pure Word of God. Again I love it because I hear from many through its columns whom I love and highly respect. And last, but not least, I hear of the truth gaining ground in every quarter.

I should like to report the same from my own quarter; but as yet there has been little if any good done here. The time may come when the truth of God's Word shall take deep root in this place. We are in a new country. The Methodists, Presbyterians, and Baptists are just organizing. School houses are being built. So the way will soon be open for some good Advent minister to come and plant the glorious banner of King Immanuel over this beautiful prairie. Adventists coming to Kansas can find (to my knowledge) no better land in the State at $1.25 per acre than is to be found in Sumner county.

Saved.

BY F. B

Yes, saved! Fully [illegible] m sin! Saved now! [illegible] iptures read: "Unto us [illegible] saved." (1 Cor. 1:18.) "Ye [illegible] aved." (1 Cor. 15:2.) "In them th[illegible] are saved." (5 Cor. 2:15.) "He saved us." (Titus 3:5.) This is present salvation.

To be saved is to be delivered from some danger or evil. The evil now present is sin. It dwells in the world as the work of Satan. It dwells in the human being, and is a part and parcel of his very nature in a moral sense. It is not confined to his thoughts or desires merely. It is a corruption of evil working in the very members of his body.

Its roots are there. It crops out in wicked actions. But there would never be any wickedness if there were no roots to produce it. The seeds of sin were sown in Eden, and it became rooted in humanity, and thus all mankind are sinful. Sinning may increase and strengthen sinfulness, but it is not the primary cause of it. Men try to stop sinning without getting rid of a sinful nature, and they find it hard work. They fail. They leave off wickedness in its grosser forms, but their beings are corrupt through sinful lust. It breaks out in spite of them. Man's nature is sinful. He is "carnal, sold under sin."

To be saved from sin is to be delivered from all this. It is to have the nature changed. Sin must be rooted out, and kept from being sown in again. Human hatred, envy, malice, and the like must be taken entirely. They must be killed out. Then God's Holy Spirit must dwell within so as to keep out the seeds, which Satan sows, from taking root again. Thus the man becomes a "new creature" in Christ Jesus. Where is the old nature? Gone. "Old things are passed away: behold, all things are become new." Carnal feelings are gone. Sin is gone out of the man. Satan finds no counterpart of himself in the man. He is filled with Christ and with God. "He dwells in God and God in him."

Such an one is saved. He is clean. He is "white as snow." Jesus made him so. Jesus delivered him. Jesus keeps him thus. To Jesus be all the praise.

How to Fill a Church.

The New York Herald speaks very sensibly on this subject as follows:

There is one recipe given in the Bible for filling churches and for destroying worldliness which we would commend to those ministers who have so often to preach to empty pews and worldly Christians. It is one given by the Lord Jesus Christ himself, and, like all of his recipes, it is simple and easily remembered: 'And I, if I be lifted up, will draw all men unto me.' There is no promise anywhere in the Word that philosophical essays, scientific lectures or disquisitions, or sensational sermons will do this. But lifting up Christ spiritually before the people will do it, and multitudes will flock to listen to his words as they did in the days of his flesh when from Jerusalem and Judea and Galilee and the regions round about they gathered to hear the gracious words that proceeded out of his mouth. He is as certainly, though not as visibly, present with his church and people now as he was then, and the lifting up of his cross and its atonement to-day or in the future will draw all men unto him and fill the churches that are now empty.

A FRIEND of mine has some diamonds. He tells me that if he sets these diamonds out in the strong sunlight for a time and then removes them into a dark room, they will shine brilliantly even amidst the darkness. But after a little while this brilliancy becomes dim, and finally goes out altogether. The precious stones must be taken into the sunshine again if they are to be seen in the gloom. And is not this a parable of the life of Christians? God calls them his "jewels;" and if their divine lustre is to be seen amidst the darkness of the world, they must often seek to look upon the face of the Sun of Righteousness. If they are careless about this, their brightness will soon grow dim; but if they are faithful, that brightness shall be constantly renewed.

"How no you know," a Bedouin was asked, "that there is a God?" "In the same way," he replied, "that I know, on looking at the sand, when a man or beast has crossed the desert—by his footprints in the world around me."—Liddon.

GREAT SECOND ADVENT CONFERENCE.

The meetings of this Conference, which flagged a little in interest on Tuesday, revived their tone and spirit on Wednesday. The evening of that day Lord Shaftesbury took the chair. He briefly introduced as the first speaker,

The Rev. CANON TREVOR, who said he had been a student of prophecy for the last forty years. With him it was a study, still, and he held it as a settled assurance that God is pleased to give light on prophetic Scripture to all those who seek for it simply, child-like, and prayerfully. All present were agreed on the pre-millennial advent of the Saviour, and that that coming will be sudden and unexpected, as far as the world is concerned. Nothing should prevent us from expecting the Son of Man at any moment. What will take place at his coming? We shall see Him. His coming and reign will be a manifestation. We now walk by faith. His coming will be a transition from faith to sight. We, the saints, shall have the coronation and investiture of our Lord. The millennium is a new dispensation—it is a period of time having beginning and end. It differs from eternity, being measured by years. Man's life will be lengthened during that age. But it will not be the consummation; only a transition age. Mr. Pardon had beautifully said: "As we take an intermediate star to measure the distance between us and some distant star, so it was with us, the millennium, and the kingdom of eternity." It will be objected that an account of the millennium occurs only in Rev. 20; but in the prophets events are grouped together with the second advent, which cannot be carried forward to, or happen in, eternity. Rev. 20, to Him was the key to those promises and prophecies. The Book was like a puzzle, piece fitting in with piece until the design was made up. To see the order in which the enemies of the Lord are to be cast down we must go back to the Revelation. The first overthrown is Babylon We read of this Babylon in the 17th chapter. In this chapter, also, we read his sentence. In the 18th chapter we read the execution of that sentence. In the 17th she is in all her glory; in the 18th she is destroyed. As to who this "Babylon" symbolizes he would give his convictions. His opinions had not been hastily formed. He believed Babylon symbolized an Ecclesiastical power. It sits on seven hills. It is the Romish church. This was the reformer's faith. God opened their eyes to identify the woman and the Babylon of Revelation of 17. As long as they believed the Roman church the good, old, true church, they would endure almost anything rather than leave her; but when God enlightened them by the apocalypse they heard the voice crying, "Come out of her, my people," and they obeyed. The Beast is the next enemy that the Lord deals with. It must not be confounded with the rider. It is God's symbol for a civil power. Babylon is not to be destroyed by the appearing of Jesus, but by ten kings, or human agency. The Beast and False Prophet survive Babylon. After Babylon is down there will be a tribulation. An infidel power is the successor to the ecclesiastic—a political antagonism to Christ shall have the power. And he believed the appearing of the Lord would be in the midst of great confusion. In the 19th chapter of Revelation we read of victory. There we see the true Israelites singing the song of triumph, after the enemies of the Lord are punished. To such the kingdom under the whole heaven is given, and "judgment was given unto them," and they "sat on thrones." They are gathered up with the Lord. The first resurrection past, and the saints gathered to Jesus the conversion of the Jews takes place. He granted that even in this age the work of evangelization among the Jews had not been without fruit. A remnant has been saved by grace. But he thinks there is a second remnant, or a completion of the remnant, to be saved at the end of this age. A few days prior he had seen an advertisement in a Jewish paper inviting the Jews home to their own land. Those converted now he believed would be gathered with the Church; the others he expected would be converted afterwards. He looked for two Jerusalems—the earthly, restored; the heavenly, visible and shining down on the earthly. Next came the destruction of antichrist (Rev. 19), and the False Prophet with him. This will take place at the battle of Armageddon. The False Prophet he interprets as the semi-papal power; the ritualistic element, Rome having gone from the scene. Then came the binding of Satan. He has never yet been bound as here described. Now he "goeth about as a roaring lion." Then he will be imprisoned. Nations will then flock to Jerusalem, and there will be a higher condition of blessing than there was in paradise of old. Why? Because there will be no tempter outside men—only the depravity of their own hearts to contend with. This is to happen at the commencement of the millennium; at the close, after a thousand years, Satan is loosed and goes out to deceive the nations. Gog and Magog are gathered by him to battle against the Lord. But the Gog and Magog here are not the same as those mentioned in the 38th and 39th of Ezekiel. The Devil is the same at the end of the thousand years, sinful at its close; and to prove the eternity of the opposition to God, the eternity of sin, and consequently the eternity of punishment, he wanted no other or better argument than the eternal and infinite enmity of the Devil afforded him. And those who are like him will receive an eternity of punishment. Then at the end there was the great white throne, not surrounded with the rainbow now. The wicked dead would be raised to taste the second death; and there, in the bottomless pit, there where the worm dieth not, there where the fire is not quenched, there in separation from God, they remain forever. It is the second death, with no resurrection. Then the other side, where shadows do not bewilder, and suns do not dazzle, and trials do not embitter, etc., etc., the saints shall dwell evermore.

Do we love His appearing? is the question he would propose to that meeting. There were many tests as to who are Christians. This is the best: "Do you wish to see Jesus? Do you long for Him?" We like to see those we love—to see their smile and hear their voices. He was much struck a few days ago with the Lord's question to Peter: He did not say, "Believest thou in Me?" Peter had confessed faith in Christ; but he said, "Lovest thou Me?" and he, the speaker, would have all those present, in prospect of Christ's second coming, feel the question as asked of them: "Lovest thou Me?"

R. BAXTER spoke next. He is a man of singular and magnificent appearance and bearing. He asked: Are we loving the appearing of Jesus? The angels testified of His return when he ascended. The disciples saw Him go personally; he would return so. In Rev. 1 it said: "Behold, He cometh with clouds;" not spiritually, but "with clouds." There can be no doubt about the reality of His coming, for "every eye shall see Him." In the first epistle to the Thessolanians it said that the converts to Christianity from among the heathen were turned from idols to serve the living and true God, and wait for his Son from heaven." The promises of Christ's return were given when the Holy Spirit was present. So we may settle it in our faith—it is not a spiritual but personal coming of the Lord which Scripture teaches. Is it a speculative doctrine? or part of the gospel of Christ? Certainly the latter; because it was part of the trust on which the souls of the early Thessalonians rested. Every chapter in Paul's first and second epistles to that people contains a distinct reference to his coming. In 2 Thess. 1, it was said they should receive their reward when the Lord came. The second advent faith is practical—doctrinal—real; part of the Christian's faith, and the Christian's hope. "Where is faith in the finished work of Christ if we believe not in His second coming?" Jesus, our atonement, washes us; Jesus, gone up on high, ministering not in the word, but in the Spirit, baptises with the Holy Ghost. Who baptises? Jesus. If we are quickened it is Jesus who has done it. Christ, our Atonement, our Righteousness, our Quickener, our Life (coming again), our Translator into the glory. What is the gospel without this crowning work? He giveth the glory; He crowneth with glory. There is in the testimony of the gospel, as an essential part of it, the glory—the coming. The cleansing, the righteousness, the quickening crowned with glory. Without it, it is salvation without glory. Without the second coming we have not a complete gospel. How know we when it comes? One book has blessing in its reading; and shame to possessors that they study it so little. There we have events even to the ripening and our admission into the glory. The Apocalypse has been the stay of the Church in suffering. The vision has been opened to them. They could strengthen their hearts and abide in patience because of it; as they read "Here is the patience of the saints." In taking a retrospective view of the wickedness of the world, the glory comes in as a light to us in these dark days. The return of the Lord is a practical comfort, strength and joy to us. It keeps us in patience. He opened the Revelation and found these three series of sevens: The seven seals open God's purpose concerning his visible church on earth; the seven trumpets show God's retributive dealings on and with the nations of the earth; the seven vials, God's dealings in retribution on the apostacy. The apostacy—what is that? Its principal aspects were plain, distinct, simple. Its three forms were the great dragon, idolatory in its nakedness, the twin beast of the earth—Popery; 1260 years old, idolatry in its Papal form; the blood drunken woman, the beast from the bottomless pit, breaking the governments of the earth. Commentators may help to the undertaking of prophecy, but the Word itself can alone guide. He would recommend comparison of symbols with symbols, and would conclude by asking: "Are you looking, longing, ready for the second coming?" He loved us; dost thou love Him? The measure of His love unto death; what is the measure of thy love? Measure it—measure it, as in God's sight. He loves us still. He sends the Holy Spirit to plead with our consciences by His Word. "Simon, son of Jonas, lovest thou Me more than these?" If thou lovest, thou wilt be longing for His coming. Have communion in prayer with Jesus for the kingdom of God. Watching, praying for Him we shall welcome him at his coming. Joy and ecstacy shall be ours when He cometh. Made like Him, we shall abide with him ever.

C. D. MARSTON next spoke. He said man had dominion given him at the first; Satan holds it to-day, but Man, the Lord Jesus, is to be the head again. To-day we are offered a choice between acknowledgement of hardships. The Lord is mightier than all rulers, and laughs at men's usual choice. God's decree is, that Jesus shall be head, and reign in Zion. Daniel saw the Son of Man, in vision, have the dominion given him The Lord Jesus shall receive the kingdom, and Satan shall be cast out. The people of God on earth have an interest in all this, and in the redemption by Christ, which was necessary in order to the possession of the inheritance. Jesus is seated on his Father's throne. He is gone into the temple—"heaven itself"—for a time, like the High Priest of old, who went into the typical temple, but only for a time, not to remain there; but to fulfill a part of His office. He would remind all of the apostles' words: "Unto them that look for Him he shall appear a second time without sin unto salvation." They are cheering, encouraging, sustaining. Ours is the victory; we are on the winning side. We are united so compactly with Jesus that we are already by representation in the presence of God, in Jesus, on the throne. Our union with Jesus is real and sweet. "My beloved is mine." "Who loved me?"—not union with a church merely. The Prince of Life said to him: "Live." "I give unto them eternal life," said the Saviour. We draw out of His fullness. We are by divine love as eternal as He. He shall appear a second time to our salvation. The end proposed is to make the Church "a glorious Church." Christ says: "Thou art all fair, my love; there is no spot in thee." The people waited without with anxiety while the High Priest was offering and pleading the blood of atonement. His office was an awful and a nervous one, and when He reappeared the people were relieved of anxiety. Jesus has gone into heaven—not to remain there; therefore we are looking for Him. Now is acceptance, triumph and glory. We shall feel interest in Christ's great affection toward man and devotion to him according to our realization of the salvation which shall be brought unto us at the second advent. Here we are, outside, waiting for Him, and we are asking ourselves personally: How shall I receive Him? in what position? in what disposition? Let us decide to be looking for Him as our friend, our brother and our King.

Lord SHAFTESBURY, the Chairman, having been solicited to make a few remarks, spoke as follows:

My Dear Friends.—Mr. Skrine has requested me to say a few words, to express my sense of the value of this subject; and I do so with great reluctance because, although I have had it much upon my heart, yet I have never studied the matter for dogmatic or didactic purposes. If some of our ministers who are renting farms back east would come out here they might secure themselves a good farm of 160 acres—good rich soil.

Any one wishing information concerning our county can obtain it by addressing me with stamp Box 70.

From William Snider, Shamblings Mills, Wes Virginia

I thought I would send a word of encouragement to the brethren and sisters of like precious faith scattered over this unfriendly land. It has been a little more than two years since I saw, in a clear light, the blessed hope of the gospel—looking to the resurrection of the dead for our reward when Christ will come the second time. Oh! for such a faith as Abraham had when God made the promise to him that he should inherit the earth. This he can only do by a resurrection from the dead, although it is preached Sabbath after Sabbath, that Abraham and all the saints that have fallen asleep in the past are now in heaven praising God. If this be true then they are there without a resurrection, and this would not be in harmony with the Word.

We have many opposers in this country of what we as Adventists hold dear, and what we think the Bible teaches clearly, who teach that man has an immortal soul, but cannot prove it by the Bible. May God help us and them by a patient continuance in well doing, to seek for glory and honor and the great gift of immortality at the appearing and kingdom of our blessed Lord and Savior.

We have a church here at Round Knob, of twenty members. Brother Mowery is our pastor, and is faithful to his trust. He is doing much good in this country. Truth is gaining ground. Prejudice is giving way! Brother Whitney will be with us on next Sabbath if not hindered. He was the first one to preach this "new doctrine," as it is called, in this country. I thank God for the light of this "new doctrine" that Brother Whitney preaches. He is a faithful laborer in the vineyard of the Lord. May God send more such laborers.

I have been reading THE ADVENT CHRISTIAN TIMES for some time, and it has led me into many plain truths that ere I embraced the Advent faith were dark and incomprehensible to me. I have learned more from the Bible since my acceptance of the glorious Hebrew faith, as preached by Adventists, than I did in all my life before.

From Mary A. Tibbets, Volga, Ind.

We have just parted from our much esteemed brother, Eld G. W. Green, who has spent a few days with us in preaching the glad tidings of the soon coming kingdom of our blessed Lord and Savior. And what a "feast of fat things of wine on the lees well refined" we enjoyed under the pleasant and instructive labors of our brother who so ably gave us "the meat in due season." Believing the Bible as we do, to be a revelation of God's will to the human family, that its promises are to be believed and enjoyed, that its threatenings are to be feared and escaped by obedience to his divine commands, we were made to rejoice under the clear literal teaching of God's holy Word by our brother to the large and attentive audiences that convened from time to time to wait on his ministry. Oh! what beauty there is in the blessed Word when we are made to understand its messages of mercy to the fallen race of the first Adam. For instance, among so many precious truths uttered before us, we were presented to the Lamb of God that taketh away the sin of the world. The beloved disciple declared this to be his mission in the world, and the question came up, will he do it? If so, when and where and by what means effected. The arguments were grand and conclusive. In two ways will the "Lamb of God" effect the great and glorious fulfillment of this promise, by conversion and destruction. Every sinner that is truly converted to God lessens the sin of the world, and every rebellious sinner shall be destroyed out of the earth. Jesus suffered death that through the same he might "destroy" him that had the power of death, that is, the devil. "The Son of was manifested that he might destroy the works of the devil." And the last enemy that shall be destroyed is death." Thus when the three great enemies of God and human happiness are destroyed, we are to have a clear universe, the restitution of all things spoken of by the holy prophets since the world began.

How very different this teaching from that broadcast in the land, that sin and sinners will forever exist; that a particular locality is set apart in the universe of God where continues eternally a portion of his creatures in misery. If this teaching be true how could the whole earth be filled with the glory of the Lord? How could the song of the Revelator be fulfilled which says "and every creature which is in heaven and on the earth and under the earth, and such as are in the sea heard I saying, Blessing and honor and glory and power be unto him that sitteth upon the throne, and unto the Lamb forever and ever?"

Oh! how I do rejoice in the Lord that "the truth has made me free" from all false teaching and human creeds, and that I may take his blessed Word as it reads and thus believe the sin of the world will all be taken away by the Lamb of God.

The season being so late, and the farmers so much hindered by the wet weather from getting in their crops, it was thought best to close the meeting at an early period and renew it in September which will be a more favorable time for a protracted effort.

May the divine blessing attend the seed sown and secure success to the truths revealed in the Bible

The Pledge of Safety.

A ship had been wrecked off an Island in the South Seas. To the horror of the sailors, they found it was the same island where a ship's crew had been killed and eaten by the natives. Weary with the struggle in the storm, their clothes were drenched, they hid themselves as best they could with the stores, in the caves along the shore. When they could endure no longer they crept stealthily up the hill between them and the town. Every crackling limb and rustling leaf was a fearful telltale to their minds, and when they reached the summit the terrors of death came over them, and they dared not go on.

But one of their number, more hardy than the rest, kept on and at that very point where they expected his courage to fail, and that returning he would bring upon them the man-eaters, just then he rose from his knees, and swung his hat and shouted, "Safe, safe, all safe!"

He had not seen a band of soldiers from a Christian land, nor a troop of his own countrymen, nor even a single living soul; but he had seen a little church spire which rose from the village, and among their rude homes was pointing toward heaven.

The Christian missionary had been there, and God's work among the people was the pledge of safety to all the world, and so the words came true—"The beloved of the Lord shall dwell in safety by him."

A SPIRITUALISTIC burglar in Springfield, Mass., pleaded in defence, recently that "the spirit of a dark haired woman controlled his actions," and directed him where and when to break through and steal.

Our Young Folks.

When Grandma was a Little Girl!

When you were a little girl? It seems
  The very queerest thing
To think our grandma wore a bib,
  And drove the cat with a string!
Did you have a hat in summer time
  With a great broad brim like mine?
And didn't it hang at the back of your neck
  When you wanted to smell the shine?

How could you ever be "seen and not heard!"
  And didn't you romp or fuss?
And wasn't fun as funny then
  To you as it is to us?
What kind of a doll did you rock to sleep?
  An old-fashioned one, I know.
Did you have a house? O grandma! say,
  Did you ever stump your toe?

To think you were a little girl!
  It don't seem one bit true!
I'd rather keep on having fun,
  And playing the whole way through.
How big was Santa then, and did
  Your grandma trim the tree,
And say, "my baby" all the same,
  And you as old as me?

Dear! but I'm tired in my head
  With wondering all about
This grandma; why she didn't stay
  A girl, I can't find out.
I guess I know a place of rest,
  Now sing and pet my curls,
I wouldn't give my grandma up
  For a big round world of girls!

A Weed in the Sermon.

"Mother, how much tobacco does it take to make a sermon?"

"What do you mean, my son?"

"Why, I mean how much tobacco does father chew, and how many cigars does he smoke, while he is making a sermon?"

"Well, the tobacco and the smoke do not make the sermon, do they?"

"I don't know but they do—they help along, at any rate; for I heard father tell Mr. Morris, the minister who preached for him last Sunday, that he could never write a sermon without a cigar. So I thought may be the tobacco makes the sermon, or the best part of them."

"My son, I am shocked to hear you talk so!"

"Well, mother, I was only telling what father said; and what it made me think. He said a prime cigar was a great solace (whatever that is;) and he said, besides, it drove away the blues—put him in a happy frame of mind, and simmerated or stimulated his brain, so he could work better. I suppose stimulated means to make one think easier. Now, mother, I have been thinking I could study better if I had something to stimulate my brain; and the next time I have one of those knotty questions in arithmetic to work out, I will get a cigar, and see if it won't help me along. You know you often tell me if I follow my father's example I will not go astray; and now I would like a few cigars to make my brain work well, so I can stand at the head of my class."

"I hope I shall never see my son with a cigar in his mouth; it would be the first step to ruin."

"You don't think father is ruined, do you? He has taken a good many steps since he took the first cigar."

"I think, my son, your father would be better without cigars or tobacco in any shape; but he formed the habit when a young man."

"But father says we are to blame for forming bad habits, and it is a sin to continue in them. I heard him say that in the pulpit, not long ago. There is old Tom Jerkins, who gets tight every day. I suppose he would find it rather hard to break off drinking whisky. But father says it's no excuse for a man, when he gets drunk, to say he is in the habit of getting drunk. He says it only needs resolution and moral courage to break off bad habits."

"But, my son, smoking tobacco is not quite like drinking whisky and getting drunk."

"No, I know that mother; but I was going on to say that, if smoking was a bad habit, father would have given it up long ago. But I don't believe smoking is any harm; and it does some folks a great deal of good. You know how nervous and fidgety father gets when he has to go without any cigars; and, besides, he could not write his sermons without them. I am sure if he could write as well and do as much good without using tobacco, he would not spend so much money for it. When I want to buy a little candy, or a bit of spruce gum, father tells me I had better practice the grace of self-denial, and save my money for the missionary box. Besides he says such stuff is not good for me; it will spoil my teeth and ruin my health. Now I am quite certain that father would not spend money—more than I have ever spent in my whole life for candy, gum, clothes, and everything—if he did not believe tobacco was a real benefit to himself and others. Why, mother, do you know anything about the price of cigars in these times? Cousin Ned Wilkins, who smokes a great many, says 'you can't get a decent cigar for less than fifteen cents; and the best cost forty and fifty cents apiece!' And I heard Deacon Tomkins say his cigars cost him six hundred dollars a year; for he uses nothing but the very best, and they are all imported. He told father so the other day, when they were smoking together in the study after dinner, and I was trying to get my arithmetic lesson. Now, mother, do you think my father, and Deacon Tomkins, and a whole host of ministers, and elders, and temperance lecturers, and lots and lots of good Christian people would spend so much money to keep themselves in bad habits? Why, just the sum that Deacon Tompkins alone spends upon cigars would support a missionary in the West for a whole year, and would be a better salary than many Western ministers now get! Really mother, I cannot believe that using tobacco is wrong as long as so many good Christians do use it. I don't care so much about chewing—would rather have some nice, clean spruce gum, such as they have got down to Dickinson's store: but I would like to smoke as my father does; and please mother, give me a little money to get a few cigars."

"My son, you may talk to your father about this matter. Ask him if he thinks it would improve your habits and manners to learn to smoke; and if he approves, you may ask him for a cigar.—Advent Herald

The Soft Answer.

A little girl whom I knew well came to her aunt one day and inquired earnestly, "Aunt, is every word in the Bible true?" "Yes, my dear," her aunt replied; but why do you ask?" "Because," the child replied, "it says, 'A soft answer turneth away wrath'—Proverbs 15:1. Now Anne [her cousin] was angry with me to-day, and I gave her a soft answer, but it did not turn away her wrath. She continued to scold as angrily as before, and I was obliged to come away."

Now, if a companion is angry, and you give a soft answer in the hope of turning away wrath, and the wrath still continue, that is the fault of the other. You have done what you could. In most cases you will succeed. And even in cases where, on account of the hardness of an offender's heart, it does not melt even under the influence of a soft answer at the moment, the soft answer will return to the offender's memory when he is alone and you are far away. Perhaps he will melt under what you have said, although you do not see it.

And more still. Whether you gain your brother's love or not, the soft answer you give is a blessing to yourself. Remember the words of the Lord Jesus, "It is more blessed to give than to receive." You who gave the loving word have enjoyed all the blessedness of giving; and in this difficult world there is hardly anything that is easier to give, or more precious to the giver than the soft answer to turn away wrath. It costs nothing, and it gains much. The soft answer is the power that turns away wrath; although in some cases, the wrath is so hard and heavy that it takes more than one or two of the loving answers to turn it away.—Arnot.

If some of our ministers who are renting farms back east would come out here they might secure themselves a good farm of 160 acres—good rich soil.

Any one wishing information concerning our county can obtain it by addressing me with stamp. Box 70.

From William Snider, Shamblings Mills, West Virginia.

I thought I would send a word of encouragement to the brethren and sisters of like precious faith scattered over this unfriendly land. It has been a little more than two years since I saw, in a clear light, the blessed hope of the gospel—looking to the resurrection of the dead for our reward when Christ will come the second time. Oh! for such a faith as Abraham had when God made the promise to him that he should inherit the earth. This he can only do by a resurrection from the dead, although it is preached Sabbath after Sabbath, that Abraham and all the saints that have fallen asleep in the past are now in heaven praising God. If this be true then they are there without a resurrection, and this would not be in harmony with the Word.

We have many opposers in this country of what we as Adventists hold dear, and what we think the Bible teaches clearly, who teach that man has an immortal soul, but cannot prove it by the Bible. May God help us and them by a patient continuance in well doing, to seek for glory and honor and the great gift of immortality at the appearing and kingdom of our blessed Lord and Savior.

We have a church here at Round Knob, of twenty members. Brother Mowery is our pastor, and is faithful to his trust. He is doing much good in this country. Truth is gaining ground. Prejudice is giving way! Brother Whitney will be with us on next Sabbath if not hindered. He was the first one to preach this "new doctrine," as it is called, in this country. I thank God for the light of this "new doctrine" that Brother Whitney preaches. He is a faithful laborer in the vineyard of the Lord. May God send more such laborers.

I have been reading THE ADVENT CHRISTIAN TIMES for some time, and it has led me into many plain truths that ere I embraced the Advent faith were dark and incomprehensible to me. I have learned more from the Bible since my acceptance of the glorious Hebrew faith, as preached by Adventists, than I did in all my life before.

From Mary A. Tibbets, Volga, Ind.

We have just parted from our much esteemed brother, Eld G. W. Green, who has spent a few days with us in preaching the glad tidings of the soon coming kingdom of our blessed Lord and Savior. And what a "feast of fat things of wine on the lees well refined" we enjoyed under the pleasant and instructive labors of our brother who so ably gave us "the meat in due season." Believing the Bible as we do, to be a revelation of God's will to the human family, that its promises are to be believed and enjoyed, that its threatenings are to be feared and escaped by obedience to his divine commands, we were made to rejoice under the clear literal teaching of God's holy Word by our brother to the large and attentive audiences that convened from time to time to wait on his ministry. Oh! what beauty there is in the blessed Word when we are made to understand its messages of mercy to the fallen race of the first Adam. For instance, among so many precious truths uttered before us, we were presented to the Lamb of God that taketh away the sin of the world. The beloved disciple declared this to be his mission in the world, and the question came up, will he do it? If so, when and where and by what means effected. The arguments were grand and conclusive. In two ways will the "Lamb of God" effect the great and glorious fulfillment of this promise, by conversion and destruction. Every sinner that is truly converted to God lessens the sin of the world, and every rebellious sinner shall be destroyed out of the earth. Jesus suffered death that through the same he might "destroy" him that had the power of death, that is, the devil. "The Son of was manifested that he might destroy the works of the devil." And the last enemy that shall be destroyed is death." Thus when the three great enemies of God and human happiness are destroyed, we are to have a clear universe, the restitution of all things spoken of by the holy prophets since the world began.

How very different this teaching from that broadcast in the land, that sin and sinners will forever exist; that a particular locality is set apart in the universe of God where continues eternally a portion of his creatures in misery. If this teaching be true how could the whole earth be filled with the glory of the Lord? How could the song of the Revelator be fulfilled which says "and every creature which is in heaven and on the earth and under the earth, and such as are in the sea heard I saying, Blessing and honor and glory and power be unto him that sitteth upon the throne, and unto the Lamb forever and ever?"

Oh! how I do rejoice in the Lord that "the truth has made me free" from all false teaching and human creeds, and that I may take his blessed Word as it reads and thus believe the sin of the world will all be taken away by the Lamb of God.

The season being so late, and the farmers so much hindered by the wet weather from getting in their crops, it was thought best to close the meeting at an early period and renew it in September which will be a more favorable time for a protracted effort.

May the divine blessing attend the seed sown and secure success to the truths revealed in the Bible.

The Pledge of Safety.

A ship had been wrecked off an Island in the South Seas. To the horror of the sailors, they found it was the same island where a ship's crew had been killed and eaten by the natives. Weary with the struggle in the storm, their clothes were drenched, they hid themselves as best they could with the stores, in the caves along the shore. When they could endure no longer they crept stealthily up the hill between them and the town. Every crackling limb and rustling leaf was a fearful telltale to their minds, and when they reached the summit the terrors of death came over them, and they dared not go on.

But one of their number, more hardy than the rest, kept on and at that very point where they expected his courage to fail, and that returning he would bring upon them the man-eaters, just then he rose from his knees, and swung his hat and shouted, "Safe, safe, all safe!"

He had not seen a band of soldiers from a Christian land, nor a troop of his own countrymen, nor even a single living soul; but he had seen a little church spire which rose from the village, and among their rude homes was pointing toward heaven.

The Christian missionary had been there, and God's work among the people was the pledge of safety to all the world, and so the words came true—"The beloved of the Lord shall dwell in safety by him."

A SPIRITUALISTIC burglar in Springfield, Mass., pleaded in defence, recently that "the spirit of a dark haired woman controlled his actions," and directed him where and when to break through and steal.

Cheseburg, May 17, and every four weeks until further notice. JOB BROWN.

There will be a tent meeting in the grove near Newton, Vernon county, commencing June 17, and holding over the following Sunday.

Friends will come prepared to provide for themselves by bringing provisions and bedding. Those who cannot bring tents will find sleeping room in the big tent. And above all bring the spirit of the Master with you to work for his glory.

Elders Hough and, we hope, Sheldon, will be with us. JOB BROWN.

There will be a two day's meeting held at Sparta, Monroe county, commencing June 14, at 2 p. m. and continue over Sunday.

The brethren and sisters are invited to meet with us. Br. Bursell, of Minnesota, will be with us. P. W. HOUGH.

MINNESOTA.

The second Q. C. for the Winona District will be held at Canton, Fillmore county, at the Brick S. H., near Peter Brode's, commencing Friday eve., June 20.

We shall hope to see all the friends living in that vicinity at the meeting, as business of importance will be considered.

Ridgeway, Feb. 8 and 9, and once in four weeks.

Edgar Toms will meet us at the Darwin Station on the arrival of the train from the east. GEO. W. MILLER.

Monticello every Sunday, at 10½ a. m. and 7½ p. m., until further notice.

Lily Pond S. H., Otsego, Sunday, June 29, at 3 p. m., and once in two weeks till further notice. S. C. WELLCOME.

Tent meetings at Montivedio, Chippewa county. We expect to pitch the State tent at the above place so as to commence meetings on the evening of July 4, and continue as long as the interest demands. This is a new field, and we want the aid and the prayers of all who love the truth. GEO. W. MILLER.

IOWA.

There will be, the Lord willing, a meeting of days held with the church at Boylan's Grove, Butler county, Iowa, commencing June 20, and holding over the Sabbath. The quarterly conference may hold its third session at this time. Elds. J. Ridley, S. S. Wilcox, H. H. and M. J. Janes, and others will be present to preach the Word.

We would have a general representation of the brethren and friends at this meeting. Come up then, brethren from Clear Lake, Charles City, Floyd, Clarkville, Parkersburgh, New Hartford, and indeed, from all that section. Come to labor for God and perishing souls. Time is short—it behooves us to work while the day lasts.

In behalf of the church,
MARTHA J. JANES.

Warsaw, third Saturday in each month in the evening.

Chester, S. H. Sunday following, 11 a. m.

Corydon, 3 p. m. J. F. ADAIR.

The fourth Q. M. will be held (D.V.) with the church at Iron Hill, commencing July 11 and holding over the following Sunday. There will be business of ESPECIAL interest transacted at this meeting, and very important to every member; therefore let each church be represented.

Come, brethren and sisters, come and work for the salvation of perishing souls, and also deepen the work of grace in your own hearts. Do not look over this notice with idle interest. Come all that can; let us have a general rally.
W. R. CHANDLER, Sec'y.

Owatonna, Fitzsimmons' S. H., Sunday, June 15. MRS. H. M. DUBEY.

Preaching at the Cain S. H., Decatur Co., first Sunday in each month, at 11 a. m.

Duble S. H., 3 p. m., first Sunday in each month. J. F. ADAIR, Pastor.

WM. A. & M. L. DURAND.

The Advent Christian Conference of New York will meet with the church in Rochester, June 19, and hold over the 21. At this annual meeting we hope to see all our ministers present and a large delegation from the churches.

W. E. BROWN.
M. R. MILES.

The Lord willing, one of the series of Time Campmeetings, (as per arrangements at the recent Charlestown Council, and advertised in the "Watchman's Cry,") will be held at Fairport, in the same grove where we held our meeting last year, to commence Sunday, July 6, and continue over the following Sunday.

The evidences for the coming of the Lord Jesus Christ this present year (1873), will be thoroughly canvassed by Brn. Geo. W. Brown, C. C. Barker, S. W. Bishop, Caleb Thompson, J. F. Nickerson, Jones, Wendell, and others.

Come out once more to the woods, dear brethren and sisters, to our feast of tabernacles. We expect a general rally of "all those that love his appearing," and especially of those who believe and those who desire to hear or support the evidences of Jesus' coming this watch—'tis the morning watch!

Let everyone coming to the forest, come prepared for forest emergencies; bring umbrellas, overcoats, overshoes, bedding, and the like, all you need; don't expect to borrow in the woods. Those who desire will arrange to board themselves, but it is recommended to spread a common table thus avoiding confusion.

A large boarding tent will be put up and plain, substantial fare furnished at 50c. per day; transient boarders will be charged 25c. per meal; dinner on Sundays, 50c. Tents can be rented at the following prices per week, freight extra: 24x30, $18; 16x24, $8; 12x17, $4 50; 9x12, $3; 7 or 9x9, $2.50; 14x14, $4 50. Send orders promptly to Br. D. T. Cooper, 70 Mount Hope Avenue, Rochester, N. Y.

Fairport is 10 miles east of Rochester, on the N. Y. C. R. R., (direct), and the campground is 1½ miles north of the depot. Come early and stay through the meeting. Pray for good weather and a profitable time.

Wm. E. Brown, R. C. Brown, South Butler; J. E. Wells, D. T. Cooper, Rochester; A. C. Newell, Darien; C. Pennoyer, Lockport; Silas Hewett, Seneca Falls; E. A. Bowe, LeRoy; J. S. Schoonmaker, Syracuse.

"The Great River Euphrates."

J. F. WILLCOX.

"And the sixth angel poured out his vial upon the great river Euphrates; and the water thereof was dried up, that the way of the kings of the east might be prepared." (Rev. 16: 12.)

The late Dr. Thomas was the first, I believe, to express the opinion that the Turkish Empire was here symbolized by the River Euphrates: since when he has been pretty generally followed by writers among us, until the opinion has become pretty generally established. The question, however, seems to me to be an open one still; and I offer the following thoughts upon it, not as the calm conviction of mature investigation, but rather to provoke further inquiry by those more capable, and more favorably situated for pursuing such investigations than myself.

The great city of Babylon situated upon the river Euphrates in Asia is the symbol used by the Deity, to represent that woman bearing upon her forehead the title, "MYSTERY, BABYLON THE GREAT, THE MOTHER OF HARLOTS, AND ABOMINATIONS OF THE EARTH," which the angel explains to John "is that great city which reigneth over the kings of the earth." That this is ecclesiastical Rome I believe in common with the whole world, Rome herself excepted. Now are we not to look for the mystical Euphrates as bearing the same relation to mystical Babylon that the literal Euphrates did to the literal Babylon? This seems to me to be the most natural and rational course. We have here a series of objects, agents, and events, existing long since; whose history is recorded with the faithful pen of inspiration in the venerable Book of books, used by the same inspiring mind as symbols of other objects, agents, and events intimately connected with his chosen people. This group of symbols is intimately, yes inseparably joined. No one of them can be dropped or overlooked without destroying the symmetry and significance of the whole.

Here is first, Babylon, who held God's people in captivity. Next, the Euphrates river; which was at once the source of her wealth her glory and her defence, and lastly the Jews themselves who were kept from their inheritance and retained in a degrading bondage by the pride and power of Babylon. Associated with these agents and objects, we have a series of significant events used also by the angel symbolically.

First the captivity of Israel, then the drying up of the literal river Euphrates, by the armies; the appointed instrument of God; who turned the waters of the river into its old channel and marching into the city through the dry bed of the river brought about, thirdly, the downfall and destruction of Babylon; and lastly her destruction was speedily followed by the return of captive Israel to her own land, a general reformation among them, the rebuilding of the temple, etc.

Now to my mind it is utterly incongruous to wrest from this homogenous group of symbols, (receiving their fulfillment in their proper order, and successive relationship to each other,) a single one, and conceive its application to a power having but a remote and contigent connection with the remaining things symbolized. What relation has the Turkish Empire to Babylon the great? Does "the great city" draw from the waters (peoples) of the empire of the Sultan her sustenance, her power, her glory, and her defence? Surely the historic fact that the Turks were originally from beyond the Euphrates is of very slight weight compared with the position which the mystical river must sustain to "the great city."

The Russians also were originally from about the head waters of the Euphrates; may we not with equal propriety term that empire the "Euphratean power."

"But," says our author, "it is probable that by 'the kings of the east' are symbolized the Jews; and the Turk holds their land in possession and prevents their return, while by the 'drying up' of this power, the way for that return 'is prepared.'" I reply, first, it is not by any means a foregone conclusion that the Jews are symbolized by the "kings from the sun's-rising," and second, granting that fact, it is not true that the Sultan prevents their return; but on the contrary he invites them to do so, and offers them every encouragement in his power short of abdicating his rule in their favor. But lastly, even granting that he stands in the way of their return, is not the power behind the throne responsible, rather than the weak tool sitting on it? In other words, is not France (principally) more responsible in that matter than the Sultan?

But are the Jews the symbolic "kings from the rising-sun?" I think not. Why should they be termed "kings?" Surely they are not the future sovereigns of the earth. A different sort of people entirely will share with the "King of the East," the glory of universal rule. Let us take these historic symbols, and looking upon Rome as Mystic Babylon, glance at the succession of events required by this homogenous group of symbols. We have already said that the Euphrates was the source of the wealth and strength of Babylon. Now where shall we look for a power or people, sustaining a like relationship to Rome? Surely we need not search long. The name of France spontaneously springs to our lips. Is not this then the "Euphratean power?" Viewing the events of the past few months in this light, how startling their significance. When Cyrus turned the river into her old channel Babylon fell. As long as Babylon sat upon the waters of the Euphrates she was secure in her impregnable walls, and the Medes and Persians battered in vain at her gates of brass. And in their fancied security they spent their time in feasting and drunkenness. But when "the waters thereof were dried up" she immediately fell an easy prey.

And when the symbolic Cyrus, (William,) poured out his vial upon the great river Euphrates, the waters thereof were dried up, and immediately Mystic Babylon falls an easy prey to her enemies. And, like her symbol, she was eating and drinking and blaspheming, saying in her heart, "I sit a queen and am no widow, and shall see no sorrow." "Therefore shall her plagues come in one day, death and mourning and famine; and she shall be utterly burned with fire; for strong is the Lord God who judgeth her."

How close upon the heels of the decree of infallibility was the great river Euphrates dried up, an then immediately, as a necessary sequence, Babylon fell and her judgment began.

And how effectually have the waters been dried up. Poor France! War, famine, and pestilence have dried up her waters till she has dwindled to a mere rivulet; and that is turned into its old channel again; leaving proud Babylon away inland; an unpitied prey to the judgments of God.

Again, close upon the heels of the fall of literal Babylon came the edict of Cyrus for the restoration of Israel. History says three years, or in the first year of the sole reign of Cyrus; after the death of his uncle.

Now who are "the kings of the east" answering to the returning Jews under Cyrus? I answer by asking, who are held in captivity by Mystic Babylon? "And there was given unto him a mouth speaking great things and blasphemies; and power was given him to continue forty and two months, ... and it was given him to make war with the saints, and to overcome them. "He that leadeth into captivity shall go into captivity. And they shall be given into his hand for a time," etc. Babylon the Great has taken captive and bound with chains more than a hundred millions of God's faithful ones, and they still lie in her dungeons waiting for the decree that shall set them at liberty.

These are the "kings from the sun's-rising," the future glorious monarchs whose primal kingdom shall be established in the land of the rising sun.

As long as proud Babylon reigns, there comes forth from the caverns with which she has honey-combed her imperial seat, the cry, "How long, O Lord, holy and true, dost thou not judge and avenge our blood on them that dwell on the earth." But when the water of the great river is dried up, the time of her fall has come, and "the way of the kings from the sun's-rising is prepared."

Brethren: The next event is the gathering of the nations to the great war of God Almighty; i. e., the opening of the "Eastern question." Gog must come with many ships. He had no navy before; now every nerve of the vast empire is strained to create one in the shortest possible time. We may look for those evil influences called the "three unclean spirits like frogs" to begin their work soon, and the gathering of the nations to follow in quick succession.

"Behold, I come as a thief! Blessed is he that watcheth and keepeth his garments, lest he walk naked, and they see his shame."

P. S.—The above appeared in the Restitution, March 30, 1871, more than two years since. Subsequent events having amply justified the positions here taken, I desire to call the attention of the readers of the TIMES to these thoughts, and to the thrilling position which we occupy to-day if they are true. "Babylon the great" having fallen, and her adulterous union with the civil arm being dissolved, she no longer appears on the prophetic page as "the woman," the "scarlet colored beast," that "was, is not, and yet is," (see Rev. ch. 17), the eighth head of the Roman Beast which is yet "of the seven," or France under the Napoleon has carried her into "perdition." "The beast that was," in the 1st Napoleon, "is not," when he fell; "ascended out of the bottomless pit" of the French revolution and re apppeared in the 3d Napoleon, carried the adulterous woman till he went into the "perdition" of the Franco-Prussian war. She went into "perdition" with him, and neither will ever re appear again in their former characters. She re-appears as "the false prophet." (Rev. 16: 13.) The "dragon" re-appears as the Gog of Ezekiel, 38th and 39th chapters, or Russia, the "beast" as the "Holy Roman Empire" or reconstructed and unitized Germany. From these three powers go forth the evil influences or diplomatic agencies and intrigues which will eventuate in gathering all nations to battle. These secret intrigues are called "three unclean things, like frogs."

Now, it is very manifest that these are already at work. Rome is ransacking heaven and earth for means to regain her fallen power. Her secret agents are in every land. She has sent them forth "to the kings of the (Roman) earth and the whole world," to unite her friends everywhere for a grand, simultaneous effort on her behalf. The "false prophet" longs again for the adulterous union with the civil power, and, though he will not accomplish it, yet his efforts to do so will be one of the three disturbing causes which will fill all Europe and the world with war. If, as seems at the present writing very probable, Pius IX is dead, it may be the signal for the elevation of the bloody standard and the struggle to begin. If the Cardinals elect, in secret conclave, a successor who does not please Russia and Austria his repudiation by those powers is certain, and the division of the great city into three parts inevitable. Again, Prussia is struggling for a united Germany. To show how she is intriguing for that end, a circumstance occurring lately in Switzerland is significant. A stranger, stepping from the car at a depot, fell dead by a stroke of apoplexy. His effects being examined it was discovered that he was an eminent engineer of the Prussian army, and had on his person draughts of all the Swiss fortresses and a memorandum of their military strength. German unity means the downfall of the Swiss Republic.

Russia, or the "Dragon," is likewise scheming for Sclavonic unity, and for Constantinople, and all the east. But German and Sclavonic unity means the overthrow of Turkey and the dismemberment of Austria. Six millions of German-speaking Austrians are necessary to complete the German Empire, and 16,000,000 of Sclavonians, now acknowledging the supremacy of the House of Hapsburgh must transfer their allegiance to the Czar before he can become what he has often threatened—the Emperor of all the Sclaves. But all Europe else must resist these ambitious schemes, hence the gathering together for the great battle. It is undeniable that the work of gathering has begun. The words of Christ to us at this critical moment are: "Behold, I come as a thief." We are not to wait for His coming until the gathering takes place; take heed. He may come for his chosen ones any moment after the evil spirits begin their work. The gathering for the struggle follows. The way for the kings of the east, or the resurrection of the dead, was prepared when the great river Euphrates was dried up and Babylon fell. This took place September 20th, 1870. Three years elapsed from the overthrow of Babylon by Cyrus, to his edict for the restoration of the Jews. That restoration was a type of the resurrection of the saints, or the return of "the kings of the east." Now, if the history is correct and the time is also a type, then we may look for the coming of the Master within three years from September 20, 1870, or September 20, 1873.

No Job.

VIRGIL HUNT.

Permit me to say a few words through THE TIMES in regard to the above heading. I have heard it disputed that Job was an inspired man, but never till recently have heard the existence of Job disputed. The view taken is that no man could withstand a personal devil as Job is said to have done. But we fail to see what good a lesson would do if it is impossible to follow its teachings. Again, I can find no stronger evidence of a personal Daniel, Isaiah, or David than of Job. The book opens by saying, "There was a man in the land of Uz whose name was Job: and that man was perfect and upright, and one that feared God and eschewed evil. And there were born unto him seven sons and three daughters."

Rather strange language to apply to a non-existence, is it not? But listen, "Oh, that my words were now written, Oh. that they were printed in a book; that they were graven with an iron pen, and led into the rock forever. For I know that my Redeemer liveth, and that he shall stand in the last day upon the earth; and though after my skin worms destroy this body, yet in my flesh shall I see God; whom I shall see for myself, and my eyes shall behold and not anotner." (Job 19.)

Most emphatically I believe there did a literal, personal Job live and die, who will arise to an endless life in the morning of the resurrection.

Evil Fruits.

Mr. Talmage, of Brooklyn, not long ago, at a fair, married several couples who were dressed in the costumes of the olden times. The marriages were bona fide, but much exception has been taken to the affair. We have had our surfeit of Talmage long since, but we still hoped that he might do good to somebody or in some direction. However, when a man sets up for a marvel, and counts chiefly on the sensational and the eccentric for success, there is no telling whither he will drift. That theatrical exhibition of a marriage ceremony was certainly making light of holy things, and highly irreverent, if not sacriligious, but not a whit more so than some of the sermons which Mr. Talmage preaches and publishes. We agree with the Central Christian Advocate, in the following paragraph which we find in its columns:

Rev. Dr. Talmage's religious buffoonery has already begun to bear unwholesome fruit. In different parts of the country concerts, fairs, and exhibitions in the costumes of two or three centuries ago are the sensation; advertised in the uncouth spelling of the period, and the names of the performers in the fictitious, grotesquely Biblical style of the old Puritanic times. When a man of some genius or reputation makes a clown of himself, especially if his antics have a religious turn, there is no end to his imitators. So this divine, who has many admirers, becomes responsible for a great deal of harm through the ill example which in an excess of zeal he has given to the church. For it will do less harm to go to the theatre and masquerade openly than to make our houses dedicated to the worship of God a means to satisfy the unquiet thirst for theatrical display which seems to consume some partially religious people. —N. O. Christian Advocate.

A SPIRITUAL life consists in Christ everywhere active in the soul, as the blood is in the body.

"BOY, what will you take to tell a lie for me?" asked a mate of one of the little cabin-boys on board of a fine English ship. "Not all the gold of California, sir," was the prompt answer of the little lad.

For I know that my Redeemer liveth, and that he shall stand in the last day upon the earth; and though after my skin worms destroy this body, yet in my flesh shall I see God; whom I shall see for myself, and my eyes shall behold and not anotner." (Job 19.)

Most emphatically I believe there did a literal, personal Job live and die, who will arise to an endless life in the morning of the resurrection.

Evil Fruits.

Mr. Talmage, of Brooklyn, not long ago, at a fair, married several couples who were dressed in the costumes of the olden times. The marriages were bona fide, but much exception has been taken to the affair. We have had our surfeit of Talmage long since, but we still hoped that he might do good to somebody or in some direction. However, when a man sets up for a marvel, and counts chiefly on the sensational and the eccentric for success, there is no telling whither he will drift. That theatrical exhibition of a marriage ceremony was certainly making light of holy things, and highly irreverent, if not sacriligious, but not a whit more so than some of the sermons which Mr. Talmage preaches and publishes. We agree with the Central Christian Advocate, in the following paragraph which we find in its columns:

Rev. Dr. Talmage's religious buffoonery has already begun to bear unwholesome fruit. In different parts of the country concerts, fairs, and exhibitions in the costumes of two or three centuries ago are the sen[illegible]tion; advertised in the uncouth spelling of the period, and the names of the performers in the fictitious, grotesquely Biblical style of the old Puritanic times. When a man of some genius or reputation makes a clown of himself, especially if his antics have a religious turn, there is no end to his imitators. So this divine, who has many admirers, becomes responsible for a great deal of harm through the ill example which in an excess of zeal he has given to the church. For it will do less harm to go to the theatre and masquerade openly than to make our houses dedicated to the worship of God a means to satisfy the unquiet thirst for theatrical display which seems to consume some partially religious people. —N. O. Christian Advocate.

A SPIRITUAL life consists in Christ everywhere active in the soul, as the blood is in the body.

"BOY, what will you take to tell a lie for me?" asked a mate of one of the little cabin-boys on board of a fine English ship. "Not all the gold of California, sir," was the prompt answer of the little lad.

Speak Not to Him a Bitter Word.

Wouldst thou a wanderer reclaim,
A wild and restless spirit tame—
Check the warm flow of youthful blood,
And lead a lost one back to God?
Pause, if thy spirit's wrath be stirred,
Speak not to him a bitter word,
Speak not, that bitter word may be
The stamp that seals his destiny!

If widely he has gone astray,
And dark excess has marked his way,
'Tis pitiful, but yet beware!
Reform must come from kindly care.
Forbid thy parting lips to move
But in the gentle tones of love.
Though sadly his young heart hath erred,
Speak not to him a bitter word.

The lowering frown he will not bear;
The venomed chiding will not hear;
The ardent spirit will not brook
The stinging tooth of sharp rebuke.
Thou wouldst not goad the restless steed
To calm his fire or check his speed;
Then let no angry tones be heard,
Speak not to him a bitter word.

Go kindly to him, make him feel
Your heart yearns deeply for his weal;
Tell him the perils of the way
Wherein his devious footsteps stray,
So shalt thou win him, call him back
From pleasure's smooth, seductive track;
And warnings thou hast mildly given,
May guide the wanderer to heaven!"

No radiant pearl which crested fortune wears:
No gem that sparkling hangs from beauty's ears;
Not the bright stars that night's blue arch adorn,
Nor rising sun that gilds the vernal morn,
Shines with such lustre as the tear which breaks,
For others' woes down Virtue's lovely cheeks!

Definite Time.

BY J. D. CAREY.

Blessed is he that waiteth and cometh to the thousand three hundred and five and thirty days. (Dan. 12:12.)

I know I shall be censured for what I am about to write, but I have learned that, when I have a duty to perform, not to stop to consider what people may think or say about it. Two things are uppermost in my mind:

First, To know the will of God.

Second, To do it.

I am now "working out my own salvation with fear and trembling," and as I am accountable to God alone, I fear not the judgment men may put upon me. So in this instance believing it to be my duty to write this article, I proceed at once to the task without any concern as to what some may say of it.

Until within a short time past I have been opposed to definite time, but am now well satisfied that the measurements given in the 11th and 12th verses of the last chapter in the Book of Daniel point to the year which will close up the long reign of sin and the present dispensation, and so believing, I can but make it known. But what day or what hour in that year is certainly not yet revealed to us, but I believe even the day will be made known seven days before the Son of man appears in the clouds of heaven.

There are two prophetic measurements given to Daniel by the angel in reply to his interrogatory "When shall the end of these things be?" Both these chains undoubtedly begin at the same point of time, or same event, namely, the setting up of the abomination that maketh desolate; but the last chain is 45 years longer than the first one. Now, we must either find the beginning or the end of one of these chains, or else lose the benefit of the announcement. If these measurements do not disclose the end, I cannot see of what use they are. As to the beginning of these chains, there is considerable difference of opinion, yet I hold there is a key that unlocks and gives us the benefit of the announcement, and my object solely in writing this article is to aid, if possible, in our coming to a thorough understanding of this very important declaration.

I believe the first chain is the key to the second, and was given for that purpose alone, and it does not, and cannot, cut any other figure in the case. Let us examine them:

From the setting up of the abomination that maketh desolate shall be 1290 days (prophetic years), so the first chain is 1290 years long. It begins at a certain event named, and if we can find where it ends, we can tell where it commenced; but if we could find when the event occurred from which it takes its start, there would be no use for the chain at all, as that is the point we want to start with the last chain of 1335 years, which reaches to the year of deliverance for all who are found written in the Book.

From the setting up of the abomination that maketh desolate there shall be 1290 years. But when was that event set up? Aside from any other facts I am sure I do not know, and I do not know that any one else does. Some think it was in 538, others in 540, and one writer not long since endeavored to prove it was as late as 553. Here is a difference of fifteen years. If we cannot arrive any nearer the time than fifteen years, we might just as well not have the measurement; yea, if we cannot ascertain the precise year the measurement of 1335 years fails of its purpose. As I said before, I believe the key is found in the first chain, and as both the beginning and end of it are in the past, it may be possible to find its end if not its beginning. If we find its end we run back on it 1290 years, which takes us to its beginning, also to the beginning of the last chain, and then run forward on that its entire length of 1335 years, when we find the year in which those who live to see it are to be blessed. There shall be 1290, but blessed is he that waiteth and cometh to the 1335 years, or, in other words, blessed is he that waiteth and cometh to 45 years more. So there is to be a waiting time of 45 years. Now, if we can ascertain when such a time commenced, we have, I think, the key to the whole.

If we are not in a waiting time—a tarrying state now, will the time ever come when we will be? I think it is conceded by all that we are in a tarrying state. If so, when did such a time begin? It certainly began at the first announcement of the soon coming of Christ. So far as my information extends, Wolfe, in England, was the first to proclaim the fact in 1828. If this is correct, then was the commencement of the waiting time, for the church has been truly waiting ever since its first announcement, and taking 1828 years as the beginning of this proclamation, we start there and run back the length of the first chain of 1290 years which reaches to 538 when the abomination which maketh desolate was set up if this theory is correct and then from this point we run forward on the last chain over its entire length of 1335 years, and see where it reaches to. 1335 years added to 538 makes 1873, the year in which I believe that Christ will come. I believe it all hinges upon the beginning of our present waiting time.

Brethren, let us be diligent, for the long reign of sin is about to close. We have but a very brief period of time left for work, and there is much to do. What if people will not believe us, and scoff, as the Bible tells us they will in the last days before the coming of the Son of man. We are not to be disconcerted by this, but continue to faithfully warn men of impending judgment. We must be found giving meat in due season if we would be blessed when the day arrives.

Death.

M. D. PEAVY.

There in the bloom of womanhood lies a victim of the King of terrors. Already his icy grasp is upon her, the death sweat is settled on her brow: the physician has pronounced the dread sentence 'Death.' But yesterday she rejoiced as you rejoice, she loved as you love, she hoped as you hope. To day she is summoned by the stern king. He must be obeyed, in a few short hours she must go to his abode. Oh! let us watch with her until he comes. There are friends here, her friends; let us pay the last tribute of affection to our dying sister. Let us bathe her aching brow, she is soon to leave us, and yet she is forced to go. Oh! how gladly would she remain, but she cannot, the unchangeable grasp of the tyrant is fixed upon her: she is young and comely, in the very bloom of womanhood. Yet this is no weapon against the merciless conqueror, her strong system is rapidly giving way to the last enemy of her race; she is mild and pleasant, throwing a heavenly radiance around her pathway. Yet the indelible stamp of death is fixed in every expression, she is meek and gentle but the icy dart has already pierced her vitals, she is kind and merciful, yet the tyrant will soon shout victory over her inanimate form; she is loving and forbearing causing a halo of glory to emanate from her circle in life, yet in his march to certain victory death has claimed her as his own; she is raised above want, though wealth is no bulwark against this ruthless invader. Only a few short moments remain, then all is over. But alas! the agony of that little while. See, she fails rapidly, her face becomes more palid, her eyes have lost their lustre, already they are set in death; hear that whisper coming from her attendants, "she is dying." Lo! now in the midnight darkness comes the low rumbling of a wagon bearing a loved sister to the chamber of death. But all too late to receive recognition from the girl. Behold as she stands by the bedside earnestly seeking a sign of recognition, and almost wildly calls her name, Mary, Mary, and receives only a vain attempt at a reply. Do you think while her tears fall thick and fast she beholds but a messenger of peace in the stearn decree. Ask that fair maiden who has enjoyed her society for many long years and has patiently watched by her dying pillow for many weary hours, if she sees a friend drawing her companion of infancy, youth and maturity, to his loving embrace. Ask that woman bending over her staff, who has watched by her bed-side all of the weary night and has paid the last tie of affection by administering to her every want, if she sees a friend in death. Tears, tears from their heart's anguish is your only answer, more emphatic in their import than can be expressed in words. Ever and anon a strong man approaches the bedside, intently gazes upon the face of the sufferer, then turns away with a long breath followed by a sigh, at once showing his abhorence of the unwelcome guest. But the last moment has arrived; a deep groan escapes the lips of the dying woman, followed by a gasping for breath, then a convulsion passes through the whole system, another groan, another convulsion, then a moment of breathless suspense, closely followed by another groan. Oh God! would that I could paint that groan upon the heart and indelibly stamp the expression of that dying face upon the mind of every one who views death as a friend which but opens the gate to endless joy. Another convulsion and a few slight tremors, then all is over. Death the tyrant reigns again victorious. We need not ask that father who could not see his daughter die if he recognizes the invitation of a friend in this merciless summons. We need not ask that fond mother whose heart is wrung with anguish almost verging on despair, if death is a friend. We will not ask that sister who is almost frantic with grief if she beholds a welcome visitor. No no, God forbid that we should torment them with such mockery. Death is an enemy, heaven's curse is set upon it, his course is nearly run, he has reigned victorious for long ages, Jesus alone shouts the victory over him, he alone cries Oh death, where is thy sting, Oh grave, where is thy victory? He will soon trample him beneath his feet. "For the last enemy that shall be destroyed is death." And Jesus holds the keys of death, he will open the house of the prisoners (the grave) and they shall come forth, all the just to everlasting life. Then shall they shine in the kingdom of the Father; then shall they be immortalized; then this corruptible shall put on incorruption, then and not till then will death be swallowed up in victory. Then there shall be no more death forever. Jesus says, behold I come quickly. Oh! how we will rejoice, for then we shall stand on the fair shore of deliverance, we shall walk the verdant evergreen fields, we shall drink of the water of life, we shall bathe in the glory of God. Then Mary, dear Mary, will walk in newness of life. Mary from the dead. Mary who has just paid the debt of mortality, will then shine in the vigor of youth. Then she will clasp glad hands with a faithful father, she will fly to the loving embrace of a godly mother, then she will join the accents of faithful brothers and sisters in hallelujahs to God. Oh! what a blessed reunion. Angels will rejoice, seraphim and cherubim will swell the chorus, and the victors will be Mary (and all the faithful). Mary real and tangible, not her phantom or shadow, but literal and genuine Mary herself. But if there is no resurrection of the dead, then all that are fallen asleep in Christ are perished; but Jesus lives no more to die and because he lives we shall live also. He said, if I go away I will come again and receive you unto myself. Oh! blessed promise, lift up your heads and rejoice for your redemption draweth nigh. He who is to come will come and will not tarry.

The Resurrection Scouted.

L. C. KERR.

"And when they heard of the resurrection of the dead some mocked; and others said we will hear thee again of this matter." (Acts 17: 32.)

Here we have a picture drawn characteristic of our day, a very prominent ingredient which amounts to no less than a denial of the faith, and to confirm this we will have resource to the Scriptures, only bearing in mind that a preconceived opinion must make room and give place to a "Thus saith the Lord," and when we shall have arrived at such legitimate conclusions we are then free in our thinking and will be able to reason logically.

I wish to pause a little first while we view Paul's hearers and see in what way they differed mainly from him, and then we shall have a better idea of the facts to be brought before the mind.

1. Paul seems like a setter forth of strange doctrine. Why? Because he preached Jesus and the resurrection.

Paul's great theme is the resurrection as shown in his speech before king Agrippa, and is seen to form the basis of his hope for he says: "And now I stand and am judged for the hope of the promise made of God unto our fathers: unto which promise our twelve tribes, instantly serving God day and night hope to come. For which hope's sake, king Agrippa, I am accused of the Jews. Why should it be thought a thing incredible with you, that God should raise the dead." (Acts 26: 6–8.

The resurrection is looked upon as unessential to salvation, but the mythological view of hades, where the departed souls went, constituted the all important requisite. And consequently the resurrection as taught by Paul was to them an argumentum ad ignorantium, and hence they mocked: but there were some who, as in these days, believed it and said, "We will hear thee again of this matter."

Now we will look at the resurrection candidly and see if it does as much as is said for, and in doing so we will see what the gospel is and then whether men are saved out side of it or not—that is if they do not keep it in memory.

"Moreover, brethren, I declare unto you the gospel which I preached unto you, which also ye have received, and wherein ye stand; by which also ye are saved, if ye keep in memory what I preached unto you, unless ye have believed in vain. For I delivered unto you first of all that which I also received, how that Christ died for our sins according to the Scriptures, and that he was buried, and that he rose again the third day according to the Scriptures." (1 Cor. 15: 1–4.

The gospel here is the resurrecti and to believe anything else for gospel is to believe in vain, and this I will endeavor to show.

"Now if Christ be preached that he rose from the dead, how say some among you that there is no resurrection of the dead? But if there be no resurrection of the dead, then is Christ not risen. And according to the theology of the day, Christ never rose from the dead, and what is the consequence if that be the case? Let Paul answer, "And if Christ be not risen then is our preaching vain, and your faith is also vain. They also which are fallen asleep in Christ are perished." (vv. 14: 18.) The most prevalent doctrine now is that there is no resurrection from the body at death. But mark closely the apostle's language and you will see that if the dead rise not Christ is not risen, and if Christ is not risen all that have fallen asleep in Christ are perished, i. e. will never see life again, from which positive reasoning there is no chance whatever for an immortal soul to exist, for supposing that a man has such an entity and that is the conscious, intellectual and real man which survives the death of the body. Can any one fail to see that Paul was entirely wrong about men perishing who fell asleep in Christ? These two theories clash fairly, one is Paul's teaching, and the other Plato's. Which shall we believe? Paul was an apostle of Jesus Christ." Plato was a heathen philosopher.

"But now is Christ risen from the dead, and become the first fruits of them that slept. For since by man came death, by man came also the resurrection of the dead." (vv. 20: 21.) To ignore this plain teaching of God, to suit a creed, and hold the truth in a mist, is presumption, and we have the words of the apostle telling us that the time will come when they (men) will not endure sound doctrine, but will heap to themselves teachers having itching ears, and shall turn away from the truth and shall be turned unto fables. And does this not fill the picture? "If after the manner of men I have fought with beasts at Ephesus, what advantageth it me if the dead rise not? Let us eat and drink for to-morrow we die." (v. 32. If a man has an immortal soul, Paul, you are advantaged a great deal; notwithstanding though your body should die that does not amount to anything, it is the immortal man, or Paul that lives and goes to the spheres and what is the use of talking about the old body (the house) in which you live, that is not you any more than a man's habitation is himself; but Paul I think you are understood to say that "if the dead rise not the man rises not and consequently has perished, for I heard you say "if the dead rise not that you would be a false witness of God because you testified of God that he raised up Christ; whom he raised not up if so be that the dead rise not." (v. 15.)

Now one of two things we must do, reject Paul with his resurrection entirely, or, on the other hand reject the immortal soul error, and receive Paul. It is plainly shown they will not agree, we cannot make them harmonize, cannot serve two masters.

To rid ourselves of the dangerous doctrine of the resurrection as Adventism is called, is to give up the gospel and that annihilates salvation, and there is no life beyond this, as unbelievers tell us; instead then of being infidels, as some of our sectarian friends have felt disposed to call us, it is they who say, "there is no resurrection of the dead," the soul goes unto glory at death,—knowing more a hundred times than ever it did before, or, as one writer represents it, "The first time that ever the man ventured away from home to see the world." If such nonsense as this is not infidelity, there is no such thing. What is infidelity? Probably by answering this question it will be seen plainer which party carries that aspect. 'Infidelity,' (infidelitas) comes from two Latin words in not, and fides, faith; and is, according to Webster, "A want of faith or belief; a witholding of confidence; breach of trust; unfaithfulness to a charge. Now a want of faith is infidelity, and the reader will see a complete sample of it in the fore going argument against the resurrection.

While the faithful brethren are preaching the resurrection in connection with the second advent of Jesus Christ, the masses are mocking and scoffing at it, as they did in the days of Paul, and we cannot wonder that it is not believed by every body, just for the simple reason that it is truth, if it were something fabulous, people would stand ready to endorse it, and it would receive numberless advocates; for "Men love darkness rather than light because their deeds are evil." But nevertheless a few are saying, "We will hear you again."

An Examination of the Law and Sabbath.

BY C. M. KEACH.

[First Article.]

"Think not that I am come to destroy the law or the prophets: I am not come to destroy, but to fulfill." (Matt 5:17.)

Such is the language of [illegible]viour in his sermon on the Mo[illegible] and we will do well to examine the [illegible]atter and ascertain, if possible, what [illegible] language is intended to teach. Without pausing to discuss the origin of the law we will pass on to examine its claims as a rule of righteousness. That the law "was ordained unto life" was the apostolic creed, and hence we conclude that its righteousness is essential unto eternal life; but this righteouness we are prepared to show cannot be obtained by personal obedience on the part of man; neither is it essential that we should obey the law in the letter ourselves in order to attain unto its righteousness. We will proceed in our examination by (1), considering our deliverance from the law; and (2), the means by which we are to attain unto its righteousness without obedience unto its works ourselves.

1st. Our deliverance from the law.

This was effected by the death of Christ. The whole human race was in Adam at the time of his transgression, and hence as really sinned in him as "Levi paid tithes in Abraham." (Heb. 7:9.) And had Adam died in the day in which he sinned, as threatened, the whole human race would have been blotted out with him, but God in his gracious mercy entered Eden the same day that Adam fell, and promised Christ, who was to "bruise the serpent's head," by means of his death. His death was guaranteed in the stead of man's, to meet the demands of the violated law; and, hence, in the estimation or purpose of God, Christ died that day, and thus he is called "the Lamb slain from the foundation of the world." (Rev. 13:8.) When Christ's death was guaranteed in the stead of man, it was the same in the eye of the law as though man had actually died. This idea is unmistakably confirmed in the teachings of Paul. He says to the Corinthians: "If one died for all, then all were dead, and he [Christ] died for all." (2 Cor. 5:14, 15.) He also testifies to the Romans (ch. 6:10, 11), "as he [Christ] died unto sin once. "Likewise reckon ye yourselves also to be dead indeed to sin." Now, for Paul's application. In the first three verses of Rom. 7, he shows conclusively that the law ceases its dominion at death; and in the fourth verse he adds: "Ye also are become dead to the law by the body of Christ," and in the sixth verse he states the inevitable conclusion thus: "But now we are delivered from the law, being dead to that wherein we were held, that we should serve in the newness of the spirit, and not in the oldness of the letter." We now pass on to proposition 2. The means by which we are to attain unto the law without rendering obedience unto the works ourselves.

Our deliverance from the law secured for us a new term of probation, but this time we are not required to render personal obedience to the law ourselves, which would be impossible in consequence of our insufficiency; but the righteousness of the law is now attained by faith in Christ, instead of the works of the law. That is, Christ fulfilled the law in our stead, and by means of faith, made perfect by obedience to the law of faith, we have His obedience to the law imputed to us; thus establishing the law as the rule of righteousness. We are now prepared to understand the language of our Saviour, quoted at the head of this article: "Think not that I am to come to destroy the law; I am not come to destroy, but to fulfill." He had not come to destroy or to make void the law as the law of life, but to magnify, honor and establish it as such by fulfilling it in the stead of man. Dear reader, do you desire eternal life in the kingdom of God? If so, remember that the law was ordained unto life, and you must attain unto its righteousness or it will debar you from that priceless gift. But, pray, do not attempt to attain unto its righteousness by you own obedience, if you do you will fail; for you cannot "endure that which was commanded." (Heb. 12:19, 20.) Another plan has been arranged in the Divine economy. Paul states it thus: "To him that worketh not [that is in the law], but believeth on Him that justifieth the ungodly, his faith is counted for obedience." Thus, by faith in Christ, Paul could serve the law of God with his mind, while he did not with his flesh. (Rom. 7:25.) This new kind of service is defined "to serve in the newness of the spirit, or mind, and not in the oldness of the letter." (Rom. 7:6.) The service in the newness of the spirit is faith in Christ, and is defined as "the ministration of the spirit." The service in the oldness of the letter is the works of the law, "written and engraven on tables of stone," and constitute the ministration of death." (2 Cor. 3.) Paul contrasts the two ministrations in Galatians 3:5, thus: "He that ministereth unto you the spirit, doeth he it by the works of the law or by the hearing of faith?" This new kind of service is known as "the righteousness of faith." (Rom. 4:13); the righteousness of faith. (Rom. 16:26.) "The righteousness of God without the law." (Rom. 3:21), etc.

The Blood Cleanseth.

Nothing more clearly marks the advance of the believer in the Divine life than the new and deeper meanings of the Divine Word, that open upon the heart from time to time. The same text that has taught us a hundred lessons, each time fully up to our capacity of receiving them, is again and again illuminated with new radiance for the deeds of our souls. While the framework of the letters in the passage remains the same, it is freshly clothed with life and power of the needy soul. This perpetually increasing radiance of the Infinite and Divine mind to the finite and human.

"The salvation of God" meant far more to the children of Israel within the promised land, than it did at the Red Sea or during the wilderness pilgrimage. They were "saved" when Pharaoh's host was engulfed in destruction, but they needed to be "saved" in a new and deeper sense, as the weariness and temptations of the wilderness developed more and more their failures and their need. * * * The promise to God's people was, that in all the toils and temptations of actual life "He shall save his people from their sins." Nothing short of this being saved from sinning will accomplish either God's promise to His literal Israel, dispensationally, or the privileges of those who by faith can spiritually antedate the promises made to the descendants of Abraham. Many a heart, burdened with the guilt of its sins, has found sweet release in the words, "The blood of Jesus Christ cleanseth from all sin." All the soul's present realized need, that of deliverance from the load of unforgiven sin, is at first met by this sentence. But when the first tide of joyous emotion subsides, the soul finds that although the burden of committed sin is gone, that of inward corruption remains. It is then that it groans, sometimes even under deeper feeling than when beneath the load of guilt, under the consciousness of the "body of death," or corrupting "body of sin" within. Deliverance seems impossible, as once seemed forgiveness. It is well for the Christian that, as once the heart was able to take the "blood of Jesus" for the remission of sins, so now, at the fresh sight of the provision of grace in Jesus Christ it may again accept "the blood" for the effectual inward cleansing of the soul. The same text meets the soul's needs in both conditions, but its deeper meaning is renewed until circumstances develope the consciousness of necessity for the more full application of the blood.

A very brief examination of the passage will show that the cleansing refers to Christians, for it is among the things of which the Apostle John writes: "My little children, these things write I unto you, that you sin not." He tells us that "God is light, and in Him is no darkness at all," and that "if we say that we have fellowship with Him and walk in darkness, we lie and do not the truth." If the Christian professor claims present conscious fellowship with God, and yet walks under a cloud of conscious condemnation, he lies. It is God who says so. But if, trusting Jesus, we walk in the light, as God is in the light, bringing all our thoughts and acts to the searching light of God, we then have fellowship with God, and we consciously experience that "the blood of Jesus Christ * * cleanseth from all sin" This is not forgiveness; for this, in the sad event of transgression, is twice provided for a little further on. It is more. It is inward cleansing. When the repenting king cried in his agony, "Hide Thy face from my sins, and blot out all mine iniquities," he added his further needs: "Create in me a clean heart, O God, and renew a right spirit within me."

There are those, and the witnesses are not a few, who claim to have by simple faith prayed for a clean heart; they have, in entire consecration spread out all their lives, outward and inward, before God, asking to be searched through and through by the light of God. They have, in this unshrinking presentation of themselves, felt the penetrating power of God's spirit, and, looking once more to the cross, they have realized the divine inward efficacy of the precious blood of Christ. They are now able to say that "the blood * * cleanseth us from all sin." They feel the spirit who once witnessed to their spirits of the forgiveness of sins, now witnesses also to the cleansing from inward corruption. As they abide under this cleansing [illegible] find, more and more fully, that the same fountain doth no longer "send forth at the same place both sweet water and bitter;" that "what God hath cleansed" they dare not call "common," and that they can now call upon God out of a heart purified by faith, and therefore, in their own consciousness "pure."

The light, of itself, cannot cleanse, for the light only, "makes manifest;" the walk of itself, however earnest, cannot cleanse; a walk in the light is not the cause of the purifying; but a a walk in the full light of God always leads to the blood, "and the blood of Jesus Christ cleanseth from ALL sin."

And yet, while God thus gives a heart that condemns us not, they know that each passing day shall add yet deeper signification to the word "cleanseth." They have not perfect knowledge. To-morrow's light will show things not seen to-day. They may be unaware of some defiled dead bone in their tent, but to-morrow's increased light will discover it, and they will put away the unclean thing. It is only what the light shows in their circumstances, their acts, their affections and their thoughts as evil, in which they realize the cleansing. They claim no absolute perfection, but simply the Scripture meaning of the oft-recurring word "perfect." They press for a prize, and would have "as many as be perfect * * thus mended." Their conscience (or consciousness) is purged from all known defilement of sin, outward or inward, so that with humble, happy hearts, and with the answer of an uncondemned or "good conscience toward God," they are privileged to walk in the holy, unchanged Sabbath of a deep soul-rest before God.

Thus the blood cleanseth. And for what the light has not shown as yet, they need—and they have—the blood. They do not shrink from the light for all that which the light discovers, the blood instantly cleanses.

Nor does this mean a perpetual round of conscious, inward defilement, with its consequent outward sinning, and repentance and cleansing coming after. The beautiful pebble lies by the roadside, where every passing wheel shall cast dust on it. Often as it is cleansed by the showers of heaven, it must always be soiled. But if some kind hand shall place it beneath the flowing stream, it is not only cleansed but kept pure evermore by the eternal waters. The clouds of dust and defilement shall never penetrate that stream, and in its eternal waters the pebble shall evermore reflect the rays of the sun which shine upon it. It is thus with the soul which, abiding in Christ, is by faith able to say, moment by moment, "the blood cleanseth."

While such may have little to reply to the objections based upon a low range of faith and experience, or upon a misapprehension of Scripture, they find the Word, the Spirit and the Blood all harmoniously witnessing within, that the blood of Jesus Christ cleanseth from all sin. Selected by Obedience.

On Horeb, the grand and gloomy mount of God, the prophet Elijah found a hiding-place from the wrath of Israel's wicked queen. His past life and his present circumstances harmonized well with the wild and solemn beauty of the scene around him. He had been faithful to God as few are faithful, and, during his eventful, worldly life and by its triumphant close, he was highly honored of God. Now, he who had been the chosen champion of true religion, while the whole land of Israel seemed given up to idolatry, he was called to "stand upon the mount before the Lord. And, behold, the Lord passed by, and a great and strong wind rent the mountains, and brake in pieces the rocks before the Lord; but the Lord was not in the wind; and after the wind an earthquake; but the Lord [illegible] in the earthquake; and after the earthquake a fire; but the Lord was not in the fire; and after the fire a still small voice. And it was so, when Elijah heard it, that he wrapped his face in his mantle," for he knew that God spake.

That still small voice, who shall describe it? or the nature of the message it bore? "Go," was the command, "return on thy way to the wilderness of Damascus." Not yet could the weary prophet lay his burdens down. By-and-by "the chariots of Israel and the horsemen thereof" should convey him to the gates of the golden city. By-and-by he should enjoy an eternity of rest on the banks of the beautiful river. But first there was work to do for the Master. He must honor God a little longer here upon earth. And how sweetly reproof was blended with encouragement. Sad, almost murmuring, Elijah, know thou art not alone in thy worship of the true God. "I have left me seven thousand in Israel, all the knees which have not bowed unto Baal, and every mouth which hath not kissed him."

"And so he departed thence," says the sacred record. No hesitancy—no doubt—no lingering delay—God had spoken, and his servant obeyed. He knew that the wicked, cruel Jezebel, sought his life; but he could go on his way trusting in the almighty God of Israel. In the season of a sore trial, David said: "I cried unto the Lord with my voice, and he heard me out of his holy hill. I laid me down and slept; I awaked; for the Lord sustained me." Such faith had Elijah.

God speaks to us whose lot it is to live in the last days. He speaks to us by the Bible and the testimonies. He has given us conscience, too, to be the umpire of our daily acts. If this eye of the soul is enlightened by the truth, if it is kept ever clear and bright, undimmed by the mists of passion and sense, by worldly wisdom and the love of gain, it will be a safe guide, and we shall do well to heed its warnings. God demands zeal and earnestness of us, and we cannot plead ignorance as an excuse for the neglect of duty. If we fail in gaining eternal life, we shall merit the punishment of that servant who knew his lord's will, and yet did it not.

Elijah set us an example. God said "Go" and the prophet went forward. He did not wait to see just how God would deliver him from the hand of his enemies. He knew that God would sustain him while he walked in the path of duty, and he leaned on that mighty arm. "The arm of the Lord is not shortened that he cannot save," therefore we should imitate the ready obedience and child-like trust of Elijah. "If thine eye be single," says Christ, "thy whole body shall be full of light." Then let us have an eye single to the glory of God. Those who hope to escape death as Elijah escaped it—those who have the last message of mercy—should be faithful and self-denying in the cause of their Master. "So an entrance shall be ministered unto you abundantly into the everlasting kingdom of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ."—Eliza J. Burnham, in Advent Review.

REFORM NEEDED.—Hospitality is a burden because we are so stylish in our entertainments. We should welcome company as we do our most familiar friends: make no display, incur no extra expense of money or labor; then we and they will enjoy it, feel at home, and be more refreshed by our unostentatious cordiality than they possibly could be in laborious display. We must be more every-day like in our hospitality, or our noblest impulses will congeal and social life will lose its sweetness.—Sel.

M'GHEE, the commentator makes the remark, "The manna from heaven was [illegible] for food and not for chemical [illegible]ysis. The living bread that came down from heaven and giveth life unto the world was given to support, to nourish, and to save, and not to supply a subject for vain and speculative theories." How true is this, and how mistaken the ministers of religion who, in their pulpit of refinement, forget that the children of the kingdom are waiting for their nourishing bread.

CHICAGO, Tuesday, June 24, 1873.

The German Advent Church, in Chicago, are in want of a man to do missionary work. Who will respond? Address Eld. Charles Koier, 40 Newton Street, Chicago.

Br. J. Ridley writes: The church at Manchester is in a prosperous condition; eleven united with the church at the quarterly meeting held there June 8, making twenty that have united with us since last fall. For which we praise the Lord.

HARMONY AMONG OUR MINISTERS.

While there should be harmony among all of the servants of the Lord, Christ's ministers should take the lead. The Methodist Recorder well says:

> Ministers are engaged in a very important and difficult work; no other calling can compare with it. All true ministers are divinely called to the same work; the same in every essential feature. Their hopes and fears, their aids and obstacles, their trials and triumphs are one. Why, then, should they hinder each other's work? Their sympathy for each other should be holy, deep and abiding. They should rejoice in each other's success, and lament each other's defeat. In their treatment of one another there should be felt and displayed the truest kindness, the most generous concern, the purest affection. No envy of a brother minister's talent, acquirement, or popularity should be for a moment indulged. Never, without an urgent reason, should they utter a disparaging word of one another. The sneer, the inuendo, the belittling word should never be heard. Never should they throw a straw in each other's way.

INWARD AND OUTWARD RELIGION.

The ancient disposition to make "clean the outside of the cup and the platter" still exists, with but little relish for the inward cleansing. This theme is well treated in an article clipped from the Christian Union, which we here annex:

> You cannot make a deranged clock keep time by merely tinkering with the hands upon the dial plate; you cannot make a cracked bell ring clear by an outward application of pumice and oil. There must be a radical investigation, a re adjustment, a reconstruction of the confused machinery within. Wheels that vary from their line of contact with subordinate wheels, and springs and pendulums that are at odds and ends in marking hours, must be set true; the whole combination of causes which produce the outward results indicated by the index fingers, must be made to work together for the one object. It requires the designer himself to repair and continue the operations. Then, when the various portions of the clock within are in proper condition, and the necessary force applied, the hours and minutes will be accurately marked. Then the clock will be in harmony with the sun, and their movements in measuring time will correspond.
> So does God's Spirit operate on the soul. It re-adjusts all irregularities, changes all wrong impulses, puts into harmony of motion all discordant desires, cleanses, purifies and presses forward all legitimate agencies of mind and soul, and so makes the outward life but the result of the inward motives and powers. A soul thus imbued is put into sympathy with God through Jesus Christ; and the lips will necessarily tone forth the experience within, as a bell in a well regulated clock marks the passing hour.
> But, how often do we find men attempting to arrange their lives from without, rather than from within! There is a universal disposition to begin reforms with the hands rather than with the heart. The lips are trained to pronounce certain phrases, the feet to walk certain paths, the manner to conform to certain formulated theories; and so Christianity gets to be a mere profession. Merely to profess it is easy enough, and even fashionable. The question is often asked, with reference to the stranger or neighbor, "Does he profess religion?" Well, suppose he does. He might do something vastly better for himself and others. Does he confess? Does he do? The gospel proposes to deal first with the heart; to correct within the soul all that sin has deranged. And only by an immediate and complete yielding up of the inmost secrecies of the nature, and by a full admittance of the new Creator within, may the walk and the conversation be in accord with the will of our blessed Lord.

SEND THE "TIMES" TO THE POOR.

We have often thought we would call the attention of our readers to this very important subject.

We are exhorted to "bear one another's burdens, and so fulfill the law of Christ," and in no way can those who love the teachings of our blessed Saviour better manifest this love than by sending a good religious paper into families who are too poor to pay for it.

We are constantly receiving letters from all parts of the country, saying: "We love the paper; don't know how we can do without it, but you cannot print and send out papers for nothing." A great many tell us: "The Times is all the preaching we have, but we cannot pay, and you must stop it." Many of these letters reveal in their tone the sacrifice on the part of the writer, and it is always with a feeling of sadness that we peruse them. One said, not long since, "I take my pen to tell you that you must stop my paper, the hardest thing I ever did. Forgive me for not saying this before, but how could I part with my best friend?" We might quote from a great many just such letters, but this must suffice. Now, for the remedy. A good brother in Clinton, Iowa, has struck the right vein. We will quote from a letter received a few days ago: "I brought the subject before the church last Sabbath, of taking up a collection for the purpose of sending The Times to the poor; received one dollar; quite a number said they would give, but did not have it with them at that time; told them I intended to take a collection every month for that purpose. It is but a little; yet, a little from many will send those silent preachers far and near, cheering the hearts of those who love the truth," etc.

Brethren and sisters, looking for the Lord, who will go and do likewise? How many will give their mite every month to help preach the gospel to the poor? Let us all work while the day lasts.

PROF. IVES' BOOK.

This work will reach a class of readers who might feel a prejudice against our productions. Let it be scattered among such, and others. The nature and origin of the work is set forth by the author in the preface, which we here quote:

> The origin of this little sketch of the Biblical conception of the soul was in this wise:
> One Sabbath, the writer stated to his adult Bible class that immortality, as an essential attribute of the soul, is not only nowhere affirmed in the Bible, as theologians confess, but that it is in fact positively denied. Great surprise was manifested, one present even insisting that the Bible declared the soul should never die, though he could not name chapter and verse. At the request of the class this question was selected for discussion the next Sabbath, with the promise of studying during the week. On assembling again, it was found that no proof of the soul's inherent immortality had been discovered, though some passages were brought forward from which it had been inferred. The writer presented a carefully selected list of references, and finally, as the whole subject seemed so new and interesting to the class, he promised another Sabbath to bring to each a written slip containing these references. But on reflection, as the class was so large, it seemed easier to print and better to give the passages in full, and then some explanations of misunderstood passages seemed desirable; and so the work grew upon the writer's hand. And it is now presented not to his class alone, but to all earnest students of the Bible.
> It is at most but a sketch. From among the multitude of proof texts on this point, the writer has endeavored merely to present a sufficient number. And, to stimulate inquiry and remove obstacles which have hindered independent research, he has made some suggestions, rather than an elaborate argument. In these matters which revelation alone may presume to decide, he has desired to lead the reader back to the Bible, to study for himself the teachings of that inspired guide.
> If such return to the Biblical standard of our faith was demanded in Luther's day, it is likewise sadly needed at the present. In the issue for April, '72, of a religious quarterly published at New Haven, we find a theological professor re-echoing this strange sentiment one of our most popular preachers had uttered not long before—"No doubt we at present day know more of spiritual things than did the apostles." (!) Know more of spiritual things than the men inspired by the Holy Ghost for the especial work of teaching these very truths!—more than Peter and John, more than Paul who "conferred not with flesh and blood," (Gal. 1:16,) but was permitted to hear "unspeakable words which it is not lawful [literally, possible] for man to utter." (2 Cor. 12:4.) Well may we inquire, whither are we drifting, if in spiritual things our religious teachers set themselves above these apostles? In one, and but one respect, have we perhaps an advantage over them. Though Paul was "expressly" informed by the Spirit (1 Tim. 4:1, 2; 2 Thes. 2) of "perilous times in the latter days," when "some should depart from the faith, giving heed to seducing spirits and doctrines of devils," yet we can hardly think he could have fully anticipated how prevalent and how persistent should have been that "falling away" from the faith, which history has recorded of the Christian Church.
> We can but infer that these claiming such pre-eminence in spiritual knowledge, must recognize that those "holy men of old" and themselves are somewhat at variance as regards the truth; so that ignorance on these subjects must pertain to one party or the other, which ignorance they quietly attribute to the apostles. It is true, indeed, that the two do differ; they are divided on the deeply important question of the soul's immortality. Paul declares that immortality is given "to those who, by patient continuance in well doing, SEEK FOR IT." (Rom. 2:7.) Our teachers assert that it is already the inalienable possession of every man!
> It is time for the church to awake and seriously ponder these questions. Our religious teachers in these matters start from a false premise. Let the Bible testify against them, and let each earnest hearted Christian, in his childlike study of the Holy Word, be the judge. Let the Bible speak for itself, untrammelled by human tradition.
> To assist in its better understanding has been the especial aim of this little work.
> Finally, the writer may be permitted to refer to the great satisfaction and comfort which he has derived from this Biblical view of the soul and its destiny. In comparing his former conceptions of this and kindred truths with his present understanding of the same, he is forcibly reminded of a like contrast in the appearance of objects seen through an optical instrument out of focus, and the same when the field of vision is brought to its proper focus. In the latter case the precious obscurity and uncertainty of definition vanish, and everything comes out sharp, clear and well defined. It is his earnest prayer that thus to others the Spirit of all Truth may bless His own Word, by the clear shining of that light, to increase the gratitude and devotion of Christian hearts, and to arouse the impenitent that they too may "LAY HOLD ON ETERNAL LIFE!"

The Advent Christian Conference of Kansas, to the General Conference to convene at Norwood Park, Ill., June 10, 1873, Greeting:

Dear Brethren in Christ.

Our hearts are cheered at the call for your meeting and we feel inclined to render all the aid and encouragement we can. Although lack of funds may prevent our delegates being with you, you have our prayers and sympathy in your labors of love. Many of us have been cheered on our journey by The Times which comes to us as a messenger bringing "good tidings" of the soon coming of our King. May the Lord direct you in its proper management, so that its usefulness may be increased ten fold. If the Lord will, we would be glad to see the proposed plan of placing it under the control of a general conference of delegates from the several State conferences, to meet annually, and the present stock association abandoned. If time lasts, we would hope to send delegates to the next annual conference, but at present we thought best to save our limited means for home missionary work.

One of our delegates (the writer), suggests that you drop the word "Times" from the name of the paper, as there is one Chicago Times published in the western metropolis, and because the name, The Advent Christian, would be "far better."

Our young cause in Kansas is now well organized and we are at work for the Master. The "brethren dwell together in unity," with no divisions or discord.

We pray that in your counsels the spirit of love and truth may guide and direct you.

Done in behalf of the conference, at the office of the secretary, at Columbus, Kansas, this 3d day of June, A. D. 1873.

RECORD,

Of the Western Advent Christian Publishing Society.

On the 12th day of May, A. D., 1873, suitable papers were filed with the Secretary of the State of Illinois, duly legalizing the organization of "The Western Advent Christian Publishing Society," and pursuant to a call published in The Advent Christian Times, during the month of May, A. D., 1873, the first annual meeting of said society was held at Norwood Park, Cook Co., Ill., June 10th, 1873.

On convening, Eld. D. Mathewson was called to the chair, and John M. Snook, Sec. pro tem.

E. McCulloch, Wm. Sheldon, and F. Burr were appointed committee on credentials.

The following delegates reported from State conferences:

Wisconsin:—Geo. Howard, O. S. Knapp, and Wm. Sheldon.

Michigan:—A. E. Babcock, John M. Snook, and C. P. Fox.

Northern Illinois:—Wm. McCulloch, E. H. Burington and C. C. Marston.

Northern Indiana:—D. Mathewson, and James Ferris.

Central Illinois:—A. S. Calkins, and Goe. W. Hurd.

Iowa:—Moses Chandler.

Minnesota:—S. C. Wellcome.

Ohio:—E. McCulloch.

Many other ministering brethren were present and were invited to take part in the deliberations.

Articles of Constitution and By-Laws were then read by Wm. Sheldon, which, after being revised and amended, were adopted for the regulation of the Society, as follows:

CONSTITUTION.

Article 1. The name of the society shall be The Western Advent Christian Publishing Society.

Art. 2. The object of this society shall be the publication of periodicals, tracts, pamphlets and books setting forth the doctrine of the personal coming of Christ to reign on earth, the resurrection of the dead, and kindred truths.

Art. 3. The officers of this society shall be a president, vice-president, secretary, treasurer and business agent, auditor, editor, and a committee of three on publication; all of these officers to constitute a board of trustees, having power to fill vacancies that may occur by death or resignation between the annual meetings of the society; but no man shall hold more than two of these offices at any time.

Art. 4. The members of this society shall consist of ministers co-operating therewith, or lay members, all of whom shall be appointed as delegates by the different State conferences so co-operating, each conference being allowed three delegates; together with the officers of the society, who shall be members ex-officio.

Art. 5. The society shall meet annually at such time and place as shall be determined by vote at the preceeding annual meeting; or, in case of omission to fix the time and place, the board shall have power to appoint. Special meetings of the society may be called by the board; provided, four weeks notice shall be given through the organ of the society, setting forth the object of the meeting; and provided further, that no other business shall be done at said special meeting.

Art. 6. All officers of this society shall be elected by ballot at the annual meeting, except in cases of vacancy, which must be filled by the board.

Art. 7. The board shall annually report to the society the amount of money received and paid out during the year, and also give the financial standing and prospects of the society.

BY-LAWS.

1. The president of this society shall preside at all its meetings, and all meetings of the board, when present; when absent, the vice-president shall take his place; and in his absence the oldest member of the board shall preside.

2. The secretary shall keep a record of all meetings of the society, and of the board.

3. The business agent shall act under the instructions of the board in making purchases and sales, except in case of meeting the current expenses of the printing office.

4. The treasurer shall give bonds to the society in the sum of $5,000, with two securities accepted by the board, and the said bond shall be in the custody of the president of the society.

5. The publication committee shall have power to decide upon the merits of articles rejected by the editor, in cases of complaints.

6. The auditor shall audit the accounts for the society annually, and oftener if called for by the board.

7. The board may call meetings through its secretary or president whenever deemed necessary; provided, every member shall be properly notified either by letter or by word of mouth two weeks beforehand; or by giving three weeks notice through the publishing organ of the society; and at all meetings thus called, five members shall be necessary to form a quorum for the transaction of business: provided, the board shall have power to act at any time when all its members are present, without the giving of the aforesaid notice.

8. The editor shall have exclusive jurisdiction over the paper, using his discretion in matters pertaining to its interests, except in cases of rejected articles, when the publication committee may be referred to for final decision.

9. The constitution or by-laws may be amended or changed at any annual meeting of the society by a three-fourths vote; provided, due notice of such intended change shall have previously been given through our publishing organ; or by a unanimous vote at any such annual meeting without a previous notice of contemplated change.

Adjourned to 8 o'clock, a. m., June 11th.

Met according to adjournment, D. Mathewson in the chair.

A committee on nomination of officers was appointed as follows: E. McCulloch, E. H. Burington and George Howard.

The committee reported nominations as follows:

For president, D. Mathewson; for vice-president, L. C. Collins; for secretary, Frank Burr; for treasurer and business agent, A. W. Tucker; for auditor, S. C. Raymond; for committee on publication, J. M. Snook, E. McCulloch, and Geo. Howard; for editor, Wm. Sheldon.

The report was accepted, and upon ballot the above officers were duly chosen.

The following resolution was passed:

Resolved: That we tender our thanks to the Baptist church of Norwood Park for the use of their house of worship during our meetings, and to the citizens for their kindness and hospitality during our stay among them.

Adjourned.

Frank Burr, Sec.

Personal.

Dear brethren in Southwest Iowa, and Northwest Missouri. I am at last compelled to inform you that the condition of my eyes will not permit my return to labor in the vineyard of my Master this season. Over four months have elapsed since I was taken down with this painful disease (inflammation of the eyes) and every remedy so far has failed to restore them to health, and it is with great difficulty that I read or write, and my late trip to Chicago, to attend the Association meeting was too much for them. It made them much worse, and I am certain if I ever recover my sight it will be by using great care.

You will therefore, dear brethren, excuse me from returning to labor as an evangelist in your midst. And while I am compelled to disappoint you, do not forget to pray for my recovery. And this must answer the numerous letters of friends on this subject.

It will but very little that I can do this season in the great field, but I will do what I can. I propose to visit the friends in DeKalb, Bureau, Knox, and Warren counties, and if I can preach a little without injury to my eyes I will do so, but must be governed by prudence in every effort, and not heat my blood. My postoffice address will still be New Rutland, LaSalle Co., Ill., where all letters may be addressed until further notice.

I remain yours, waiting and praying "thy kingdom come."

WM. McCULLOCH.

THE ABSORBING ISSUE.

Dear Friend.—We stand upon a common platform of Bible truth. Hence, I address you not only as a professed member of the church universal, but as one of "like precious faith." We believe this faith to be that which was "once delivered unto the saints," when "holy men of God spake as they were moved upon by the Holy Ghost." We are assured that what we recognize as the plan of Jehovah, was the delightsome theme of bards and prophets of old, the creed of the apostles, and the comforting hope of martyred millions. But more favored than any past generation we conceive ourselves to be, because of our chronological location. Not overlooking the dispensational truths of the past, we still believe that more startling and important local issues are involved in the passing hour than ever before engaged the heart of the church. The judgment is impending! This is not an opinion merely; it is a startling fact. We can prove it to a conclusion. It matters not that scoffers thicken, and that the formal church has taken up the rod of smiting against the faithful exponents of prophetic truth. This only serves to confirm us in the assurance that we are right. Witnessing a culmination of the various chains of prophecy extending through the long lapse of centuries, we feel it to be high time to lift up the head, and bid sorrow give place to gladness in view of speedy redemption. The day of God is at hand—the day of conflict, the day of doom. We can almost see the smoke of battle, and hear the noise of contending armies. We can almost catch the sound of rushing pinions, as angels fly through mid-heaven to gather the elect of God from every age and nation. The grand drama of the age is about to close up with the visible introduction of the Ancient of days. We know, dear friend, that we are not fanatical, or given to fancy-sketching. We are dealing with no false alarm. A few short months will prove the correctness of our position.

But, this being true, does the conception of it awaken in us no sense of duty? If not, we are allied to temporal interests. If the end of all things is emphatically at hand, a world is slumbering on the verge of ruin. The field is all white for the harvest; and, unless speedily gathered by the stewards of Christ, it must be reaped in the fiery indignation of God. O, my brother, you who have much goods laid up in store, how can you withhold support from the cause of truth? How can you feel justified in giving your untiring energies to the accumulation of wealth, when every dollar is liable at almost any instant to be swept into the flames? In these last lingering moments of time, how can you turn from the helpless cry of the needy, from the demands of the everlasting gospel, from the lamentations of the lost, whose blood may be required at your hand, to feast upon earth's glittering store? Will it pay? Have you never read that "the earth is the Lord's, and the fullness thereof? Are you not, then, responsible for the use of the Lord's money?

If, my brother, you are a minister of Jesus Christ, do you not often forget the integrity of your mission? You are satisfied that God has called you to the ministry. Is it not equally apparent that He has called you from the secular employment of life? Or can it be true that it is your duty to do two things at once, each directly interfering with the other? If you have worked on the farm or in the shop during the week, do you feel well qualified on the Lord's day to break the bread of life to the hungry multitude? But you say, "I must support my family." Now, wouldn't it be easier to let the Lord do it? Certainly, you must have more confidence in Him than to suppose that He would suffer your family to starve while you are laboring in His service. God knew, when he called you, that your family needed a support. Are you afraid to trust Him? But perhaps you are looking after the luxuries and dainties of fashionable tables. The Lord only seeks your actual benefit in providing for your wants. The divine command is, "Whether therefore ye eat, or drink, or whatsoever ye do, do all to the glory of God."

Perhaps, however, you have given your whole time to public effort. But, in sowing for Christ, do you never find yourself in danger of mixing the seed? Are you never tempted to ride into notoriety on a hobby-horse? There is great danger of forgetting the central truth of the age, and of giving the trumpet an uncertain sound. We are the counterpart of John. As his duty was to raise up a company to join in in the cry, "Behold the Lamb of God," so we are to prepare a people to say, "Lo, this is our God; we have waited for Him." Dear friend, this is the absorbing issue of the hour. It is the cause of God, and it demands zealous, self-sacrificing labor.

Soon Coming of Christ.

How often are our ears saluted with the above expression. How frequently these words fall from the lips of our brethren and sisters. And yet how few realize their great weight! What glorious doctrines cling around the coming of Christ! What blessed promises hinge upon that event! It is the hope of the Christian. It is the event that will bring rejoicing to his heart, dry his tears, suppress his sorrows, end his trials, finish his temptations, terminate his pains, and call him to eternal joys in the kingdom of God.

But however pleasing this may be to the Christian, there is another picture attending this event. When Christ's chariot wheels, in fire, shall roll down the burning pathway of heaven, and the shades and shadows of this dark earth shall be lighted up by his enduring brightness, and the face of the Christian will beam with joy and gladness; then will the sinner probably for the first time, see what he has lost; his last day of probation will then have ended. Woe and agony will be depicted upon his countenance. His life, however successful in treasuring up the wealth of this world, is a failure, not having been engaged in laying up "the true riches." He will then scrutinize his actions as he never did before. And as he sees the day of his salvation is past, eternity with all its joys is lost, and eternal destruction staring him in the face, his whole being will be filled with terror and agony and he will anxiously desire that the trembling rocks and quaking mountains may crush him to pieces, in order to escape the wrath of an offended God. Surely it is a "fearful thing to fall into the hands of the living God."

Yes, "the soon coming of Christ" are words of rejoicing to the Christian, but of despair to the sinner. But while we are professing to be waiting and watching for that event, we should examine ourselves in the light in which God will examine us at the judgment, and then "purify ourselves as he is pure." To indulge in one sin is sufficient to cause us to lose eternal life. Now is the time to prepare, then it will be too late.

It will not do to say that we intended to live better in the future. Now is the time to commence a true and devoted Christian life. If we do not commence now, are we not saying in substance, "My Lord delayeth his coming?" Shall we not labor that when he comes we may have on the garments of righteousness, and be found without spot or wrinkle at his appearing? Let us put forth an effort for the salvation of ourselves and others in the name of Israel's God. Let us weigh well these words, "The soon coming of Christ." May they sink deep into our hearts, and have a practical bearing in our lives. Then, and not till then, can we look up with the assurance of being accepted when he comes.—A. C. Long, Sabbath Advocate.

The Pulpit and Dullness.

"For one I think this indiscriminate lashing of the pulpit for dullness is altogether unfair unless people will point out some way of relief. I remember the story of a jockey in New York city which is in point. One of those dapper young men behind the counter of a store sighed for a ride, hired a horse and started up Broadway. The horse balked and he lashed him furiously, but with no success. Bystanders gathered around him. One said, 'Give him some more.' One said 'Try the butt-end.' One said mildly, 'Kindle a fire under him,' and the wise youth just thrashed away. Along came the jockey, looked at the case, became master of the situation at once, caught up a handful of snow slush from the gutter and, quick as lightning, rubbed it all over the animal's nose. To the utter amazement of everybody he moved obediently on. The clerk did not dare pull him in, but leaned back in irrepressible curiosity to know how it was that such treatment could prove effectual. And after him on the wind came the swift shout, 'Whippin' ain't allers the thing; what he wanted was a new idee.'

And I think there would be often more sense in gathering a quiet contribution for a dull minister to enable to get idees than in simply censuring him because he cannot keep up the exhilaration the whole year round.—Sel.

"Husbands Love Your Wives."

Only let a woman be sure she is precious to her husband—not useful, not valuable, not conveniently simple, but lovely and beloved; let her be the recipient of his polite and hearty attentions, let her feel that her cares and love are noticed, appreciated, and returned; let her opinion be asked, her approval sought, and her judgment respected in matters of which she is cognizant; in short, let her only be loved, honored, and cherished, in fulfillment of the marriage vow, and she will be to her husband, her children, and society a well spring of happiness. She will bear pain, and toil, and anxiety for her husband's love in a tower and a fortress. Shielded and sheltered therein, and adversity will have lost its sting. She may suffer, but sympathy will dull the edge of sorrow. A house with love in it—and, by love I mean love expressed in words, and deeds, for I have not one spark of faith in love that never creeps out—it is to a house as a person to a machine, one is life, the other mechanism—the unloved woman may have bread just as light, a house just as tidy as the other but the latter has a spring of beauty around her, a joyousness, a penetrating and pervading brightness to which the former is an entire stranger. The deep happiness of her heart shines out in her face. She gleames over. It is airy, graceful, and warm welcoming with her presence; she is full of devices and plots, and sweet surprises for husband and family. She has never done with the r[illegible] and poetry of life. She herself is a lyric poem setting herself to all pure and gracious melodies. Humble household ways and duties have for her a golden significance. The prize makes her calling high, and the end sanctifies the means. "Love is heaven, and heaven is love."

A WRITER in the Observer quotes the following from Mr. W. C. Prime's book, "I go a fishing," and asks whether the statement is authentic. Those who have carefully studied the habits of birds assure us that it is literally true.

"'A——'s birds yonder have, beyond question, means of exchanging ideas.' 'You would think so if you saw them at prayers.' 'Wha-at?' 'Yes; at prayers. It isn't anything less. There are birds of every country under the whole heavens, and with voices as various as the languages of men, and you hear what a wild concert of delight they keep up all day long. But every day this entire group of birds assemble in silence, and if it isn't a prayer-meeting I don't know what it is. There is no forewarning that we can detect. While they are all chattering, singing, playing here, there and everywhere, suddenly one and sometimes another, utters a peculiar call, totally distinct from his ordinary note. Whatever bird it is, the call is much the same, and instantly every bird stops his play and his noise. They gather in rows on the perches, shorten their necks so as almost to sink their heads into their feathers, and make no motion of wing, head or foot, for the space of thirty minutes, and often longer. It is almost a daily occurrence. Ordinarily, you cannot approach the aviary without frightening some of the birds and producing a sharp commotion; but while this exercise is going on nothing disturbs them. They are birds of every land and climate, as you see; but this is their custom, and no one fails to attend or behaves ill in meeting. You may think it something like mesmerism, for the leader keeps up his curious call-note throughout the service. The instant it is ended they break up with a shout of delight, and rush around singing and having a jolly time of it as if thoroughly refreshed."

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

AT HOME.

—Maysville, Mich., has been nearly destroyed by fire.

—Cincinnati O., reports two deaths from cholera June 18th.

—Burlington Iowa, has had another destructive conflagration, consuming $400,000 worth of property.

—The people of Memphis Tenn., are more hopeful in regard to the cholera, and many believe that a few days of cool weather will bring a release from all danger of the cholera.

—The cholera in Nashville Tenn., is unabating. There is considerable exodus from the city. To day three draymen were attacked on the streets. Ninety convicts are down with disease, mostly cholera. The deaths from cholera to-day were thirty, of which eight were whites, and twenty-two colored. Business is almost totally suspended. Commercial interests are suffering badly.

—Gen. Sherman tells a New York reporter that if Gen. Davis did go so far as to erect a scaffold, and warn the Modoc murderers to prepare to die thereupon, he exceeded his instructions, and committed an offense for which he will be called to answer. He regrets that the guilty Modocs were not shot when first taken. As it is, they must be tried by a commission, and, if convicted, will be shot or hanged.

—This is good summer weather. The mercury rose on the 18th to 91 degrees in the shade. But that blessed "lake breeze" still saves us from serious discomfort. The reputation of Chicago and vicinity as a summer resort, is by no means a myth. While at Cincinnati, St. Louis and throughout the interior generally, the people hardly know what to do to escape suffocation during these "heated terms," here we have at least some relief in our cooling breezes.

—Further accounts are at hand of the torrent which deluged Blackwood Valley in Nebraska last month. Without a moment's warning the Blackwood River became a flood, and submerged the whole valley, which is 45 miles long and a mile or a mile and a half wide, under seven feet of water. A camp of United States soldiers were swept away, and those of the soldiers who escaped saved their lives by clinging to the branches of trees into which they were carried. The settlers in the valley lost horses, cattle, and all their accumulations. Six of the soldiers and twenty-six horses were drowned.

—The President and Secretary of the interior have under consideration, and will probably adopt as a means of settling the Modoc question the entire breaking up of the tribe, bringing all belonging to it east of the mountains and distributing them by families among other tribes and nations. None will be informed as to where the rest have gone, and the object will be to separate them widely, care being taken that families are not divided. Means will be taken, if this plan be carried out, to have the knowledge of the punishment inflicted well circulated among all the Indians, and it is believed it will exert the most salutary influence, and especially upon chiefs and those who hold positions among the Indians to maintain peace, lest their tribes be broken up in the same manner.

—We are getting to be the most charitable people in the world. If a man does a peculiarly dirty or horrible trick we at once attribute it to emotional insanity. A friend of the Elder Walworth, who was murdered the other day by his son, declares that if that gentleman was ever guilty of the crimes attributed to him by his son and wife he was insane at the time they were committed. Another gentleman, a friend of the young murderer, declares his absolute conviction that the youth was laboring under emotional insanity at the time he shot his father. In the same paper is an announcement by a correspondent that if Mr. Mori, the Japanese Minister, has been guilty of embezzlement, it was while he was laboring under temporary insanity. And so it goes. It is fast getting to be prima facie evidence that a man ought to be pitied whenever he commits any act for which the law declares he ought to be punished.

—It is exceedingly difficult to ascertain the real condition of the South. During the political campaign both sides are tempted to misrepresent the facts, and after the campaign, interest in the subject flags. For months very little attention has been paid by the press to the South, Louisiana excepted. The great States which are free from any special disturbance, jog on unheeded. A traveler, who has spent several weeks in going about in Virginia, Tennessee, Georgia and Alabama, writes that although he took special pains to listen to the conversation of groups at hotels, in the cars, etc., he did not once hear an illusion to politics. This shows that the people are busying themselves with the ordinary affairs of life. The less prominence they give to political topics the better. The great mass of the people will not, in a healthy state of society, devote very much time and thought to politics. The same writer says that the tone and manner of the people indicate no latent and irreconcilable bitterness in the hearts, so powerful as to stand in the way of most cordial co-operation for the advancement of their material interests. They evidently begin to see that free labor, while it makes a change of basis in matters of industry necessary, by no means cripples the material strength of the South; but on the contrary, increases it. It is earnestly to be hoped that business relations will unify the North and South, as they already have the East and West.

ABROAD.

—Australia is rising at the rate of sixteen feet a century.

—The Russians, on May 20, took Kungrad, a Khivan town on the Amoo River, about 100 miles from Khiva. All the land forces, as well as those which are moving by flotilla through the Sea of Aral, are advancing triumphantly, and encountering little or no resistance from the natives.

—The fighting of two battles is reported from Khiva, the Russians proving victorious, of course. This will not be good news for Premier Gladston. No wonder the old fellow looks troubled. England will have lively business in the East some of these days. She had better be getting ready for it.

—The steamship, Great Eastern has commenced the laying of the new Atlantic cable from Valentia Bay, Ireland, to Sidney, Cape Breton. A dispatch from on board, dated at noon to-day, reports the great ship in latitude 52 degrees and 33 minutes. The steamer has paid out 176 miles of cable. All were well.

—"There shall be wars and rumors of wars." The talk in Europe now is that Bismark is exceedingly uneasy regarding the future intentions of France, and has placed heavy masses of reserve troops under arms. Australia is also said to be arming and preparing for war, with a view of assisting the French in case of a conflict. Should the Prussians re-occupy the evacuated provinces of France, as is said to be contemplated, a general rupture would be likely to ensue. The day when "nations shall learn war no more" will evidently not be seen in this age.

GREAT SECOND ADVENT CONFERENCE.

Lord Radstock took the chair on Thursday evening. He introduced

Mr. Jones, who said it was unnecessary to state the special purpose of the meeting. He recognized in the audience three distinct classes of persons—firm believers in the premillenial advent of the Lord; inquirers after truth, and those who were entirely skeptical on the point. He congratulated the first on their knowledge and faith, the second, he, with his companions on the platform, would seek to encourage, while they would try to win the third class to belief of the truth. It was told him that those who studied in prophecy should have a large amount of modesty and humility. But still, admitting that, he held it to be his privilege to speak what he believed with assurance and boldness. He would not absolutely say those who differed with him were wrong; but yet he did say that what he should speak he believed to be true. If they would compare those who believed in the second personal return of the Lord with those who did not, they would see the former had decided advantage over the latter. For, presuming that the former are right, how much more of definiteness of faith and joyfulness of hope was their portion. And, in believing, they were prepared for events so momentous; whereas, if they had mistaken, they were then in just as good a condition as the others. There is an essential difference between the zeal of the two classes. Supposing a second adventist's views to be wrong, does he suffer, either morally or spiritually? Is he not just as chaste, and sober, and virtuous as his differing brother? Is he not equally with him in the temple of the Holy Spirit—graced with his graces, and perfected with his gifts? While those who do not so believe, if, after all, it should turn out to be true, will lose much. It is the same as between the Christian and the atheist. In case the Christian is deluded, then he is as well off as the atheist; but if the atheist should be in the wrong and the Christian in the right, what a sad case then for the atheist. And thus, if the hope they cherished should prove a good hope, what a hope was this! And if it were after all an hallucination, they lost nothing—they were as well off as those who despised the truth of Messiah's second coming.

He proposed to lay before them that evening "some programme of God's government of the world." He asked the questions: "What is His plan? Is there a programme revealed! If there was one in existence, the probability was that it would be found in the Bible. Reasoning in the abstract, the Bible is likely to contain it. And going a step further, he said, the Bible does contain a programme of God's acts with reference to his kingdom. Take the very office of prophecy; it is to be taken heed unto as unto a lamp shining in a dark place. It is to show you where you are, and whither you are going; what is now and what is to be hereafter. This is the use of prophecy.

If he could prove by a new argument that Jesus is coming, and that soon, it could only deepen the joy of Christ-loving saints, while at the same time it would also be a powerful instrument with which to convert enemies. The return of our Lord is an important doctrine and not, as some say, a mere crotchet. It is useful to the saint, and likewise for the sinner. The coming of the Lord is urgent, yet but few believe it. There are great and many signs that that coming is very near at hand. Signs by Jesus are given, and he tells his saints to read, saying: "When ye see all these things come to pass, then lift up your hands and rejoice, knowing that your redemption draweth nigh." A crisis more momentous and extensive than any preceeding is at hand. God's plan of working is laid down as plainly and simply in the New Testament as words could state it, and he was amazed that scholars could find any reasons therein for believing in a thousand years' spiritual reign of Christ on earth, and then the winding up of all things. The 15th of the Acts of the Apostles contained the kernel of God's programme respecting this dispensation. There they read of the commencement of an apostolic council. At that council this question was raised: "Is the Gentile equal to the Jew in gospel privilege?" They said, "No; the Jew is yet first." But, Peter rose up as the champion of the Gentiles and told of God's working among them. James then stood up and, quoting Peter, added an important declaration: how that God had visited the Gentiles "to take out of them a people for his name." There are three facts: (1.) This dispensation is limited in its design—"To take out a people. (2.) When this is finished the restoration of the Jew will take place, "after this I will return," etc.; and (3) The salvation of the whole world, "that the residue of men might seek after the Lord, and all the Gentiles," etc.

He would ask here three pertinent questions: (1.) Whence have we come? (2.) Where do we stand? And (3.) Whither do we go? Beginning with Daniel's seventy weeks, they found sixty-nine ended with the death of Messiah. One week, therefore, still remained. Had the Jews received Messiah, after his resurrection, the last week would immediately have run its course. Now, on account of their rejection of Jesus the last week is pushed on and an interregnum, so to speak, comes in. It is denominated in Holy Writ, "the times of the Gentiles." We have an account of this in Rom. 11:11, 12, where St. Paul says, "by their fall salvation is come to the Gentiles;" and, again, "their fall is the riches of the world." Where, he queried, did they stand that night in God's scheme? God was gathering out the people then; He had been doing so for the last eighteen hundred years; and, as far as they knew, it might be that God might gather the last on that evening. When He has accomplished this work of election the last week of Daniel's seventy weeks commences. The Jews will then be nationally re established. And it will be by means of a "man;" in Old Testament language, the beast; in New, the anti christ. Now the circumcision of a saint, in the Bible significance of the term, is his standing on his watch-tower, looking for his Lord's return. But "blessed is that servant whom his Lord, when he cometh, shall find so doing."

Whither are we going? We are going into a crisis. He saw its gathering forces. The moral corruption of society, heresy growing, and the upheaval of all authority are too plain tokens to be overlooked. There is a universal unrest abroad. What events be immediately before us? (1.) The rapture and translation of the watching and waiting believers. Watching for Christ entitles him, so doing, to certain privileges. Some say, "If Christ comes to-night all will be taken." Where then, he would ask, would be the difference between the good and the bad? What the advantage of the former over the latter? Those, however, who will be left, belonging to the church, will not be left behind to perish; but to be purified by the tribulation. Anti-christ, according to this speaker, is not the Papacy, but a person yet to come. He thought he might be a Napoleon. Certainly, however, it could not be the 1st, 2d, or 3d Napoleon; these were neither of them the man of sin (time was called, after which the speaker said he was not looking for dark death, and sat down hearing the call of the chairman.

Rev. S. A. Walker said they did not meet that evening to talk about the coming of the Lord merely to gratify an idle curiosity. He did not value the inquiry of any but those who desired and loved His appearing. The purpose of all prophetic revelation is to encourage, cheer, and strengthen the people of God. We long in jealousy to love for Christ's rule, as we see how men serve the devil. Some object to prophecy. But the Bible is a book of prophecy, and if we neglect or despise prophecy then we must give up the Bible altogether. Our Lord's history is entirely prophetic. And Jesus himself was always hinting in his parables what should happen afterwards, to induce his disciples to forget the things behind, and press forward to those things ahead. His task that evening was to show that the Lord's continual communications were prophetic. Christ taught the apostles that though a sad present would be their lot, theirs would be a joyful future. They were to expect nothing of the world; but everything of Christ. He promised His providence should be over them until he came back to them. It was evidently His purpose to return for them; for he said: "I will not leave you orphans: I will come to you." They were not orphans; oh, no! They had Christ's love, care and kind attention, and were promised at the end the Saviour's person. But in this intermediate state of trial he was only deciphering them for the glory to be revealed. He would read them an illustration of the present condition of the church of God. (Read from Mat. 14, the account of the disciples in the ship, during a violent storm, and Jesus going to them.) That history was appointed to show that, under all circumstances, they would be under His eye. He would watch his church to the very time He came to save them. The persons in that incident are very instructive. Some of the characters had only a present, the others a future of blessing. The multitude after the loaves and the fishes fitly represent those who flock to the Lord for mere earthly blessings; the disciples had a history apart from the world, and farther on than that scene—they have a future on the sea. The great Lord designed the agitation of the sea and the blowing of the wind. Meanwhile Jesus goes up into a mountain apart to pray. A beautiful type of the church and Jesus to day. Jesus is in heaven, apart, praying and interceding for us; while His dear people, the saints, are on the waves of public agitation—the winds whistling around them are the adverse circumstances in which their lot is cast. The people are workers, every one of them, toiling and rowing away for rest and life. O, only the Master can bring the calm they desire, and guide them into the port they seek! The little ship containing the family is comparable to the little church tossed on the billows of time. No compromise with the world brings opposition. Often the thought came to him, as he rowed and tugged against the crossing winds, the swelling waves and the opposition of life: "I am weak, and the winds and the billows are strong; but the Master knows it, and he watches and prays." The Lord will come in the right time. What was probably the uppermost desire in those sturdy boatmen's hearts on that stormy night? What did they probably say to each other? This: "O, that the Master were here!" And that was the cry of God's church to-day; but it is only the tried, tossed people who desire the coming of the Master, but the carnal and easy living do not wish on this wise. His coming to them would only be the deprivation of all they esteem and enjoy. Ah! tried, tossed church, Jesus has promised to see you again, and make your hearts glad.

Rev. 15 is the contrast of the first scene. There are the saints again. John the Apostle sees them. In his vision he saw, as it were, a glassy sea—so smooth, so peaceful, the agitation all gone. The victory is to God's people. You see the signs of Jesus coming; don't rest on them, but look for Him who draws nigh. "Lift up your heads, for your redemption draweth nigh." And so, John saw redemption come, and then they were on the glassy sea. They were no longer tossed on an angry sea, but stood on a sea of glass. They are not the victims of the sea; but they are over the sea—they stand on it. Jesus gives them power to stand on the waters. They have forgotten their sorrows. They have harps and harp thereon. They break forth into a new song—the song of songs. It is the fulfillment of the prayer: "Thy kingdom come." It is the brightness, the heaven, and the glory come down to earth. But they labored hard for this; they have gotten the victory, over errors, evil spirits, nations, anti christian systems, and everything unholy. How did they get it? "This is the victory which overcometh the world—our faith." O, to believe simply in Jesus! They sing the song of Moses, the servant of the Lord, and the song of the Lamb. Moses' song is written Exodus 15. He sang it over proud Pharaoh and his hosts—over the enemies of Jehovah, who said, "Who is the Lord?" etc. Then came the song of the Lamb. Praise to the Lamb! O that such a hope and prospect would wake every tongue to praise!

Lord Radstock trusted that the word of warning, and the cry of a king would bring forth fruit in their lives. James said, "Be ye doers of the word." Messiah's return is not a matter of speculation, but of fact. He must reign." God raised up Jesus to sit on David's throne. Christ was born a king. He was rejected as a king. The Jews were all believers in the personal coming of Christ in glory; but when he came in sorrow they were not ready to receive him, because they were not students of the Scriptures, and because they saw not the character of His coming. They rejected Him. So many, at his second coming, will not be ready. To make the whole subject personal and practical he would put the question for each to answer: Would you be ready to see Jesus if he came to-day? Are you waiting for Christ?—waiting means standing and expecting Him to come. Are you in heart a pilgrim in this world? Are you unsettled for Christ? Ah! how painfully true the words of the apostle: "Many walk of whom I have told you, weeping; they are enemies of the cross of Christ." They mind and plan earthly things. We should not be planning earthly things, as though this state of things would last forever. But we are to be talking of heavenly things. The gates of glory have opened once for Christ. Once they let him in as the King of Glory; they opened to Him as the risen one. The second time He asks for admittance his appellation is different. His title then is, "The Lord of Hosts," and he goes in, his hosts going after Him. In Titus we are taught that looking for the appearing of Jesus we, the true church, shall deny worldly lusts. In the Revelation there are two women brought to view; one is Babylon, the false bride, the other is the true bride, adorned for her husband. Babylon, he held, included all religious denominations; but the true bride is not a popular religionist; she is a stranger here, waiting for her Lord. There was nothing to prevent the coming of the Lord even in that night. Are you ready? Have you anything to alter in your life before He comes? Ah! you are acting as though you believed he would delay His coming; for, if it were to you a matter of certainty and knowledge that ere the morning sunrise the Lord would appear in the heavens, what "clearing of yourselves" there would be. It was possible, he said, if they were not looking for Jesus, that they would not see Him at his first descent. But God's bride is ready in heart for her Lord. She is in full life, for she is in daily and intimate communion with Jesus. And if the Lord should ask her if he would be a welcome visitor, she would immediately respond, "Yes." And why? Because she knows Him. Now, to-day, the Lord will meet sinners who come to Him as the Lamb of God, and the bearer away of sin—he would meet them as the loving Saviour. Then, coming to Him now, the sinner shall be able to say at his return from heaven: "This is my God; I have waited for him," and sing that glorious song of praise, "Unto him that hath loved us, and washed us from our sins in His own blood, to him be glory," etc. And might God grant that each one there should so deal with Jesus that night that if he came they would be glad to see Him.

On Friday evening your correspondent was indisposed, and so could not attend to report the proceedings.

On Saturday morning, making myself known to some of the brethren of the Conference, Mr. Baxter gave me opportunity to say a few words, which by his kindness of use of reporter's notes, I hope to send you in my next.

Wisconsin Conference.

This Conference was blended with the Wisconsin Campmeeting, held at Merrimack, Sauk County, and held its first business session on the 4th of June, O. S. Knapp being elected President, and Wm Sheldon, Secretary. The following brethren were appointed a business committee: George Howard, J. W. Emmons, and Philo Hitchcock. The committee on ordination consisted of the following ministers: P. W. Hough, Wm. Sheldon, Geo. Howard, E. P. Graves, W. S. Shears. The following ministers were received into conference: A. N. Hitchcock, David Lewis and Dr. Stanley.

The report of the ministers and churches contained many cheering items, and some of a different nature. On the whole the interest is increasing in the State. Some churches are at a low water mark for want of ministerial help. Others are prospering.

It was voted to send the following delegates to the Conference at Norwood, June 10th: George Howard, O. S. Knapp and William Sheldon

After due deliberation it was thought best to make four districts out of the State, for the purpose of increasing the number of quarterly meetings. The southern district was placed under the charge of Eld. George Howard, the eastern under Eld. E. P. Graves, the southwestern under Eld. P. W. Hough, and the northwestern under Eld. G. W. Turner.

An interesting Address was read before the Conference by Eld. P. W. Hough, and ordered printed, which will appear elsewhere. The following was offered and unanimously passed

Resolved, That this Conference tender their heartfelt sympathy to our afflicted Br. George Thomson, hoping that the blessing of God may rest upon him in his hour of affliction; and also, recommend that our brethren at large, among whom he once labored, see that he is not allowed to suffer want financially.

The following committee for the next State Campmeeting was appointed: O. S. Knapp, H. M. Jones and Wm. Sheldon. It was also deemed advisable to erect a boarding-tent on the ground at our next meeting.

A goodly number of ministers were present, and the meeting was one of special interest. May the holy fire be scattered all over the land. Truth is spreading, and may pure religion spread with it, not only in Wisconsin but in every locality, far and near.

WM. SHELDON, Secretary.

An Address.

[The Wisconsin Conference appointed the following committee to prepare an address, viz., Wm. Sheldon, P. W. Hough, and O. S. Knapp, which is here presented]

Dearly beloved brethren and sisters in the common faith. In meeting you again at our annual conference in this beautiful grove, and under this canvas where we have often met in by gone days, with those of like precious faith, and mingled our voices and united our kindred spirits in prayer and praises to our Father in heaven who doeth all things well.

The recollection of the past is refreshing and well calculated to enlarge every element of our devotional nature to its utmost capacity of exercise.

But the mere allusion to the general course of joy and thankfulness that now surrounds us is not sufficient to interest or satisfy you in this address. We will call your attention to facts worthy of note, and

1. Some present can recollect when there was no conference of this order in the world. But how charged is this condition. There are at present but few States where this truth is not represented by a conference of believers composed of ministers and churches.

Others recollect when we had no means (except by the living Preacher) to disseminate those truths we love so well. But now there are a number of monthly and weekly periodicals published, forming channels of correspondence with those of like precious faith and learn from time to time the course of events revealed in the sure word of prophecy by which we know the great day hasteth greatly and be the better prepared to comfort one another with the words of Jesus, who said, "If I go away I will come again and receive you to myself, that where I am there ye may be also."

2. As there is no effect without a cause, we raise the question, what has been the cause or causes that have introduced this wonderful change? The answer is at hand, the time of the end has come when the angel told Daniel that many should run to and fro and knowledge should be increased. Therefore, as the great God stirred up the spirit of Cyrus to give the commandment to restore and build Jerusalem, so God stirred up the spirit of William Miller, of New York, Wolf, of Asia, and Ervin, of England, to proclaim aloud the coming of Jesus, thrilling the hearts of thousands of believing ones and causing the stout heart of infidels to confess that the Bible was true, and by believing and obeying it became co-workers with God and us, in beseeching and persuading sinners to be reconciled to God. Thus believers and ministers of the Word have been increased, the press has been employed, periodicals multiplied, and tracts have been sent out in all directions. The rich and the poor alike have cast into the treasury of the Lord of their abundance or penury, that this heavenly message, God's great amnesty, might go to all the world to prepare a people for the coming of the Master.

3. In presenting this address for the consideration of this conference, a question arises, who have been the workers to advance this glorious cause to its present influence, (for we say its influence is felt in all Christian lands, and is now knocking at the door of almost every theological body in the world.)

We answer negatively, not the speculative or theoretical, or penurious believers, but those that have been "called and chosen and faithful." These are the ones who have borne the burden and heat of the day. They have willingly labored for God, and cheerfully made sacrifices for his cause, literally taking upon themselves the office of hewers of wood and drawers of water, esteeming the reproach of Christ of more value than their pleasure, ease or profit. In short, practical believers, shewing their faith by their works.

4. The next question in order is, are we intrusted with the furtherance of this great work. Are we made the custodians of this great truth that has electrified so many noble hearts, that has centralized so many loving minds, that has opened the hands of the rich and the poor to help it forward. We ask the question again, are we the custodians of this gospel of the kingdom? are we the standard bearers of this last message of mercy to our fellow men? Who can answer this without feeling our own nothingness, insufficiency? Yet our presence at this conference is witness we share this responsibility. Stupendous thought, fearful yet glorious responsibility! With these thoughts how cheering the words of encouragement from the precious Word, "This treasure we have in earthen vessels that the excellency of the power may be of God, not of us. We are troubled on every side, yet not destroyed."

5. How shall we discharge this weighty responsibility and please God, who tries our hearts? We answer, we must have faith, living, active faith in God. This is the foremost and mightiest power in the Christian armor. Its power has been seen in the past in stopping the mouth of lions, quenching the violence of fire, raising the dead, subduing kingdoms, and working out righteousness. In short, it is impossible to please God without it. Every thing that will please God follows the exercise of this Christian grace. Let us study this heavenly science.

6. Unity in all enterprises is necessary to ensure success. There must be unity of minds. Witness the Babel builders. Such was the strength of their united minds that it became necessary for God to confound their language. Error is almost invincible when united. The Mahommedan power, when united under Othoman (the four clans at war with each other before) became a scourge to Christendom, when all her armies were employed to check the error, it prospered. More facts might be referred to in this connection to show the power of union, but this must suffice. Now if error prospers when united, will not truth prosper under the same circumstances.

But we do not speak here of unity in tongue, consenting to those great truths set forth by us, but it must be a practical unity, that shows itself in every day life. In short, bringing all our mental, moral, physical and financial powers into the service of the Master, leaving side issues as minor considerations, and clothing ourselves with charity to stand forth in the majesty of truth, in defence of the gospel, using every means to keep the unity of the spirit in the bond of peace.

7. Paul illustrates the unity of the church by the physical organism of man. This illustration is well calculated to instruct us. We know that the heart is the centre, and at each pulsation every pulse in the system vibrates and conducts the blood to all parts of the system, and returns it in due time to the heart.

GREAT SECOND ADVENT CONFERENCE.

Lord Radstock took the chair on Thursday evening. He introduced

Mr. Jones, who said it was unnecessary to state the special purpose of the meeting. He recognized in the audience three distinct classes of persons—firm believers in the pre millenial advent of the Lord; inquirers after truth, and those who were entirely skeptical on the point. He congratulated the first on their knowledge and faith, the second, he, with his companions on the platform, would seek to encourage, while they would try to win the third class to belief of the truth. It was told him that those who studied in prophecy should have a large amount of modesty and humility. But still, admitting that, he held it to be his privilege to speak what he believed with assurance and boldness. He would not absolutely say those who differed with him were wrong; but yet he did say that what he should speak he believed to be true. If they would compare those who believed in the second personal return of the Lord with those who did not, they would see the former had decided advantage over the latter. For, presuming that the former are right, how much more of definiteness of faith and joyfulness of hope was their portion. And, so believing, they were prepared for events so momentous; whereas, if they had mistaken, they were then in just as good a condition as the others. There is an essential difference between the zeal of the two classes. Supposing a second adventist's views to be wrong, does he suffer, either morally or spiritually? Is he not just as chaste, and sober, and virtuous as his differing brother? Is he not equally with him in the temple of the Holy Spirit—graced with his graces, and perfected with his gifts? While those who do not so believe, if, after all, it should turn out to be true, will lose much. It is the same as between the Christian and the atheist. In case the Christian is deluded, then he is as well off as the atheist; but if the atheist should be in the wrong and the Christian in the right, what a sad case then for the atheist. And thus, if the hope they cherished should prove a good hope, what a hope was this! And if it were after all an hallucination, they lost nothing—they were as well off as those who despised the truth of Messiah's second coming.

He proposed to lay before them that evening "some programme of God's government of the world." He asked the questions: "What is His plan? Is there a programme revealed? If there was one in existence, the probability was that it would be found in the Bible. Reasoning in the abstract, the Bible is likely to contain it. And going a step further, he said, the Bible does contain a programme of God's acts with reference to his kingdom. Take the very office of prophecy; it is to be taken heed unto as unto a lamp shining in a dark place. It is to show you where you are, and whither you are going; what is now and what is to be hereafter. This is the use of prophecy.

If he could prove by a new argument that Jesus is coming, and that soon, it could only deepen the joy of Christ-loving saints, while at the same time it would also be a powerful instrument with which to convert enemies. The return of our Lord is an important doctrine and not, as some say, a mere crotchet. It is useful to the saint, and likewise for the sinner. The coming of the Lord is urgent, yet but few believe it. There are great and many signs that that coming is very near at hand. Signs by Jesus are given, and he tells his saints to read, saying: "When ye see all these things come to pass, then lift up your heads and rejoice, knowing that your redemption draweth nigh." A crisis more momentous and extensive than any preceeding is at hand. God's plan of working is laid down as plainly and simply in the New Testament as words could state it, and he was amazed that scholars could find any reasons therein for believing in a thousand years' spiritual reign of Christ on earth, and then the winding up of all things. The 15th of the Acts of the Apostles contained the kernel of God's programme respecting this dispensation. There they read of the commencement of an apostolic council. At that council this question was raised: "Is the Gentile equal to the Jew in gospel privilege?" They said, "No; the Jew is yet first." But, Peter rose up as the champion of the Gentiles and told of God's working among them. James then stood up and, quoting Peter, added an important declaration: how that God had visited the Gentiles "to take out of them a people for his name." There are three facts: (1.) This dispensation is limited in its design—"To take out a people." (2.) When this is finished the restoration of the Jew will take place, "after this I will return," etc.; and (3.) The salvation of the whole world, "that the residue of men might seek after the Lord, and all the Gentiles," etc.

He would ask here three pertinent questions: (1.) Whence have we come? (2.) Where do we stand? And (3.) Whither do we go? Beginning with Daniel's seventy weeks, they found sixty-nine ended with the death of Messiah. One week, therefore, still remained. Had the Jews received Messiah, after his resurrection, the last week would immediately have run its course. Now, on account of their rejection of Jesus the last week is pushed on and an interregnum, so to speak, comes in. It is denominated in Holy Writ, "the times of the Gentiles." We have an account of this in Rom. 11:11, 12, where St. Paul says, "by their fall salvation is come to the Gentiles;" and, again, "their fall is the riches of the world." Where, he queried, did they stand that night in God's scheme? God was gathering out the people then; He had been doing so for the last eighteen hundred years; and, as far as they knew, it might be that God might gather the last on that evening. When He has accomplished this work of election the last week of Daniel's seventy weeks commences. The Jews will then be nationally re established. And it will be by means of a "man;" in Old Testament language, the beast; in New, the anti christ. Now the circumcision of a saint, in the Bible significance of the term, is his standing on his watch-tower, looking for his Lord's return. But "blessed is that servant whom his Lord, when he cometh, shall find so doing."

Whither are we going? We are going into a crisis. He saw its gathering forces. The moral corruption of society, heresy growing, and the upheaval of all authority are too plain tokens to be overlooked. There is a universal unrest abroad. What events be immediately before us? (1.) The rapture and translation of the watching and waiting believers. Watching for Christ entitles him, so doing, to certain privileges. Some say, "If Christ comes to night all will be taken." Where then, he would ask, would be the difference between the good and the bad? What the advantage of the former over the latter? Those, however, who will be left, belonging to the church, will not be left behind to perish; but to be purified by the tribulation. Anti-christ, according to this speaker, is not the Papacy, but a person yet to come. He thought he might be a Napoleon. Certainly, however, it could not be the 1st, 2d, or 3d Napoleon; these were neither of them the man of sin (time was called, after which the speaker said he was not looking for dark death, and sat down hearing the call of the chairman.

Rev. S. A. Walker said they did not meet that evening to talk about the coming of the Lord merely to gratify an idle curiosity. He did not value the inquiry of any but those who desired and loved His appearing. The purpose of all prophetic revelation is to encourage, cheer, and strengthen the people of God. We long in jealousy to love for Christ's rule, as we see how men serve the devil. Some object to prophecy. But the Bible is a book of prophecy, and if we neglect or despise prophecy then we must give up the Bible altogether. Our Lord's history is entirely prophetic. And Jesus himself was always hinting in his parables what should happen afterwards, to induce his disciples to forget the things behind, and press forward to those things ahead. His task that evening was to show that the Lord's continual communications were prophetic. Christ taught the apostles that though a sad present would be their lot, theirs would be a joyful future. They were to expect nothing of the world; but everything of Christ. He promised His providence should be over them until he came back to them. It was evidently His purpose to return for them; for he said: "I will not leave you orphans: I will come to you." They were not orphans; oh, no! They had Christ's love, care and kind attention, and were promised at the end the Saviour's person. But in this intermediate state of trial he was only deciphering them for the glory to be revealed. He would read them an illustration of the present condition of the church of God. (Read from Mat. 14, the account of the disciples in the ship, during a violent storm, and Jesus going to them.) That history was appointed to show that, under all circumstances, they would be under His eye. He would watch his church to the very time He came to save them. The persons in that incident are very instructive. Some of the characters had only a present, the others a future of blessing. The multitude after the loaves and the fishes fitly represent those who flock to the Lord for mere earthly blessings; the disciples had a history apart from the world, and farther on than that scene—they have a future on the sea. The great Lord designed the agitation of the sea and the blowing of the wind. Meanwhile Jesus goes up into a mountain apart to pray. A beautiful type of the church and Jesus to day. Jesus is in heaven, apart, praying and interceding for us; while His dear people, the saints, are on the waves of public agitation—the winds whistling around them are the adverse circumstances in which their lot is cast. The people are workers, every one of them, toiling and rowing away for rest and life. O, only the Master can bring the calm they desire, and guide them into the port they seek! The little ship containing the family is comparable to the little church tossed on the billows of time. No compromise with the world brings opposition. Often the thought came to him, as he rowed and tugged against the crossing winds, the swelling waves and the opposition of life: "I am weak, and the winds and the billows are strong; but the Master knows it, and he watches and prays." The Lord will come in the right time. What was probably the uppermost desire in those sturdy boatmen's hearts on that stormy night? What did they probably say to each other? This: "O, that the Master were here!" And that was the cry of God's church to-day; but it is only the tried, tossed people who desire the coming of the Master, but the carnal and easy living do not wish on this wise. His coming to them would only be the deprivation of all they esteem and enjoy. Ah! tried, tossed church, Jesus has promised to see you again, and make your hearts glad.

Rev. 15 is the contrast of the first scene. There are the saints again. John the Apostle sees them. In his vision he saw, as it were, a glassy sea—so smooth, so peaceful, the agitation all gone. The victory is to God's people. You see the signs of Jesus coming; don't rest on them, but look for Him who draws nigh. "Lift up your heads, for your redemption draweth nigh." And so, John saw redemption come, and then they were on the glassy sea. They were no longer tossed on an angry sea, but stood on a sea of glass. They are not the victims of the sea; but they are over the sea—they stand on it. Jesus gives them power to stand on the waters. They have forgotten their sorrows. They have harps and harp thereon. They break forth into a new song—the song of songs. It is the fulfillment of the prayer: "Thy kingdom come." It is the brightness, the heaven, and the glory come down to earth. But they labored hard for this; they have gotten the victory, over errors, evil spirits, nations, anti christian systems, and everything unholy. How did they get it? "This is the victory which overcometh the world—our faith." O, to believe simply in Jesus! They sing the song of Moses, the servant of the Lord, and the song of the Lamb. Moses' song is written Exodus 15. He sang it over proud Pharaoh and his hosts—over the enemies of Jehovah, who said, "Who is the Lord?" etc. Then came the song of the Lamb. Praise to the Lamb! O that such a hope and prospect would wake every tongue to praise!

Lord Radstock trusted that the word of warning, and the cry of a king would bring forth fruit in their lives. James said, "Be ye doers of the word." Messiah's return is not a matter of speculation, but of fact. He must reign." God raised up Jesus to sit on David's throne. Christ was born a king. He was rejected as a king. The Jews were all believers in the personal coming of Christ in glory; but when he came in sorrow they were not ready to receive him, because they were not students of the Scriptures, and because they saw not the character of His coming. They rejected Him. So many, at his second coming, will not be ready. To make the whole subject personal and practical he would put the question for each to answer: Would you be ready to see Jesus if he came to-day? Are you waiting for Christ?—waiting means standing and expecting Him to come. Are you in heart a pilgrim in this world? Are you unsettled for Christ? Ah! how painfully true the words of the apostle: "Many walk of whom I have told you, weeping; they are enemies of the cross of Christ." They mind and plan earthly things. We should not be planning earthly things, as though this state of things would last forever. But we are to be talking of heavenly things. The gates of glory have opened once for Christ. Once they let him in as the King of Glory; they opened to Him as the risen one. The second time He asks for admittance his appellation is different. His title then is, "The Lord of Hosts," and he goes in, his hosts going after Him. In Titus we are taught that looking for the appearing of Jesus we, the true church, shall deny worldly lusts. In the Revelation there are two women brought to view; one is Babylon, the false bride, the other is the true bride, adorned for her husband. Babylon, he held, included all religious denominations; but the true bride is not a popular religionist; she is a stranger here, waiting for her Lord. There was nothing to prevent the coming of the Lord even in that night. Are you ready? Have you anything to alter in your life before He comes? Ah! you are acting as though you believed he would delay His coming; for, if it were to you a matter of certainty and knowledge that ere the morning sunrise the Lord would appear in the heavens, what "clearing of yourselves" there would be. It was possible, he said, if they were not looking for Jesus, that they would not see Him at his first descent. But God's bride is ready in heart for her Lord. She is in full life, for she is in daily and intimate communion with Jesus. And if the Lord should ask her if he would be a welcome visitor, she would immediately respond, "Yes." And why? Because she knows Him. Now, to-day, the Lord will meet sinners who come to Him as the Lamb of God, and the bearer away of sin—he would meet them as the loving Saviour. Then, coming to Him now, the sinner shall be able to say at his return from heaven: "This is my God; I have waited for him," and sing that glorious song of praise, "Unto him that hath loved us, and washed us from our sins in His own blood, to him be glory," etc. And might God grant that each one there should so deal with Jesus that night that if he came they would be glad to see Him.

On Friday evening your correspondent was indisposed, and so could not attend to report the proceedings.

On Saturday morning, making myself known to some of the brethren of the Conference, Mr. Baxter gave me opportunity to say a few words, which by his kindness of use of reporter's notes, I hope to send you in my next.

Wisconsin Conference.

This Conference was blended with the Wisconsin Campmeeting, held at Merrimack, Sauk County, and held its first business session on the 4th of June, O. S. Knapp being elected President, and Wm Sheldon, Secretary. The following brethren were appointed a business committee: George Howard, J. W. Emmons, and Philo Hitchcock. The committee on ordination consisted of the following ministers: P. W. Hough, Wm. Sheldon, Geo. Howard, E. P. Graves, W. S. Shears. The following ministers were received into conference: A. N. Hitchcock, David Lewis and Dr. Stanley.

The report of the ministers and churches contained many cheering items, and some of a different nature. On the whole the interest is increasing in the State. Some churches are at a low water mark for want of ministerial help. Others are prospering.

It was voted to send the following delegates to the Conference at Norwood, June 10th: George Howard, O. S. Knapp and William Sheldon.

After due deliberation it was thought best to make four districts out of the State, for the purpose of increasing the number of quarterly meetings. The southern district was placed under the charge of Eld. George Howard, the eastern under Eld. E. P. Graves, the southwestern under Eld. P. W. Hough, and the northwestern under Eld. G. W. Turner.

An interesting Address was read before the Conference by Eld. P. W. Hough, and ordered printed, which will appear elsewhere. The following was offered and unanimously passed

Resolved, That this Conference tender their heartfelt sympathy to our afflicted Br. George Thomson, hoping that the blessing of God may rest upon him in his hour of affliction; and also, recommend that our brethren at large, among whom he once labored, see that he is not allowed to suffer want financially.

The following committee for the next State Campmeeting was appointed: O. S. Knapp, H. M. Jones and Wm. Sheldon. It was also deemed advisable to erect a boarding tent on the ground at our next meeting.

A goodly number of ministers were present, and the meeting was one of special interest. May the holy fire be scattered all over the land. Truth is spreading, and may pure religion spread with it, not only in Wisconsin but in every locality, far and near.

Wm. Sheldon, Secretary.

An Address.

[The Wisconsin Conference appointed the following committee to prepare an address, viz., Wm. Sheldon, P. W. Hough, and O. S. Knapp, which is here presented.]

Dearly beloved brethren and sisters in the common faith. In meeting you again at our annual conference in this beautiful grove, and under this canvas where we have often met in by-gone days, with those of like precious faith, and mingled our voices and united our kindred spirits in prayer and praises to our Father in heaven who doeth all things well.

The recollection of the past is refreshing and well calculated to enlarge every element of our devotional nature to its utmost capacity of exercise.

But the mere allusion to the general course of joy and thankfulness that now surrounds us is not sufficient to interest or satisfy you in this address. We will call your attention to facts worthy of note, and

1. Some present can recollect when there was no conference of this order in the world. But how changed is this condition. There are at present but few States where this truth is not represented by a conference of believers composed of ministers and churches.

Others recollect when we had no means (except by the living Preacher) to disseminate those truths we love so well. But now there are a number of monthly and weekly periodicals published, forming channels of correspondence with those of like precious faith and learn from time to time the course of events revealed in the sure word of prophecy by which we know the great day hasteth greatly and be the better prepared to comfort one another with the words of Jesus, who said, "If I go away I will come again and receive you to myself, that where I am there ye may be also."

2. As there is no effect without a cause, we raise the question, what has been the cause or causes that have introduced this wonderful change? The answer is at hand, the time of the end has come when the angel told Daniel that many should run to and fro and knowledge should be increased. Therefore, as the great God stirred up the spirit of Cyrus to give the commandment to restore and build Jerusalem, so God stirred up the spirit of William Miller, of New York, Wolf, of Asia, and Ervin, of England, to proclaim aloud the coming of Jesus, thrilling the hearts of thousands of believing ones and causing the stout heart of infidels to confess that the Bible was true, and by believing and obeying it became co-workers with God and us, in beseeching and persuading sinners to be reconciled to God. Thus believers and ministers of the Word have been increased, the press has been employed, periodicals multiplied, and tracts have been sent out in all directions. The rich and the poor alike have cast into the treasury of the Lord of their abundance or penury, that this heavenly message, God's great amnesty, might go to all the world to prepare a people for the coming of the Master.

3. In presenting this address for the consideration of this conference, a question arises, who have been the workers to advance this glorious cause to its present influence, (for we say its influence is felt in all Christian lands, and is now knocking at the door of almost every theological body in the world.)

We answer negatively, not the speculative or theoretical, or penurious believers, but those that have been "called and chosen and faithful." These are the ones who have borne the burden and heat of the day. They have willingly labored for God, and cheerfully made sacrifices for his cause, literally taking upon themselves the office of hewers of wood and drawers of water, esteeming the reproach of Christ of more value than their pleasure, ease or profit. In short, practical believers, shewing their faith by their works.

4. The next question in order is, are we intrusted with the furtherance of this great work. Are we made the custodians of this great truth that has electrified so many noble hearts, that has centralized so many loving minds, that has opened the hands of the rich and the poor to help it forward. We ask the question again, are we the custodians of this gospel of the kingdom? are we the standard bearers of this last message of mercy to our fellow men? Who can answer this without feeling our own nothingness, insufficiency? Yet our presence at this conference is witness we share this responsibility. Stupendous thought, fearful yet glorious responsibility! With these thoughts how cheering the words of encouragement from the precious Word, "This treasure we have in earthen vessels that the excellency of the power may be of God, not of us. We are troubled on every side, yet not destroyed."

5. How shall we discharge this weighty responsibility and please God, who tries our hearts? We answer, we must have faith, living, active faith in God. This is the foremost and mightiest power in the Christian armor. Its power has been seen in the past in stopping the mouth of lions, quenching the violence of fire, raising the dead, subduing kingdoms, and working out righteousness. In short, it is impossible to please God without it. Every thing that will please God follows the exercise of this Christian grace. Let us study this heavenly science.

6. Unity in all enterprises is necessary to ensure success. There must be unity of minds. Witness the Babel builders. Such was the strength of their united minds that it became necessary for God to confound their language. Error is almost invincible when united. The Mahommedan power, when united under Othoman (the four clans at war with each other before) became a scourge to Christendom, when all her armies were employed to check the error, it prospered. More facts might be referred to in this connection to show the power of union, but this must suffice. Now if error prospers when united, will not truth prosper under the same circumstances.

But we do not speak here of unity in tongue, consenting to those great truths set forth by us, but it must be a practical unity, that shows itself in every day life. In short, bringing all our mental, moral, physical and financial powers into the service of the Master, leaving side issues as minor considerations, and clothing ourselves with charity to stand forth in the majesty of truth, in defence of the gospel, using every means to keep the unity of the spirit in the bond of peace.

7. Paul illustrates the unity of the church by the physical organism of man. This illustration is well calculated to instruct us. We know that the heart is the centre, and at each pulsation every pulse in the system vibrates and conducts the blood to all parts of the system, and returns it in due time to the heart.

This will do for our present purpose. We will suppose that the heart may represent your conference, and each pulse represent each centre of Christian fellowship or individual Christian. Now for the application: your conference meets annually, to promote or preserve the purity, harmony, unity and activity of the whole body, and it would seem in order that the whole church should respond either by sending delegates or by letter once a year. This would give the conference the assurance of your co-operation and sympathy, and would greatly cheer the hearts of those who sacrifice time and money to attend these gatherings. We think the trouble of reporting by letter from every church which cannot send a delegate, and every minister who can not attend, would be more than paid by the happy results that would accrue to both the conference and correspondents. Brethren and sisters, will you try it.

8. In this address we wish to speak to those who are not present. We therefore take this method to give you an expression of our Christian love for you. We watch for your souls. We want you to stand fast in the liberty wherewith Christ has made you free. But how should we know this unless you approve and act upon the suggestion uttered in this address. Will you reciprocate? we ask again, will you respond?

9. There are some who, in the main, are interested in the doctrines we preach, but on account of some views peculiar to themselves, stand rather separate. We ask you, dear brn., and sisters, are there not great and leading principles of faith peculiar to us all, on which we can rally for the defense of our common faith. The Lord is coming, the judgment is approaching, the resurrection draws nigh, the day of glory and of wrath is impending; can we not get a little nearer together to re-affirm these great principles to a perishing race?

10. Again we invite the unbeliver to examine those great truths revealed in prophecy and fulfilled in history. We think if your attention was as fully enlisted to investigate the subject from this standpoint, you would soon become convinced the Bible is true.

Unfortunately your attention has hitherto been occupied in criticising those false theories said to be taught in the Bible.

Finally, brethren and sisters, and Christian friends, we have written this address out of love. Will you cover with charity what you can not approve. Now may the God of all grace bring both reader and writer to his heavenly kingdom. Amen.

P. W. HOUGH.

Merrimack, June 7, 1873.

From J. S. Winbish, Macon Ga.

I hope your church will do something for Georgia. I think there are many who earnestly desire to walk in the way if they were only instructed therein, though some will resist the word and deny the blood that bought them. I am now engaged in farming, but I am impressed with the belief that I must work in the Master's Vineyard. I will be governed by the teachings of the Spirit.

I would like to give my ideas in regard to the time of our Lord's advent, but fear I would be too verbose, as volubility is almost a fault with me. One to properly understand prophecy and elucidate and apply it should be perfectly conversant with both profane and sacred history, so as to carefully compare and properly connect the two. This I am not learned enough to do, therefore if I should place false constructions on portions of Scripture, I will submit to correction, but would deprecate your censure or reproof.

Thus I have figured only from prophecy with but little direction from historical knowledge: Samuel Whelpley in his historical compend, says that in the year 606 the pope assumed the godly attribute of infallibility, and in the same year Mohammed forged the Koran in a cave at Mecca. What was the result? Was this bull from the Pope the taking away the daily sacrifice, and the religion of Mohammed the setting up of the abomination that maketh desolate? Whelpley says the "beast" and "false prophet" then commenced their career and according to prophecy would come to their destruction about the same time. It looks rather severe on the "Church Infallible" that its power should be compared to a "beast" but this is the general belief of orthodox theologians. Well then take the prophecy of Daniel and add 1290 days (years) to 606 and and we have 1896 for these two powers to receive deadly wounds. The "beast" is already wounded even unto death, but the "false prophet" (Mohammedanism) has received as yet no wound. Only 23 years to fight against that demon to bring in the fullness of time! Let us beard the Lion in his den and fight with the sword of truth. Then "blessed is he that waiteth and cometh to the 1335 days," (years,) this will bring the year 1941. Then Christ will come. This is my exposition. It is not worth much, but I think Christ had reference to the Pope and also to Mahommed when in Mat. 24: 26 he says, "Wherefore if they shall say unto you, Behold he is in the desert, go not forth: behold he is in the secret chamber, believe it not." And Paul was thinking of the corruption of the church when in 2 Thes. 2:3,4, he says, "Let no man deceive you by any means, for that day shall not come except there come a falling away first, and that man of sin be revealed, the son of perdition; who opposeth and exalteth himself above all that is called God; or that is worshipped: so that he, as God, sitteth in the temple of God, showing himself that he is God." Paul did not mean to teach that Christ would not come, but that "they might not be shaken in mind or troubled in spirit," he informs them that the day is not at hand because it will not come until there first come a falling away etc. This was to be one of the signs of his coming, and as this sign had not appeared, therefore he exhorts them not to be troubled on account of his coming, nor shaken in mind if they were looking for him daily and did not see him. He would surely come. And I think we have seen the signs of his coming, and by careful watching we will find that to strengthen (not shake) us, and calm (not trouble) us in the holy word of God.

The Old Testament is just as much Christ's word as the New, for he is the Word and the beginning and the ending, the Alpha and Omega. Therefore he is the Word, and the whole Word is concerning him and his kingdom.

But excuse me. My ideas may be erroneous, but I think I have a sure word of testimony, to which I will take heed.

Our Young Folks.

Morning Hymn.

Now the shades of night are gone,
Brightly shines the morning sun;
Lord, may we be thine to-day;
Drive the shades of sin away.

Keep our naughty passions bound;
Let us in thy ways be found;
Going out and coming in,
Keep us safe from every sin.

A Long Tongue.

BY OLIVE THORNE.

Wouldn't you think yours was a long tongue if it was as long as your whole body? Well, odd as it seems, there is a little fellow, who lives in Africa, with just such a tongue, and you can't imagine how useful it is to him.

You see he is a dignified, slow-moving little fellow, and he lives on insects and such lively game. He could never catch them, and might starve to death, only that he can dart out his tongue, as quick as a flash, and as long as his body. The end of this droll weapon is sticky, and holds fast any unfortunate bug or fly it touches.

The little animal I speak of is a chameleon, and his tongue is not the only droll thing about him. His eyes are very curious. To begin with, they are very large and round, and stick out like big beads on the side of his head. And the funniest thing is that he can turn them different ways, so as to see all around him. He can turn one up and the other down, or he can turn one forward and the other back, and thus see everywhere. It must be a very small bug which can escape these sharp eyes.

And that isn't all about them. These eyes are covered with eyelids all the time. To be sure, there is a hole in the middle, where the bright eye looks out, and he can contract or expand it as he likes, but he can't uncover his eyes, as we can.

But his tongue and his eyes are not the only odd things about him—his feet are as droll as the rest. He has five toes, just as you have, though they are more like a bird's claws than like your toes. They are all long and have claws on the ends, and then they are fastened together by skin in a curious way. Three of them are fastened into one sort of bundle, and the other two into another.

You can see how nicely this arrangement enables him to hold on to the branches of trees, where he lives. All four of his feet are fixed in the same way. And, as if four such hands and feet were not enough, his long, slim tail is as good as another foot. He can curl it around a branch, as a monkey can his, and hold on with it. Even when he walks on the ground—which he doesn't much like to do—he steadies himself with this useful tail.

Everything about this fellow is odd. His skin is not fastened tight to him, as it is to most animals. It is more like a loose bag, and he can swell it out into queer shapes, or rather into a shapeless mass, by filling it with air. Another oddity about the skin is that, by a peculiar arrangement of the coloring matter, he sometimes looks one color and sometimes another, according to the way the light strikes him. It is something like what you have seen in changeable silks.

Strange stories were told about this curious little fellow in old times. It was really believed that he had no regular color of his own, but that he took the color of the thing he was near, being green among the leaves and brown on the ground. That error was caused, of course, by the changes of color I spoke of.

Another error was the effect of his curious habit of blowing himself up like a bladder. It was said that he had no particular shape. In fact he had no character of his own any way—neither color nor shape!

The wisest men of old times believed these stories, and it seems droll enough to read of it in serious, wise books. Even the name of the honest little fellow got to mean one who changes his opinions to suit everybody and has no fixed ideas of his own.

You see it has taken hundreds of years, and hundreds of men watching them, to find out about these curious little fellows; and you can learn it all in about five minutes!—N. O. Christian Advocate.

Naming the Children Over.

"I have three children to name over," said Mrs. Drew one day, "and I shall name them Half Done, Almost Done, and Done."

Jasper slunk behind his mother's chair with a guilty look. He, I am sure, was Half Done; for as quick as lightning he thought of his martin house, begun as soon as he had his new box of tools, and never roofed; of his aunt's flower ladder, which only had the sticks, and that was all; of the latch he began to mend, and left; of his geometry which he missed, because it was only half learned; of the mittens which he lost because they were only half way in his pocket; and worse than all, of Zebra, the horse, that ran away and broke the buggy, because he was only half harnessed. Jasper, I say, quick as a flash, thought of all these, and shrank back, more than certain that "Half Done" was his name. If all he thought was true, did he not deserve it?

"You mean me," said Lucy.

"Mean you for what," asked her mother.

"I was almost done dressing when breakfast was ready. I was almost to school when it began. I had almost done my letter to papa when it was time to send it. I had almost finished Golden Threads when Jane came for it. Oh, dear!" sighed Lucy. "Almost done is quite as bad as half done; and a great deal more provoking, because you see, just a little more trying would have done it."

"'Almost' cost King Agrippa his soul," said Lucy's mother. "He was almost persuaded to be a Christian after hearing St. Paul preach; but there the poor king stopped—almost but not altogether. Poor Agrippa! I am so sorry for him."

"And are you sorry for me?" asked Lucy softly.

"Yes, my darling, because 'almost' stops short of reaching the end of what you may most desire and need. Your feet are turned towards the Lord, but they will not take you to him. Your eyes are looking toward the heavenly city; but 'almost' will leave you this side of the Beautiful Gate, and this side is outside, where you would not be left, my child."

"No, mother, I do not want to be left out," she said. "I will put away 'almost' and take up 'altogether;' it means done, I suppose. Who of us is 'Done?'"

"Who is?" asked mother.

"Arthur!" cried Lucy and Jasper at once. "Arthur does. Arthur finishes." Arthur looked up surprised and pleased as his brother and sister willingly accorded the credit due him.

How many times had they seen him, small boy as he was, cipher for an hour at a time, rubbing out and writing figures over and over again, until at last he would bring his small fist whack on the table, shouting "It is done!"

How patiently and persistently he would plane, and hammer, and saw, and saw, and plane, and hammer, with all his mind upon his work, until a boat or a box or a windmill done, and well done, rewarded his labors. Yes, Arthur was "Done."

"He is a finisher," said Jasper, "and I wish I was."

"Think, Jasper," said his mother, "how it would be to carry half-done into everything—the bread half-done, your dinner half-done, the table half-set, your new pants and coat from the tailor's half-done; sweeping, washing, sewing, half-done."

"Please don't, mother," said Jasper. "Let me think of it."—Child's Paper.

Putting Pitch in their Boots.

A company of hunters caught a number of monkeys in the forests of Brazil in the following amusing manner:

They had a lot of little boots made, just large enough to be drawn easily over a monkey's foot, and filled the bottom with pitch. With these they set out for the woods, and soon found themselves under the trees, where the lively little fellows were skipping about among the branches, hanging by their tails, swinging themselves easily from one tree to another, and chattering noisily together, as if making observations upon the strange visitors that had come into their quarters. The hunters were too wise to attempt to catch them by climbing the tree; they might as well have expected to snatch a flying bird as to lay hands upon one of these nimble little fellows. They had an easier way than this, and one much more effectual. They simply sat down under the trees, while the little chatterboxes were rattling on over their heads, but never for a moment removing their eyes from them. Then they placed the little boots where they could be seen, and commenced taking off their own boots. Having done this, they let them stand a while near the little boots. All this the monkeys very carefully noticed. The hunters, now taking up their own boots, having carefully looked over them, drew them, one after the other, upon their feet. Not a motion escaped the observation of the monkeys. Having replaced their boots, they hurried away to the thicket of undergrowth not far off, where they were hidden from the sight of the monkeys, but where they could see everything that happened under the trees. They left the small boots all standing in a row. They were no sooner out of sight than down from the branches dropped the monkeys. They looked at the boots, took them up, smelt of them, and finally seating themselves as the hunters had done, drew them on over their feet.

As soon as they were fairly in the boots, out sprang the hunters from their hiding place and rushed among them. The monkeys, affrighted, at once started for the trees, but only to find that they had destroyed their power of climbing by putting on the boots. So they fell an easy prey to their cunning enemies. This is the way the monkeys were caught. And how many young persons are caught in the same way! In their desire to do what they see other persons doing, they fall into serious trouble, and often bring upon themselves ruinous habits which follow them to the grave.—Zion's Herald.

Obituary.

REYNOLDS.—Died in Kinderhook, Mich., May 6th, 1873, Mr. S. W. Reynolds. Aged 51 years.

He suffered greatly for three days with spotted fever, then fell asleep in Jesus. He leaves three daughters and a large circle of friends to mourn but we know that when Jesus comes we shall meet him again to part no more. Sweet words of comfort were spoken by Eld. J. R. Preston from 1 Tim. 4: 7, 8.

MRS. MALVINA TOWSLEY.

MILLS.—Died in Wingville, Wis., May 11th, 1873, Sr. Emily Mills. Aged 44 years and 6 months.

A husband and several children are left to weep; yet they expect in a little while to meet her, for Jesus "hath entered the dark valley" before her, with the promise "he that believeth on the Son of God hath everlasting life, and I will raise him up at the last day."

PHILO HITCHCOCK.

ROBERTS.—Fell asleep in Jesus, June 16th, 1873, the wife of Henry D. Roberts, of Aurora, Ill. Aged 32 years.

She leaves a husband and five children to mourn, yet not without hope. She requested them all to meet her in the kingdom. Words of comfort by Eld. Young from Job 14: 14. H. D. ROBERTS.

JARROD.—Died in Blackhawk county, Iowa, May 15, 1873, Mrs. Orpha Jarrod, wife of Alv. J. Jarrod. Aged 71 years.

She was born in Watertown, N. Y., in the year 1802, had been a faithful member of the M. E. church for over 50 years, and left a husband and four children to mourn her loss. She fell asleep in the blessed hope of a resurrection at the second appearing of Christ.

A mother in Israel is gone,
Her labors and trials are o'er;
But soon she will join in the conqueror's song,
On that bright and immortal shore.

Not long shall we weep for those we hold dear,
Soon the long night of death will be passed;
For Jesus himself will shortly appear,
We shall meet all our loved ones at last.

H. G. McCULLOCH.

Such are my arrangements until further notice.
ALICE E. BATHRUN.

The Lord willing, there will be a Basket Meeting held in Br. L. A. Huntley's grove, near his house, two miles north east of Oneida, on Sunday, June 29, commencing at 10 a. m.
The brethren and friends in all this region are invited to come and worship, bringing their own provisions. L. F. COLE.

As I expect to visit Minnesota, I would say to those on my route, if any wish me to stop over with them, and will write me, I will try to arrange so to do. My route will be from Mendota to Dubuque, thence to Cedar Falls, and thence north to St. Paul. Shall start, D. V., July 4.
L. F. COLE.

Oneida, Knox Co., Ill.

Grove meeting on the 4th of July, four miles south of Ionia, on the Galesburg road, in Henderson Grove, near Br. Jonas Smith's, commencing at 10½ a. m., and holding over Sunday. Br. William McCulloch is expected to be with us to preach the Word.
The Q. M. of the Neponset District is hereby called to meet at this meeting, hence we earnestly request all the churches in this district to send their representatives. Come in the name of the Lord, brethren, and let us have the best of all our quarterlies yet. L. F. COLE, Sec'y.
P. S.—The brethren have thought best not to have the tent at the above meeting. L. F. C.

The Northern Illinois A. C. Conference will hold its annual session during the campmeeting at Wyanet. It is hoped that each church within the bounds of this Conference will send either by delegate or by letter, a full report of the past year. Each minister is expected to be present in person or else report by letter.

Come brethren in the ministry and laity, let us make a united and earnest effort to proclaim to a judgment-bound world the good news of our soon coming King.
Any letters for the Conference should be addressed to the Secretary, Wyanet, Bureau Co., Ill. N. W. SPENCER, Prest.
C. C. MARSTON, Sec'y.

Religious services will be held in the Afton Center Chapel, on the 4th of July, at 10:30 a. m., and 2 p. m. Several ministers from abroad have signified their intention to be present. We invite all who can to meet with us and enjoy a season of social converse and worship. Let all who can, bring provisions, so we can have dinner without leaving the church. Those who come by rail to DeKalb or Waterman Station, if they will write me I will see that they are brought out. We prefer to have them come the day before the 4th.
By order of Committee,
H. G. McCULLOCH.

MICHIGAN.

To the churches in Branch County, Michigan, I would say that my appointments for the year 1873 will be as follows:
East Gilead, Jan. 5, 10 a. m., and every two weeks after.
California, Jan. 12, 10: 30 a m and every two weeks after.
Algansee, every Sunday 2: 30 p m and evening. Prayer meeting every Wednesday evening.

The Lord willing, one of the series of Time Campmeetings, (as per arrangements at the recent Charlestown Council, and advertised in the "Watchman's Cry,") will be held at Fairport, in the same grove where we held our meeting last year, to commence Sunday, July 6, and continue over the following Sunday.
The evidences for the coming of the Lord Jesus Christ this present year (1873), will be thoroughly canvassed by Brn. Geo. W. Brown, C. C. Barker, S. W. Bishop, Caleb Thompson, J. F. Nickerson, Jones, Wendell, and others.
Come out once more to the woods, dear brethren and sisters, to our feast of tabernacles. We expect a general rally of "all those that love his appearing," and especially of those who believe and those who desire to hear or support the evidences of Jesus' coming this watch—'tis the morning watch!
Let everyone coming to the forest, come prepared for forest emergencies; bring umbrellas, overcoats, overshoes, bedding, and the like, all you need; don't expect to borrow in the woods. Those who desire will arrange to board themselves, but it is recommended to spread a common table thus avoiding confusion.
A large boarding tent will be put up and plain, substantial fare furnished at 50c. per day; transient boarders will be charged 25c. per meal; dinner on Sundays, 50c. Tents can be rented at the following prices per week, freight extra: 24x30, $13; 16x24, $8; 12x17, $4 50; 9x12, $3; 7 or 9x9, $2.50; 14x14, $4 50. Send orders promptly to Br. D. T. Cooper, 70 Mount Hope Avenue, Rochester, N. Y.
Fairport is 10 miles east of Rochester, on the N. Y. C. R. R., (direct), and the campground is 1½ miles north of the depot. Come early and stay through the meeting. Pray for good weather and a profitable time.

The Powers of the World to Come,

AS REVEALED IN THE MIRACLES OF JESUS.

In the fourth chapter of Matthew we read: "And Jesus went about all Galilee, teaching in their synagogues, and preaching the gospel of the kingdom, and healing all manner of sickness and all manner of disease among the people. And his fame went through all Syria; and they brought unto him all sick people that were taken with divers diseases and torments, and those that were possessed with devils, and those which were lunatic, and those that had the palsy, and he healed them. And there followed him great multitudes of people from Galilee and from Decapolis, and from Jerusalem, and from Judea, and from beyond Jordan." (Vr. 23-25.) In the fifteenth of Matthew we read: "And Jesus departed from thence, and came nigh unto the sea of Galilee, and went up into the mountain and sat down there. And great multitudes came unto him, having with them those that were lame, blind, dumb, maimed, and many others, and cast them down at Jesus' feet, and he healed them; insomuch that the multitude wondered when they saw the dumb to speak, and the maimed to be whole, the lame to walk, and the blind to see: and they glorified the God of Israel." (Vr. 29-31.)

If we could conceive of paradise enlarged into a world, it would surely be very unlike our present dwelling place. We might admit the cataract if it simply continuously poured down its torrent of moulten silver without proceeding to devastation. In that case it might roar and make rainbows through the ages. We might even admit the sea,—though the memory of tragedies would be against it,—providing it would thunder against its own doors, and roll no tidal waves of horror into the field and cities of industry and life. But we could find no place for rivers which steam with death, or jungles prolific in poison. There would be neither simoon nor desert for the sweep of suffocating wind. No underground thunder would rend the solid earth; no fire or smoke from volcanic lips would redden or blacken the sky. No arrows of flame would descend from heaven, no pestilence float in the air. The sunless ravines where life dies and imprisoned waters moan would not be found, nor the black, desolate fields which defy the rain and sunshine of ages.

Nor would we expect to find human creatures worn and wasted, or swollen and deformed out of all semblance to humanity. No fever or inflammation to burn, or consumption to waste, or varioloid to putrefy alive. There would be no sightless orbs, no faces vacant with idiocy or fired with foaming madness, and the cripple and the leper would not be found. The connection between the moral and the physical can not be denied: deformity, disease, and weakness are the products of a world where moral evil has been reigning for centuries and suffering looks back to sin.

There is a passage which some might suppose hostile to this doctrine, but, when fairly considered, there is no antagonism. The disciples inquired whether the man or his parents had sinned that he was born blind, and the Lord distinctly denied the supposed connection. It was not exactly a Jewish thought, but one belonging to our nature, to connect extraordinary suffering with enormous sin, and to conclude that dreadful inflictions could only fall upon great criminals. Hence the friends of Job insisted that his scrofula and poverty and death of his household were all visitations on account of transgression; and in like manner, the barbarous people of Melita concluded that Paul was a murderer, who had escaped from the vengeance of the sea, only to meet his destiny by the fangs of the viper. It has likewise been the favorite employment of ignorant and malignant people to find the judgments of God descending upon their own real or imaginary enemies, never shrinking from the application of the doctrine, unless disease and calamity, like armed men, invaded their own houses.

But notwithstanding all the corrections which we must make, the connection, in a general way, is sure between sin and death, and so betwixt sin and all the ministers who serve the deformed mother and her awful son, by blighting our finest fields, darkening the lights of our mortal house, and shaking the sands of life. The persons who suffer most by deformity, privation, or pain, are not necessarily worse than others; but all the privations and woes, the pains and sorrows and agonies, are consequences of moral evil.

The enlarged Eden would then be a place of purity and splendor, and the shapes walking in it would correspond in exquisite grace and beauty.

What a spectacle it would be,—not without deep interest to the study of humanity,—a Syrian crowd carrying their diseased people!—the blind, the lame, and the lunatic, and the palsied, and the tormented—a hospital in procession, a lazar-house in panorama! A crowd—a throng of human beings—is interesting under any circumstances; but such a thing as we read of in our opening quotation would have profound interest in all its accessories, especially considering the impulse by which it was moved.

The impulse was the will force, the power of commanding faith. A Being had appeared in the world, and his divine attraction drew the people into his presence, and while near him they had glimpses of the paradise of God—gleams of that glory of which some men dream in their better hours. In his character, doctrine, and work, holiness, wisdom, power, and love were all mingled in perfection, and the people came under the spell of the heavenly magic.

There are some passages concerning the spirit awakened among the people which are worth gathering up, on several accounts: "And it came to pass, when he was in a certain city, behold a man fu[illegible] who seeing Jesus, fell on [illegible] besought him, saying, Lo[illegible] thou canst make me clean; and he put forth his hand and touched him, saying, I will, be thou clean; and immediately the leprosy departed from him. And behold, men brought in a bed a man, which was taken with a palsy: and they sought means to bring him in and lay him before him; and when they could not find by what way they might bring him in because of the multitude, they went upon the housetop, and let him down through the tiling with his couch into the midst before Jesus. And when he saw their faith, he said unto him, Man, thy sins are forgiven thee." (Lk. 5: 12, 13, 18, 20.) "And a gre[illegible] multitude of people out of all Jud[illegible] and Jerusalem, and from the sea co[illegible] of Tyre and Sidon, which came to hear him, and to be healed of their diseases, and they that were vexed with unclean spirits; and they were healed. And the whole multitude sought to touch him, for there went virtue out of him, and healed them all." (Lk. 6: 17, 19.) "Lord, trouble not thyself, for I am not worthy thou shouldst enter under my roof: wherefore neither thought I myself worthy to come unto thee; but say in a word, and my servant shall be healed." (Luke 7: 6, 7.) "And a woman having an issue of blood twelve years, . . . came behind and touched the border of his garment, and immediately her issue of blood staunched. Daughter, be of good comfort, thy faith hath made thee whole, go in peace." (Lk. 7: 43, 48.) "What wilt thou that I shall do unto thee? And he said, Lord, that I may receive my sight; And Jesus said unto him, Receive thy sight; thy faith hath saved thee. And immediately he received his sight, and followed him, glorifying God." (Lk. 18: 41, 43.)

The faith of a man is where his life is: hence, some fight their way down to death and hell through a thousand destructions, creating much devastation on the road. Others as resolutely pursue a heroic march to the city of God, not caring though the road be sprinkled with blood, and ploughed by conflict, providing it be glorified by truth and made fragrant by holiness, and the gates of life are visible at the end. A writer of much force, more than a hundred years ago, insisted that as surely as thought is the working power of the understanding, so faith is the power of life, and it can not be denied.

That which our Lord discovered and nourished in those who sought his help was this mysterious power; sometimes finding it in fruitful germ, and sometimes in triumphal manifestation. What will ye, that I should do for you? according to their will, and their faith, so was it done unto them. In the first case, we have quoted, the poor man says, "Lord, if thou wilt, thou canst make me clean." "I will, be thou clean;" the royal prerogative of the supreme will force was resistless, and the leprosy, the loathsome enemy had fled away from the tabernacle. The poor woman who had wasted her substance on physicians, the centurion who said, "speak the word only," the noble whose child was near death, the people who lowered the sick man from the roof, the people who brought their dear one full of infirmities and plagues from far distant places, were all in true recipient condition. The faith was in them which overcomes the flesh, and rises above nature; and so they found their way to him, who had the same kind of power in unmeasured fulness, being "anointed with the Holy Spirit and with power."

There is terrible force in an evil will, for it finds or fashions all the instrumentality needed, and goes onward without remorse, in cruel power to some bad eminence, not caring for the ruin by the way. But when the human will is resolute toward holiness and life, when it works in harmony with the divine will, how glorious the results. The evil worker is in a car of destiny, lashing the horses of darkness, which [illegible] with infernal fire, as they draw [illegible] to perdition. The one whose will [illegible] directed after righteousness and the kingdom, is in the chariot of God, and its victorious course cannot be arrested: to the shores of life eternal it must proceed, and the end is the power, glory, and blessedness beyond all speech.

It is known and admitted on all sides, that our Lord the Christ, as a teacher and a worker, gained and held fast the confidence and love of the common people. Neither in city nor in solitude could he escape the pressure of the eager multitude. To the mountain slope, the sea shore, and the desert, the people followed him, laying aside the ordinary business of life, and often forgetting the common wants of nature. The strange yet holy enthusiasm, the worshipful love and desire never seriously failed. Near to the last the Lord of the country had a triumphal procession in the capital, and the whole city was moved: the green fragrant branches were scattered in the way and joyous hosannas rang out as the king rode onward. So spirit moving was the ceremonial of the day, that they who looked for redemption in Israel, began to think that the kingdom of prophecy and glory would immediately appear.

The reader will likewise bear in mind in connection with these things, that during the larger portion of our Lord's ministry, the scribes and Pharisees were sharply watching, and vehemently urging him, seeking to ensnare by cruel subtleties, and bring him into conflict with established authority. Time after time, their anger was kindled into flame; they conspired against the blameless One, they eagerly sought to destroy him, all the while the chief hindrance, the great obstacle in their way, being the confidence of the people. Even at last, when their murderous policy came into execution, the betrayal must be managed in the "absence of the multitude." Among the men, Gentile or Jewish, who have arrived at the conclusion, that Jesus of Nazareth was not a miracle worker, let these matters be pondered, and a reasonable answer given to the following question:—How did Jesus of Nazareth gain the confidence and love of the people? From the infidel or rationalist ground, we are firmly persuaded that no adequate solution can be found. Look the circumstances fairly in the face; month after month, crowds of people from great distances, bringing their incurable sick—incurable by ordinary means, palsied, withered, lame, deformed, blind, and devil-ridden. Take the supposition that on each journey, the paralitic, the blind, and the possessed, were all carried home uncured. Simon is still driven by the devil among old graves, and no chains can hold him; in the paroxysms of paternal madness, Salathiel trails his limbs painfully and even slowly as ever; and Thaddeus has never seen the sun, or the green fields. Can any man with an ordinary development of brain suppose that the reputation of the Lord as a miracle worker, grew by mere pretences to supernaturalism, and that all the pilgrimages of the people built up the edifice of his fame and glory without diminishing their own diseases, calamities, and sorrows. In the east or in the west, how long would a worker be endured who worked nothing, pronouncing the people cured and whole while they were as lame, as leprous, and as blind as ever? In sober truth, after one or two fruitless journeys, involving great labor, without any harvest of ripe results, the disappointed crowd, maddened and furious, would have joined the scribes and Pharisees in denunciation, and without waiting for any slow judicial process, would have wreaked their vengeance on the deceiver, who had been so large in promise, and so powerless in accomplishment. We may safely say, that the steadily advancing fame of the Lord among the masses of the people, the love, trust, and veneration so generally and so largely yielded, furnish convincing evidence as to the reality of his working. They had among them in all their cities and villages persons on whom his hands had been laid with energy, subjects recovered by the strong hand from obstructions and deformity, from blindness and fear, from infernal glooms of madness, from shadows and gates of death. The sublime, yet sober realism of power, combined with the charm of stainless sanctity, and with such wisdom as had never before been poured from human lips, all combined in the formation of that fame, which burns as a celestial fire. Corrupt and rancorous men, who hated the revealing light as much as they despised the common people, kept pouring in their water, but the sustaining oil was poured from on high.

Many attempts have been made in modern days, to depreciate miracles, as matters of inconsiderate moment. It is only one phase of the world-spirit, a short lived fashion of unbelief. The works of our Lord were certainly influential in the field where they were performed, and such fact is sufficient to show the wisdom of the working. "We know that thou art a teacher come from God, for no man can do these miracles which thou doest, except God were with him." "These are not the works of him that hath a devil; can the devil open the eyes of the blind?" These are but samples. Oftentimes the people glorified God, declaring that such great things had never been seen in Israel, and many of the Jews who beheld the resurrection of Lazarus, became decided believers. The apostles, in the power of the Spirit, surely knew what kind of evidence would be massive and commanding, and when in the time of trial they lifted up their voices to God with one accord, this was the strain:—"And now, Lord, behold their threatenings; and grant unto thy servants, that with all boldness they may speak thy word, by stretching forth thine hand to heal; and that signs and wonders may be done by the name of thy holy child Jesus." The God of glory and holiness attested the wisdom of their fervent prayer, by shaking the place where they were assembled, and filling them with the Holy Spirit. (Acts 4: 29-31.) "Stephen full of faith and power, did great wonders and miracles among the people; and they of the synagogue of the Libertines were not able to resist the wisdom and the spirit by which he spake. (Acts 6: 8, 10.)

In fact, wherever we find a mighty work proceeding, the power goes along with the wisdom, the moral is in alliance with the supernatural power, and God is glorified thereby.—G. Greenwell, in Rainbow.

Charity.

A paraphrase of 1 Cor. 13.

J. K. P. BAKER.

What though I speak with silvery tongue,
As no man ever spake or sung,
Or angel's golden harp surpass,
My silver and my gold are brass
If I lack charity.

What though a prophet's power divine
To know all secret things be mine;
With faith the mountains to remove,
Still, still I must as nothing prove
If I lack charity.

What though my goods to alms be turned,
My body given to be burned;
In vain the sacrifice must be,
Nor could it ever profit me
If I lack charity.

Charity suff'reth long, is kind;
Charity envieth not in mind;
Charity vaunteth not in pride;
Oh! I can want for naught beside,
If I have charity.

Three charming Christian graces are,
Faith, and Hope, and Charity;
Faith is true, and Hope is sweet;
But Oh! all joys and virtues meet
In dearest Charity.

God's Abounding Love.

GEO. W. MURIS.

Bring forth the best robe and put it on him. (Luke 15: 22)

In the parable where the above text is found, we have a most beautiful and far-reaching illustration of the love of God toward the most wretched, base, and vile of the children of men. The persons he chooses to illustrate this love by are persons of distinction. A rich and noble Jewish father and a younger son. This son, it would seem, had dwelt with the father, obeyed and loved him until he came to be of age, when he demands a share of the goods belonging to the father. To this demand the father willingly yields, and immediately "divides with him his living." The Savior now begins to paint the picture of this young man's sins, reaching downward step by step, until the last degree of misery is reached.

First: He takes the father's gift of wealth, and, leaving his father's house and the land of his people, he goes into a foreign country where they worshiped not the God of his fathers but bow down to idols. This among the Jews was considered a great sin; and the person doing this, lost caste among them, and was ever afterward considered as a Gentile.

Second: He squanders and wastes the father's bounty in riotous living among harlots, thus lowering himself to the level of the lowest Gentile.

Third: After he had spent all, there arose a famine, and he "began to be in want"; his would-be friends, while his wealth lasted, now desert him, and, without money or friends, he seeks and obtains a situation as a servant to a Gentile. No one but a Jew can fully understand the awful degradation into which he is plunged! A Jew of rich and noble birth to become a servant—and to a Gentile!! But another downward step is taken in misery.

Fourth: He is sent to "feed swine," he yields, he obeys, "and fain would fill his belly with the husks that the swine did eat, but no man gave him" even of this unclean disgusting food. Degradation, misery, hunger, death, are now before him. The last degree of moral degradation known to a Jew is reached, and death in a foreign land with all its horrors is before him. The memories of the past harass and torment him; the present and future appall him: it seems like a horrible dream, and he now begins to awaken to a realizing sense of his true condition; and, as memory paints the picture of home and native land, of mother's kiss and fond caress, of little prattling sisters, and of father's deep abiding love, and faithfully paints his own heartless, sinful course, the separation from the loved of home, the determined, sinful course he had pursued, the want, shame, degradation, infamy, and horror of his present condition. He abhors himself; and, with nothing but a father's love to lean upon, he determines within himself "I will arise and go to my father, and say father, I have sinned. I am no more worthy to be called thy son; make me as one of thy hired servants." "And he arose and came to his father."

Let us now notice the course taken by this natural father towards his son after the separation. Not one messenger is sent after the wayward, erring boy to expostulate with him upon the evils of his present course, not a promise of forgiveness or of pardon, not an expression of pity, not an invitation to return; and, when the awful famine comes upon him, he, forgotten, as far as outward action indicated, was left without aid, or sympathy, or pity, to suffer the awful pangs of hunger, to starve, to die, and, without burial, to enrich by his own decomposing body, the soil of a foreign land. Indeed, it would seem that the father's affection was entirely alienated from the son. But, when the son, acting upon the resolution "I will go to my father," is seen ascending the distant hill-top with slow and faltering tread, trembling and staggering from side to side in very weakness, wan and emaciated with hunger and disease, clothed in rags, and covered with filth; the father's pride of name and station vanishes in a moment, the fountain of his love, long sealed, bursts every bond; the bowels of his compassion yearn upon the poor prodigal, and with the cry, "It is my son that was lost," he runs to meet and to embrace his erring child, and to pour out tears of heartfelt joy upon his bosom; but then the son begins to sob out his confession, "I have sinned....I am no more worthy to be called thy son." The father can hear no more; all the dark past is forgiven and forgotten; the great desire of his heart is now to wipe away the remembrance of the past from his son's mind, to show his entire forgiveness, and to elevate his son to the highest honor in the family, and so he cries to the servant "bring forth the best robe and put it on him, and put a ring on his hand, and shoes on his feet, and kill the fatted calf, and let us eat and be merry, for this my son, was dead but is now alive, was lost, but is found."

Dear, kind reader, how much does the course of this younger son resemble ours; but oh! how much more full, abiding, perfect, is the love of our Father, God. How different the course pursued by the natural father to his child while in sin from that of our Father towards us while in sin! The natural father turned from his child, but the Heavenly Father turns toward us. While the former forgot and neglected his son, the latter kindly remembers his erring children and careth for them. Our Father has sent messenger after messenger after us, exhortation after exhortation, entreaty after entreaty: he invites, he entreats, he pleads, and following us by his mercy, grace, and truth, he would lead us to repentance. He is long-suffering; not willing that any should perish. Could we ask more? But God has done even more than this. He has even given his eldest, his dearly beloved Son, to die in our place, in our stead, that we might escape, and be exalted to his glory forever.

"But, is there nothing for us to do"? you inquire. I answer yes, much. Your condition is very nearly the same, and hence your action must be the same as the poor prodigal's. He was a wretched, sinful wanderer—so are you. He was destitute, hopeless, perishing—so are you. He considered his present condition; thought upon his father's love, and resolved to "go to his father" for forgiveness, favor, and life—so may you. He immediately put this resolve into execution—so should you. He came just as he was, with all his burden of sin, wretchedness, and woe upon him—just in this way you should come. He came trembling, penitent, but trusting in a father's love—so must you. He confessed his great sin, declared his utter unworthiness, and sought only the place of a hired servant. In this way, and with this confession, and request, you should come to God. Delay would have proved fatal to him—you also, are in imminent danger; delay is death! The prodigal's father ran to meet his erring child, but God is even now present. He has never deserted thee; he has no pride although thou hast wounded him, scoffed, derided, and sneered, yet he pities, has mercy, and will receive, only turn thy heart to him. As heaven is above the earth, so are the thoughts and ways of God above the thoughts and ways of man. The poor prodigal came for food, but received instead, food, raiment, home, kindred, honor, favor, wealth, and blessing! Oh! how full and abundant the blessings procured by a Father's love!

This is God's way of dealing. The sinner presents himself in all his filth and rags. God deals with him at once. There is needed no previous preparation. God takes him just as he is. The sinner is not required to fit himself, or wait, or change himself—he cannot. God takes him just as he is, and treats his case just as it now stands. God does not inquire, "is he worthy," or "what has he done to merit these," but hearing our confession, he immediately commands, "get the best robe and put it on him." No vile or cast-off raiment, no servant's dress, but the glorious robe of Christ's righteousness. It is brought to him as he is, where he is, and put on him. He must needs enter his home better clothed than when he went away. Love does it all! Ah! here is love free, forgiving, pardoning, abiding, without measure, to the uttermost.

Such, dear, dying friend, is God's love; rich in mercy, abundant in loving kindness, fruitful in every blessing! Oh! will you not receive it, and be blessed by it in this, and in the world to come? God grant it. Amen.

Vain Philosophy—No. 2.

H. V. REED.

"Beware lest any man spoil you through philosophy and vain deceit, after the tradition of men, after the rudiments of the world and not after Christ."—Col 2:8.

II.—Tradition.

In the further discussion of this subject we shall call attention to tradition. It must be admitted by every sacred historian, that tradition has brought much ruin upon the Church of Christ. The world in all periods past has been darkened by its pall, which like a black cloud has hung over all nations; and to-day its sable folds are seen in almost every sky.

When Jesus appeared among men, and shone forth as the light of life and truth, he had to oppose the traditions of the Pharisees, which had become their rule of faith, instead of Moses and the Prophets. But he was true to his God, and did all within his power to break the superstitions of his age, and set before mankind a system of thought and action. But tradition was so firmly riveted on the minds of the masses that he met with but little success. The fishermen of Galilee held unflinchingly to his theology until his betrayal, and then they could join the world in denying the Son of God. But tradition had lost its hold upon their minds, and they were free, and when he arose from the dead, as the Son of Righteousness, they could hail him as the true Messiah, but the Jewish nation rejected him and placed their hope upon tradition instead of Jehovah's Word.

Jesus, in his teaching, rebuked the proud Pharisees, and said unto them: Ye make "the Word of God of none effect through your traditions." (Mark 7: 13.)

It ruined the Jewish Church; they laid aside the commandment of God that they might retain tradition; and by so doing effaced the saving truths of God from their doctrines; blotting out the only light which gleamed from heaven to earth. The Pharisees held the doctrine of the immortality of the soul in high esteem. They borrowed it from Babylon, while in captivity, and it is admitted by all historians that previous to this era such a notion was not known in the Jewish nation. But on their return from Babylon they made tradition a prominent part of their faith; and thus the dual nature of man became a part of their doctrine, of which Jesus told his disciples to "beware." (Matt. 16: 6-12.)

The Traditions of the Sadducees were equally absurd. They denied the resurrection of the dead; while the pharisees virtually ignored the same, and by their traditions had embraced the heathen dogma of the soul's immortality. Jesus appeared and confuted the Sadducees, by proving from Moses that there would be a resurrection of the dead and a future life. (Luke 20: 27-40; and overthrew the doctrine of the soul's natural immortality, as taught by the Pharisees, by showing that he was the life giver, and that eternal life was to be imparted by him to all the faithful at the resurrection of the just. (John 11: John 5: 28, 29. John 6: 40.)

This teaching contradicted all traditions from the priests of Egypt and the Persian Magi to the polished Pharisees at the altar. But says one, was not Paul a Pharisee? We answer, yes! as touching "THE LAW," but not as touching tradition, which made "void the law." (Phil. 3: 5.) The Pharisees believed in "angel and spirit," with Paul, but that has no reference whatever to the ghosts of men separate from bodies; for Josephus shows, in his discourse on Hades, that angels and spirits are beings to which the saints are to be assimilated at the resurrection of the dead, and not departed ghosts, as any one will see by reading the account. But if the fact of Paul's being a pharisee proves that he endorsed their doctrines, it would prove him to be a hypocrite, for Jesus so calls them, and that he embraced their traditions. But he has told us in what sense he was a pharisee, "As touching the Law, a Pharisee." The sect of the Pharisees did not believe in the sufficiency of the Word of God, and hence added their traditions. The Catholic Church, in like manner, has added tradition to the Christian Scriptures, teaching the canonization of saints, the sprinkling of children and adults with holy water, and calling it baptism; praying men out of Purgatory; the priests giving a through ticket to Catholic saints of every stripe, from the thief to the pirate on the seas for a little gold; the immortality of the soul; Christmas and all holy days which Protestant Christendom adore as sacred to God.

The Pharisees and Catholics are not alone in denying the sufficiency of the Bible; the Protestant world endorse many of the notions of the former traditions. They, in common with the Catholics, believe in death-bed repentance, the soul's immortality, eternal misery, sprinkling for baptism; and farther, that the written Word is not a sufficient rule of faith. Hence "spirit inspiration" is heeded, and feeling is of more consequence than the Word of God. The traditions of the fathers and learned men are considered of equal value with the Word of Truth, and thus we are now in an age when God's eternal truth is left to perish in the streets, while the sayings of men and mental impressions are called voices from the Throne of God. Therefore we say, in conclusion, let us take heed to the "things" which have been spoken, lest at any time we let them slip, and not neglect the great salvation spoken unto us by the Lord and confirmed unto us by them that heard him. (Heb. 2.)

IDLENESS is the dead sea that swallows up all virtues, and the self-made sepulchre of a living man. The idle man is the devil's urchin whose livery is rags, and whose diet and wages are famine and disease.

The Pastor.

REFORMER.

Of all men in the world the pastor is, perhaps, the greatest subject for fault-finding. A great many seem to think that the man whom the Lord has made an under-shepherd should do almost everything. Many who cannot go three miles to attend a prayer meeting, think it nothing for a minister to go (perhaps on foot), a dozen miles or more every Sabbath, and if he happens to fail once, or twice during the year, those who have paid little or nothing of the small amount they have agreed to pay, complain of lameness or dishonesty on the part of the pastor. The truth is, fault finders are seldom clear of fault themselves. How many pastors are fearfully berated for not visiting as much as some think they ought to, when perhaps these very ones have not been to his house for a year, or even inquired relative to his wants. Perhaps he has had to go to work to earn bread for his little ones, or clothing for self or wife.

Now remember that a minister "has feelings" as well as others, and needs encouragement; and, while it is true that some ministers break up churches, it is also true that some churches "break up" ministers, both mentally and financially. How many pastors are called "poor managers," "bad calculators," and other names, because they are not able to live on what some tight-fisted ones think they might live on?

We would not complain of our lot as pastors, or murmur at our fare, but some of God's dear, faithful ministers are compelled to quit the field, and dabble with the pursuits of mammon, at the expense of the cause of Present Truth, while those who talk largely of a soon-coming kingdom, and (blindly) of holiness of heart, are clinging to their "gods of wood and stone" with a death-like grasp. But some are doing their duty in this respect; and were it not for the "widow's mites," the banner of truth would trail in the dust. The poor widow, with several children to support, gives half as much or more than the man with broad acres, large houses, and large stock, who is better able to give fifty dollars than she is fifty cents. The first shows the spirit of the Master, the last the spirit of this world. The first lays up treasures in heaven, the second on earth, to be used in kindling the fires of the last great day.

May God arouse the dormant energies of a slumbering church, and use them to his glory!

My Convictions.

VERNON HOLMES.

To all who hope for eternal life only through a resurrection from the dead by our Lord Jesus Christ, greeting:

I am one who was baptized and instructed in that branch of the orthodox faith known as the Church of England or Protestant Episcopal faith. I must say that I clung to that church more for the reason that my dearest relatives were within its comfortable pale than because I had any settled belief in all its canons, doctrines, and dogmas. Indeed, my judgment was totally at variance with some of them. I could believe that our Savior was "crucified, dead, and buried," but I could not believe "he descended into hell"—having been taught that the term hell indicated a fearful place of torment, instead of meaning the grave—to be covered, or hid from sight; its true meaning. But I now believe "he descended into hell"—the grave.

Believing man possessed an immortal soul, I never could understand why he should be judged twice—at death and at the resurrection; and my perplexity was only deepened by referring to the Bible, in which I could find but one judgment invariably, and that to be at "that day" "when the Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout," and "all that are in the graves shall hear his voice and come forth to be judged, every man according to the deeds done in the body." These thoughts led me to believe that inconsistency was lurking somewhere, either in the Bible or in the teachings of the church, and I had almost come to the foolish conclusion that, that which appeared to be satisfactory to my ancestors and to the hosts of good and learned that the church could boast of, was quite good enough for me, when God, in his wonderful goodness, brought me face-to-face with the ADVENT CHRISTIAN TIMES!

The doctrine of the absolute mortality of man was at first distasteful to me, and, for a while, I combated it. I investigated its strongholds with a desire to capture them, but, I have here to say, that I was completely captured and captivated by the doctrine known as Adventism. I was absolutely amazed to note the delightful harmony and clearness of the Bible from this sublime and most glorious standpoint! I bless God from my heart that he has set me in a path where my feet run smoothly and my mind feels at rest. The Bible says Death is an "enemy." I can now see how he is an "enemy." I could not when taught he was the messenger who should call me to the "spirit land," of which land the Bible gives no guarantee. Death is an enemy in that he holds us in his strong embrace till Christ shall set us free by finally swallowing up death in life at his coming!

I am firmly convinced that the Advent faith is the pure old Hebrew faith, established by God himself, who will consummate it "in that day" when sin and death shall be "destroyed by the brightness of his coming," and the "children of the resurrection" shall "inherit the earth forever."

God! how can a man one moment doubt
  The wisdom thine which wrought the plan
Of our redemption—brought about
  Through faith in thee and love to man!

An Examination of the Law and Sabbath.

C. M. KEACH.

(Second Article.)

Think not that I am come to destroy the law or the prophets; I am not come to destroy, but to fulfill." (Mat. 5:17.)

The honest inquirer asks: Why was the law proclaimed from Mt. Sinai to the children of Israel if they could not keep it? We cite the following from the pen of Eld. P. H. Wagoner, a prominent Sabbatarian writer, as a sufficient reply. In his work entitled "The Law of God," page ninety-three, he says:

"While we admit the fact that they could not keep the law, we deny the conclusion that has been drawn from it, namely, that it was inconsistent for God to place a condition before them that they could not fulfill. When we understand the purpose for which the law was proclaimed as the condition of the Sinaitic covenant, we shall see that that purpose was accomplished: but it would not have been accomplished had it been in their power to keep it. We turn again to the apostle's argument in Gal. 3. .... At Sinai the law was confirmed as the condition of another covenant, to continue for a limited time, and the object of its being so given was, that it might serve as a school master to bring them to Christ; and, if it were possible for them to keep it, it would lead them to trust in themselves and seek for justification by personal obedience instead of seeking to the Saviour for it.

The idea is this: the law was our school master to lead us to Christ by showing us our own weakness and the necessity of Christ as our substitute in obeying the law. It is objected by some that Paul was not speaking of any other than the ritual law in Gal. 3. The obvious absurdity of this objection is clearly seen from the fact or facts that

1. It was the law that needed atonement. (v. 13.)

2. That the man who doeth it shall live in it (v. 12), which is not true of the ritual law.

3. It called for a Mediator and the ritual law did not. (v. 19.)

The children of Israel, supposing the law to be the means of righteousness, were led to reject the faith of Christ. Their error is described in the following expressive language:

"But Israel, which followed after the law of righteousness, hath not attained unto the law of righteousness. Wherefore, because they sought it not by faith, but, as it were, by the deeds of the law." (Rom. 9: 31, 32.) "For they being ignorant of God's righteousness, and going about to establish their own righteousness, have not submitted themselves to the righteousness of God, for Christ is the end of the law for righteousness to every one that believeth." (Rom. 10:3, 4.) How clear is the fact that we are to be made righteous by the obedience of Christ, (Rom. 5: 19), imputed to us through faith in him. (ch. 4: 24.)

We now call attention to the Old and New Covenants. We inquire first, what constituted the old covenant? Some affirm that it is the decalogue, while others say, that it is the contract between God and Israel concerning the law. It is my opinion that it takes both the law and the contract concerning it to constitute the covenant. A covenant containing no conditions is no covenant at all. The covenant is defined by Sabbatarians thus: "The contract made in Exodus 19 and 24, relative to the ten commandments is the identical first covenant." (Sacred and Secular History of the Sabbath, by J. N. Andrews, p. 85.)

In Exodus 19 we find the following contract, (vv. 3-6): If ye will obey my voice and keep my covenant, then ye shall be to me a pec[illegible]r treasure. And all the people answ[illegible]d together and said, All that the L[illegible] has spoken will we do. (v. 8.)

Paul tells us that the old covenant is done away; and if the contract found in Exodus 19 and 24 is the covenant, (and we admit it is), then what is past is done away? For, if God still holds out his promised blessings to those who keep the law, and requires us to fulfill the law, then the old covenant is in full force now; and, if we consent to keep the law, we enter into the same covenant which the children of Israel did. If it be objected we have not kept the law in our past life, we reply neither did the children of Israel keep it, nor did they consent to keep it for their past lives. We inquire also, what part of the old covenant genders to bondage? Surely not the promise of God, and hence, we are left to conclude that it is the consent to keep the law, and if it gendered to bondage then, it does now.

Paul illustrates the old covenant by the bond-woman in Gal. 6: 24, and in verse 31 he says "We are not children of the bond-woman, but of the free," adding the exhortation "Stand fast, therefore, in the liberty wherewith Christ hath made you free, and be not entangled again in the yoke of bondage." Here we have a solemn warning against renewing the covenant. By circumcision in the letter, the Galatians would appeal unto the letter for life, and hence be debtors to fulfill the conditions of the old covenant, the works of the law; hence Paul's warning: "If ye be circumcised, Christ shall profit you nothing. For I testify again unto every man that is circumcised that he is a debtor to do the whole law."

The two covenants may be contrasted thus:

1. Under the old covenant the children pledged themselves to render personal obedience to the law. Under the new covenant Christ has fulfilled the law in our stead, and his obedience is imputed to us through faith.

2. Under the old covenant the law was written upon tables of stones in the letter. Under the new the law is put in our hearts by faith—that is, faith, which is counted for obedience, is the equivalent of the law in our hearts.

3. The conditions of the old covenant are the works of the law. The condition of the new is faith in Christ.

In our next we will examine the present claims of the Jewish Sabbath.

The Promises to the Faithful.

MARTHA TRASK.

Whereby are given unto us exceeding great and precious promises; that by these ye might be partakers of the divine nature, having escaped the corruption that is in the world through lust. (2 Pet. 1:4.)

When we look back to that remarkable time when Jesus was here among men, and had been teaching them eternal life through faith in him and obedience to God, we must stop for one moment and think all, all that Jesus has done for us! He was rich, and for our sake he became poor. He hath made him to be sin for us who knew no sin. He was despised and rejected; a man of sorrows and acquainted with grief. Surely he hath borne our griefs and carried our sorrows. He was wounded for our transgressions. He was bruised for our iniquities. Think, for one moment, the anguish that he suffered in the Garden of Gethsemane while pleading for us! So deep was his sorrow, and agonizing his prayer that great drops of blood rolled from his brow. Jesus, knowing the corruption that was in the world through lust, knew the fiery trials his followers would have to go through, and through his suffering the plan of redemption was made plain, and by partaking of his nature we will be kept from sin, for Christ was without sin.

Peter warns the church to be constant in the true faith of Christ. He says: "Give all diligence; add to your faith virtue, and to virtue knowledge, and to knowledge temperance, and to temperance patience, and to patience godliness, and to godliness brotherly kindness, and to brotherly kindness charity: for if these things be in you, and abound, they make you that ye shall neither be barren nor unfruitful in Christ." We must be more in earnest about being filled with the spirit of Christ.

Having therefore, these promises, dearly beloved, let us cleanse ourselves from all filthiness of the flesh and spirit, perfecting holiness in the fear of God. He exhorteth us to purity of life, and bear for him the affection that he does us. If we bear him the same love what a happy company of Christians we would see! Such a shaking as would long be remembered, and sinners would be converted. My prayer to God daily is, that the sandy foundation of formal professors, that is barren and unfruitful, will be shaken to the center, and they aroused to a sense of their danger; that while they are asleep in Zion the Bridegroom may come and go in and shut the door. What a solemn thought! And this second blessing, as some call it, they say is something new! Why, bless you, it is as old as the Bible is, or justification. When we feel that God hears and justifies us, then we want to tarry at the mercy seat till we are sanctified and stripped from all inbred sin. Then we will run and not weary; but so many of us only make a start, and rest with justification, and never know what pure and undefiled religion is. Paul says of such, Ever learning, and never able to come to the knowledge of the truth.

"Blessed is the man that endureth temptation, for when he is tried he shall receive the crown of life, which the Lord hath promised to them that love him." Blessed are the peacemakers, for they shall be called the children of God. Blessed are they which do hunger and thirst after righteousness, for they shall be filled. "Ho, every one that thirsteth, come ye to the waters, and he that hath no money; come ye, buy and eat; yea, come, buy wine and milk without money and without price." What glorious prospects the pilgrims have in view! We can look ahead, and lo, the land appears!

Oh! watch, and fight, and pray,
  The battle ne'er give o'er;
Renew it boldly day by day,
  And grace divine implore.

We'll gird our loins, my brethren dear,
  Our distant homes discerning;
Our absent Lord has left us word
  Let every lamp be burning.

May God help us to be faithful, and very soon we will see the King of kings.

If what few words I write in weakness will encourage any lover of the Lord, either great or small, to God be all the glory, who is abundantly able to keep us unspotted from the world. And, if we are faithful, he will bring us off more than conquerors through him that hath loved us.

"Remember Lot's Wife."

The language quoted above was used by the son of God, among other instructions, relating to the time just preceding His second coming. (See Luke 17: 32.)

The last verses of this chapter are often quoted as proof that when the Lord comes, none will know the precise time. It is urged that, because Christ says in verses 33–36, "Two shall be in one bed; the one shall be taken and the other left." "Two shall be grinding together; the one shall be taken and the other left." "Two shall be in the field; the one shall be taken and the other left." Therefore, all will be following their daily avocations up to the very day that the Son of God is revealed from heaven. It is also urged that, if the precise time of His advent was known, the church would not be found either in the field, or at the mill. This last statement we readily admit. If, therefore, these texts do teach that at the very hour of the coming of the Lord the church will be found, one in a bed, one in the mill, one in the field, etc., it will be thus because they are in darkness concerning the definite time of His coming.

But we do not believe that any such idea is conveyed in this Scripture.

We are not disposed to allow any one to separate one verse, or two verses from the immediate context, and build a theory for us, on such detached portions of Scripture. The only certain rule by which we can learn the truth from the teachings of Christ on any given point, is by reading all he says on that particular subject in the entire context connected with the portion we select to prove our position. This is so evidently true that it seems hardly necessary to state the rule. We design treating the subject under consideration precisely according to this rule.

When we read the context in connection with verses 34–36, we find insurmountable objections to placing these verses at the very hour of the coming of Christ.

Verse 31 reads: "In that day, he which is on the house-top, and his stuff in the house, let him not come down to take it away; and he that is in the field let him likewise not return back."

Christ never gives a caution to his church when it is not needed. To suppose that the church will need a caution like that given in verse 31, at the moment when Christ comes, is simply absurd. When he comes the dead are raised, and the living changed "in a moment, and in the twinkling of an eye." (1 Cor. 15: 51, 52.)

There will, therefore, be no time for any to go down from the house-top, or return from the field, even if they were disposed to do so.

Again: verse 33, "Whosoever shall seek to save his life shall lose it."

How absurd to suppose that any member of the church of Christ will seek to save his life, in the sense of this text, in that hour when he sees the Son of God "coming in the clouds of heaven, with power and great glory." But this is the same day spoken of in verses 34–36.

Once more: who supposes that the flock of God will need an exhortation to "remember Lot's wife" when they see their descending Lord on his way to earth? But this exhortation belongs to the church in the same day named in verses 34–36.

According to Matt. 24: 30, the sign of the Son of Man is seen, and all the tribes of the earth mourn before Christ comes. Who believes that after the sign of the Son of God is hung in the heavens, the waiting ones will go out and engage in cultivating their farms, or go to work in the mill? This idea is too absurd to be harbored for a moment by reasonable men or women.

Here is additional proof that Luke 17: 34–36 must have its application this side of the coming of the Lord. When the sign of the Son of Man appears, probation is ended; for at its sight "all the tribes of the earth mourn." There will be no danger beyond that point that any will seek to save their lives at the expense of rejecting the truth; or like Lot's wife, turn back to those things they have left behind. At that time the future of the race, to the last man is unalterably fixed. The fact being clearly stated by the Son of God, that the last sign will be seen before he comes, there can be no such thing as applying the portion of Scripture we are now considering at the precise time when he shall appear.

If it be asked, where does the last part of Luke belong, we answer: The context tells us plainly. Read verse 26. "And as it was in the days of Noah, so shall it be also in the days of the Son of Man." How was it in the days of Noah? "They did eat, they drank, they married wives, they were given in marriage, until the day that Noah entered into the ark, and the flood came and destroyed them all." (Verse 27.) This quotation shows us clearly where this Scripture is located. It is in the days just preceding the coming of the Son of Man.

To make it more plain we give the text as it is translated in Campbell's and McKnight's version of the New Testament. "Two shall be in one bed: one shall be seized and the other shall escape."

"Two shall be grinding together; one shall be seized and the other shall escape."

"Two shall be in the field; one shall be seized and the other shall escape."

This rendering makes this Scripture perfectly plain. In the time just before the coming of our Lord, character will be developed and men's destinies will be fixed, under the sounding of the note of warning concerning the coming of the Judge of the quick and dead. The exhortation comes to the virgins who have taken their lamp and gone forth to meet the Bridegroom, "Remember Lot's wife."

There is no danger of turning back, except in the case of those who have "gone out" to meet the heavenly Bridegroom. To them this exhortation belongs, and to them only does it apply. Its parallel is found in Chron. 21: 34. "And take heed to yourselves, lest at any time your hearts be overcharged with surfeiting, and drunkenness, and cares of this life, and so that day come upon you unawares." How much this exhortation is needed we can all see by looking over the Advent body to-day. There is a looking back, like Lot's wife, to the things once left behind; the things that pertain to this present world, that will, as sure as the Word of God is true, drown men in destruction and perdition.—Watchman's Cry.

CAUGHT HIM THERE.—A little boy was advised by his father to use illustrations in his conversations whenever they should occur to him, "for," said he, "there is no more forcible way of conveying your meaning." Shortly after the boy was lectured on generosity. "Its better to give than to receive, Johnny—far better. The Bible says so, and I say so." "Illustrate it, papa," said Johnny, with a sly laugh in the corner of his eyes." I think I will understand you better."

OUR FUTURE.

Our future depends much upon the co-operation of our friends in procuring new subscribers, and in furnishing aid in various ways. It is earnestly hoped that an effort will be made in all our tent, camp, and conference meetings this summer and fall to augment our subscription list. Some have already done well, and doubtless will continue to do well in this work, while others are wishing the enterprise success, but do not seem to think they are called to act. We need the help of every minister and every lay-member. You do not know what success you can have till you make an earnest trial. Let us have a response from every town where the paper now goes. You will thus spread the truth and help the paper.

WILL COME SOON.

Every line of prophecy shows that Christ will come soon; and the claim that he will come the present year, though not so strongly sustained as we would be glad to see it, is by no means unworthy of consideration. Could we know it was true, we would rejoice. It may be so. While we cannot step out on our feelings, but wait for clear light, we are far from concluding that a candid presentation of what appears to be evidence on the immediate coming of Christ will bring us into disgrace. While dogmatical and egotistical feelings should be repudiated, we should have our hearts open to all the light on the coming of our Savior, regardless of the applause or censure of those who scoffingly say, "Where is the promise of his coming?"

OUR HISTORY.

As a people we have a history; nor can this fact be obliterated by our foes. Without evincing the least egotism, we can say with emphasis, we have accomplished a work of no trivial consequence in spreading unpopular truth, and refuting popular errors. In spite of fierce opposition, we have made ourselves felt. But our work is not yet finished. Defiant and God dishonoring errors still lift their heads, reminding us that the conflict is not yet over. We must gird on our armor anew and follow the enemy into his intrenchments of tradition and vain philosophy.

Hitherto our history has not been marked with infallibility, nor was that of the apostle's even, as human frailties and imperfections often cropped out in their day. So it has been among us. Some extremes and mistakes are discernible, but, under the circumstances, the real wonder is that they have been so few. But, in spite of all these, we not only exist, but are steadily gaining ground. The truth is prospering in our hands. We are getting into a position of greater usefulness. Not that we are to become popular, but we are gaining numerous victories. Let us take courage, and press the battle. Scatter papers, tracts, and books. Much good has been done in this manner, and much more should be done. Let us work with new vigor.

CLOWNISH MINISTERS.

The effort upon the part of ministers to ape the clown in producing laughter in the congregation, by indulging in a vien of low witticism, is truly deplorable. It is a growing evil in the land, and is finding its way into our own midst, and ought to be nipped in the bud. Who can think of Christ or his apostles as stooping to excite laughter among the people by weaving into their sermons some low incident that is calculated to tickle human nature, and detract the mind from the solemn truths proclaimed by them? The Presbyterian thus refers to this departure from ministerial gravity in the pulpits:

Where there is no reverence there is no godliness. Where seriousness and holy awe are in feeble exercise, there the "powers of the world to come" are feebly operative. But how deplorable are the examples presented every week of the absence of this sentiment from the pulpit. We can hardly believe the types which thus spell out for us in the newspapers the words of irreverence and flippant nonsense which are substituted for the Gospel of Jesus Christ in some of the pulpits of our land.

The great reform so needful now-a-days must begin at the altars of God. Let the priests cease to offer strange and unhallowed fire. Let them cultivate in their own experience and speech that reverence which their people must feel if they are to be spiritually elevated. And we apprehend that the shortest road to reverence will be found in a more scrupulous adherence to Bible truths.

Let the pulpit be occupied with important themes; let sin, righteousness, and a judgment to come fill the mind of the preacher, and we will read of no laughter, no applause. Let substantial doctrines be preached, and we shall not be shamed by reading in the Monday papers such dreary columns of politics, personalities, and things bordering on the profane. Bats fly at night because the light is gone. Frivolity fills the mind because reverence is not there. Would it were possible to bring the shadow of God's presence over the mind of every popular preacher. We should soon see the effects in a better type of godliness throughout the church. "Let us have grace whereby we may serve God acceptably with reverence and godly fear."

Let our ministers desist from the work of spicing their sermons with laughable witticisms. It is not Christlike, but savors of carnality. Let us be ministers of Christ in the highest sense.

An Appeal for Help.

Dear brethren of the Advent Christian Church East and West, we appeal to you for aid in the construction of a house of worship. We are few in numbers but believe in the soon coming of the Lord. We wish to do all the good we can for the cause of truth; and, as the cause is much hindered by having no public place to meet, but have to meet at private houses, we thought of a plan by which we think a house can be built and no one burthened. If we can raise six or seven hundred dollars from the brethren we can build the house. One of our brethren, who is a carpenter, says he will build the house if we can raise money enough to get the material. Are there brethren who will give us one dollar each; those that cannot do that will they give 50 cents? The amount above mentioned could soon be raised and no one feel burdened. It would place us in a condition to work by the side of our opposers, having the truth and a house to meet in, the good Lord blessing the work, the cause must and will prosper. Brethren, will you assist us in this time of need. Have we not one common interest in the establishment of the truth? Let us co-operate in this work, not only at this place, but at all places where anything is needed. If this plan should meet the approbation of the brethren and be carried into effect, our brethren will soon be situated so they will not be turned out of doors, and school houses and meeting houses locked against them, as has often been done.

As to the need of this work I refer you to Brn. S. K. Gibson, G. G. Godfrey, Kent, and Patton. Will some of these brethren please write a few lines on the subject?

Any one willing to contribute their mite to assist us, will please forward it to our treasurer, Br. William Belcher, at Hamburg, Fremont County, Iowa. Receipt of all sums will be acknowledged.

Yours in hope of the soon coming of the Lord, JOSEPH HAMILTON,
Elder of the Advent Christian Church, meeting at Hamburg.

Crisis please copy.

THE MORE SURE WORD OF PROPHECY.

Dear Friend:

I hear you are somewhat troubled in regard to Peter's statement concerning the word of prophecy. You think there would be no failure in understanding him if he had simply declared the prophetic word to be sure; but as he spoke of the more sure word of prophecy, you do not see how the statements of prophets can be more sure than any other feature of divine revelation, as all must be alike reliable. I think I appreciate your difficulty. Begging you not to esteem me officious, I submit you my humble opinion of this portion of God's Word, hoping it may give you some light.

You are aware that the prophets have spoken at some length concerning the second advent of the Messiah. Isaiah, viewing in prophetic vision the scenes of that decisive event, speaks like this: "And it shall be said in that day, Lo, this is our God; we have waited for him and he will save us." Said Enoch, "Behold, the Lord cometh with ten thousand of his saints to execute judgment upon all." Daniel says, with all the eloquence of God's inspiration, "I saw in the night visions, and behold, one like the Son of Man came with the clouds of heaven,.... and there was given him dominion, and glory, and a kingdom, that all people, and nations, and languages should serve him." Job declares in the assurance of living faith, "I know that my Redeemer liveth, and that he shall stand at the latter day upon the earth; and though after my skin-worms destroy this body, yet in my flesh shall I see God." From these and other similar statements, the disciples had gathered some idea of the nature of the future Advent. Though they heard the testimony of our Lord upon this point, they seemed to take it as only a confirmation of what the prophets had written. It seems, however, that in the early part of their ministry, the ideas of the disciples were somewhat indistinct in regard to the future coming and kingdom of Christ. They needed something to give them a conception of the reality of that foretold in prophecy. For this very purpose, and that the confirmation of the Word might be complete, Christ enacted the scene of the transfiguration. In holy vision three of the disciples saw a miniature representation of the Second Advent. Now, how the graphic descriptions of the prophets rush into their minds! How clear their conceptions now, of what before was vague and indefinite! No wonder that Peter afterward felt like stirring up the minds of the saints to a remembrance of "the words which were spoken before by holy prophet." It was in this frame of mind that he gave utterance to his statement concerning the "more sure word of prophecy." By a reference to the original, we are able to grasp the full force of the writer's idea, which our translators have left ambiguous. The Greek reads: "Kai echomen behaitoren ton paophetikon logan," which literally means, "And we have the prophetic word more confirmed." The idea is not, then, that the word of prophecy is more sure than something else, but that, by the scene of the transfiguration witnessed by the disciples on the mount, the prophetic word is confirmed.

How thankful should we be in our day that this circumstance was recorded! What a forcible proof that the coming of the Lord will be a real, tangible event! It is a successful weapon against the mystic interpretation of the "promise of his coming." We will not, then, dear friend, remove the ancient landmarks. Let us rest secure upon the faith of the primitive church, and the hope of the martyrs of God; and in due time, with the blood-washed of every age, we shall join the convocation of the glorified.

Was St. Paul a Bachelor?

MRS. H. V. REED.

It seem to be a general impression that Paul was a bachelor, and many ladies of the present day have formed an opinion of him which is decidedly unfavorable.

Those who are strongly interested in the suffrage movement appear to be greatly exercised by his advice to women, and disposed to rebel against it; but it must be that they who condemn him so rashly have not read all that he has written on the "Woman Question," and we protest against his being condemned unheard.

This article has been suggested by the words of a recent writer, who pitches into Paul without a bit of mercy, calling him an old bachelor and blaming men and women for ever believing in his instructions. Now I am in favor of universal justice, and we women must always be careful not to condemn our friends.

I believe, and propose to show, that Paul was actually a married man, and a strong advocate of woman's privileges.

The Corinthian church had written to him for directions upon the subject of matrimony in a time of great persecution, and, under the circumstances, he seemed to think that for the time being, the unmarried had better remain so.

No candid mind can think for a moment that Paul intended to disapprove of God's ordinance. He gives directions for the greatest faithfulness and affection on the part of the married; but he says, "I say therefore to the unmarried and widows that it is good for them if they abide even as I." This is his advice—not by commandment, but by permission.

The word unmarried in the above text is agamoi and applies to those who have lost their companions, and Belsham renders it "widowers." In this sense it is properly joined with h'eera (widow), hence the idea of the writer is plain.

Eusebius, Clement, and other historians speak of Paul as a married man, and according to the best historical evidence we can get, he was at the time of writing this epistle a widower.

And thus he remained true to his dead, and admonished other men who had lost their wives to pursue a similar course.

Is there anything very odjectional in this advice? If there is a woman in America who is particularly anxious for her husband to marry again after her death, we should like to see her.

The apostle's "advice to wives," in the fifth chapter of Ephesians, seems to be very offensive to some because he admonishes them to obedience.

Husbands, however, are very fond of quoting it. If there is but one text in the Bible with which they are acquainted it is that; but do you ever hear the twenty-fifth verse from masculine lips? Listen: "Husbands love your wives, even as Christ loved the church, and gave himself for it." There, gentlemen, is your rule of conduct—don't forget, and, by the way, how do you like it? Oh, where is there a greater love than this? and what an exulted opinion Paul must have had of woman to deem her worthy of such affection! Rest assured that obedience will gladly follow a love like that.

When men are honest, loyal, and true—when they tenderly love and shield even at the sacrifice of self, then women will "honor and obey" without any objections or regrets.

Don't look incredulous; some of us are blessed with just such husbands, and think we know how to appreciate them. You never hear this class complaining of rebellious wives.

If all men were what they should be, "Woman's Rights Conventions" would pass away forever, and wives would be too happy at home to ever seek the platform. Let those who are annoyed by these "manifestations" seek to abolish them by a radical improvement of the male sex.

But in the face of such advice as the above, a lady writer says: "Though he might have understood the management of the women of Macedonia, he wasn't quite up to the womanly intellects of the nineteenth century."

My own impression is that Paul's method of domestic management is just what the "womanly intellects of the nineteenth century" would best appreciate and profit by, but what, alas, few of them are blessed with. Any woman would be satisfied with an affection like that, and if she wouldn't, why, she doesn't deserve any.

Let those who are troubled with unappreciative wives, try Paul's recipe, and if this tender care and surpassing love does not win them back, they are made of very different material from the rest of womankind.

Again the lady says: "In my opinion an old bachelor, whether he be saint, apostle, prophet, evangelist, pastor or teacher, hasn't the slightest business to express an opinion in reference to other men's wives." Well, it is drawing the line pretty close in these days of free speech if a man is not allowed to express an opinion because he isn't fortunate enough to have a wife. Is that to be the rule of action, or rather inaction, when women are candidates for office? To be sure, we are not willing for bachelors to criticise other men's wives very freely, nor shall we permit sharp-nosed old maids to find fault with our husbands, or prescribe rules for the management of our children. They can feed their canaries and train their cats and poodles as they please (providing, of course, the cats and poodles can stand it), but they can't manage our babies.

And if they haven't any room for the milk of human kindness in their veins, they needn't spend their time in whining about Paul's idea of matrimony. His admonitions faithfully followed lead to the highest and purest happiness that mankind is capable of. He represents the husband as being the head of the family, and every man ought to be worthy of that position; then, he exhorts him to "love his wife." Ah, yes, Paul, that is the keynote of true matrimony—the never-failing, never-changing love—that lives through storm and sunshine, through prosperity and adversity, always growing stronger as the years go by. Love which is founded upon mutual respect and the admiration of moral worth, will live when beauty is lost and vanity is dead. Again, he says: "So ought men to love their wives, even as their own bodies." There's another test. How many can walk up to that without flinching?

Tobacco and whisky would be neglected sometimes if this advice were followed, for women do like to have their husbands clean and sober. How many men, think you, would tolerate a wife that chewed tobacco, or kiss a rosy mouth polluted with the filthy weed? No wonder men can't kiss each other!

Again, in the last verse of the chapter, the apostle repeats his charge, to render it if possible more emphatic: "Nevertheless let every one of you in particular to love his wife, even as himself, and the wife see that she reverence her husband." We can't object to that. When man places himself upon the Bible pedestal, and shapes his conduct by the high standard that inspiration has given, women will gladly reverence him.

No man who is truly worthy the affection of a noble woman is obliged to complain of a lack of respect on her part. Woman will reverence man if he will allow her to do so. She clings to him even in his vices; and if he filled the grand idea of Paul, he would rejoice in a love and happiness of which very few of them have any conception.

Paul was one of the earliest advocates of "Woman's Rights;" he says: "There is neither male nor female, but ye are all one in Christ." There's equality for you—how can it be expressed more strongly? Because a woman is taught to respect her husband—because she was forbidden to habitually speak in public, or to interfere with matters which it was man's business to attend to, it does not follow that when God fitted her for any work, she was denied the privilege of using her gifts. Anna was allowed to prophesy in the temple as well as Simon, and Paul commends several women for their efficiency in teaching the Word.

His prohibition of a woman's prophesying or praying with her head uncovered is certainly an acknowledgement of her right to do so under proper regulations. He does not claim that she is of less importance than man, but that she is and should be more modest, hence he desires her to be vailed, in accordance with the Orienta customs on appearing in public.

The Bible gives to woman a position of delicacy and also of dignity, while it admonishes her to act with becoming modesty and self-respect. Surely she must be very far "out of her sphere" who finds fault with its perfect consistency.

Watching for Souls.

Clemens Alexandrinus has preserved a beautiful incident in the life of John the Apostle, which has so many lessons for Sunday-school teachers that we cannot forbear giving it nearly as we find it by Tholuck. On his return from Patmos to Ephesus, he visited the neighboring regions, to ordain bishops and organize churches. In one city near Ephesus, while exhorting and confirming the brethren, he noticed a handsome, spirited young man, to whom he felt himself greatly drawn. Turning to the bishop, he said: "I commit him to you, before Christ and the congregation, who are witnesses of my heartfelt earnestness." The elder received the young man, promised to do all in his power, and John, at parting, repeated the same charge. The bishop took him home, educated him, and finally baptized him. After he had given him the seal of the Lord, however, he abated in his solicitude and watchfulness. The young man fell into bad company, became extravagant, and step by step he was led away, until he was led into robbery, rushing into destruction like a spirited steed when frightened from the path. Finding himself liable to punishment, he became an outlaw, organized a band of robbers, and committed the worst crimes.

Some time after, John visited the city, and, after attending to all other matters, said: "Well, bishop, restore the pledge which the Savior and I entrusted to thee before the congregation. I demand that young man, and the soul of my brother."

"The old man sighed heavily, and replied: "He is dead."

"Dead?" said the apostle, "in what way did he die?"

"He is dead to God," answered the elder; he became godless, and finally a robber. He is no longer in the church, but with his fellows, holds the fastness of a mountain."

When John heard this he rent his clothes, and smote his head with a loud cry, saying: "To what a keeper have I committed my brother's soul."

Taking horse and guide he hurried to the spot where the band of robbers was to be found. When the outguard seizes him" he cries out: "I have come for this very purpose. Take me to your captain."

The captain, completely armed, and waiting to see the prisoner, is so startled on recognizing John, that he flees, from a sense of shame and remorse, but the venerable apostle hastens after him, crying: "Why, my child, do you flee from me, your father, an unarmed old man? Have compassion on me, my child: do not be afraid. You have yet a hope of life, Stop!"

With such like entreaty he stops him. The young man weeps bitterly, hiding his guilty right hand. But John gets the hand and kisses it, leads him to the church, labors with him with fasting and prayer, until he is able to restore him to the church.

How few teachers fall in love with a soul as John did! How many neglect to care for their pupils after they have made a profession of Christ! Alas! how few will follow the wayward one, as the Beloved Disciple did, into the very jaws of hell! Perhaps the day is coming when a greater than John shall ask us to restore the pledge of a soul intrusted to us.—Sel.

"The Signs of the Times."

The Reformed Presbyterians have on the occasions of their annual assemblies, a regular committee on "The Signs of the Times." Their assembly met here last week, and this committee made its report, of which the following is an abstract:

The committee on the Signs of the Times would respectfully report:

The Lord reigneth. He is executing the purpose of his heart with reference to our world, in his providential rule of it. Upon a glorious, high throne Immanuel sits, directing all things to the issues contemplated in Eternal counsels.

1. We behold a shocking, alarming destruction of human life by outright murder and assassination, and by the carelessness of builders and public carriers, etc.

2. A dreadful prevalence of drunkenness and all the causes which lead to impurity and divorce.

3. A wide-spread prevalence of the disregard of those civil laws which have a reference to moral conduct.

4. Our day witnesses a more thoroughly organized, and bold and persistent opposition to Christianity in all its ramifications.

5. We witness the persistent attempts of Romanism to establish itself more firmly in our land.

6. These are times of agitation in the church—agitation upon matters that seem to affect our vital interests.

7. A lowering of the tone of Christian consistency.

8. The advancement of the kingdom of our Lord Jesus Christ.

9. We behold progress in the effort to move our nation to an acknowledgment of its proper relations to God.

10. The church of God in her various branches is coming together.

Now our puzzles in contemplating this long array of "signs," are two in number, but one in kind. First, when we look at the preamble of this report and see the joyous and cheerful sentiment with which it begins, and then glance down at the doleful signs that follow, we are astonished; and second when we have read the first seven signs which seem to intimate that everything is going to destruction, and then read the eighth sign, which asserts that "Christ's kingdom is advancing," we are fairly astounded. If the subject were not so solemn, these palpable contradictions would be amusing. As they are, they are terribly perplexing, and we wish the committee would make another report and show how to harmonize its conflicting signs, for we are sure we cannot "discern" them without their exposition.—Pittsburgh Leader, May 25, '73.

What Is Dying?

A secular paper reports Beecher as saying concerning the death of the saints:

"Dying is going, home, not to supineness, not Oriental luxury, but to supreme activity, where every part is developed and cultured in the realm of love. Bless God for the privilege of dying.

A disembodied immortal to be "developed and cultured," in "every part," after emigrating to a distant "home," indicates imperfection in immortality. Where is dying spoken of in the Bible as going home, except to man's long home, the grave, causing the mourners to go about the streets?" Why should we bless God for the privilege of falling into the hands of the enemy death? Should we not rather give thanks for "the gift of God," which is eternal life through Jesus Christ our Lord?—Sel.

HAST thou not made a hedge about him?" Satan's observation and reflection with regard to a good man and God's care of him.

ILL nature is a contradiction to the laws of providence and the interest of mankind. It is a punishment no less than a fault to those who have it.

The Christian Life.

Prayers I Dont Like.

I do not like to hear him pray,
On bended knees, about an hour,
For grace to spend aright the day,
Who knows his neighbor has no flour.
I'd rather see him go to mill,
And buy the luckless brother bread,
And see his children eat their fill,
And laugh beneath their humble shed.

I do not like to hear him pray,
"Let blessings on the widow be,"
Who never seeks her home to say,
"If want o'ertakes you, come to me,"
I hate the prayer, so loud and long,
That's offered for the orphan's weal,
By him who sees him crushed by wrong,
And only with the lips doth feel.

I do not like to her pray,
With jeweled ear and silken dress,
Whose washerwoman toils all day,
And then is asked "to work for less."
Such pious shavers I despise!
With folded hands and face demure,
They lift to heaven their "angel eyes,"
Then steal the earnings of the poor.

I do not like such soulless prayers;
If wrong, I hope to be forgiven;
No angel's, wing them upward bears—
They're lost a million miles from heaven.

Feed Yourself.

An "Old Divine," writing to ministers, gives them this good advice: "Let the scriptures teach you; and not you the scriptures. Be sure you feed yourself; or it will do little good, and you none. Take these four canons to find out what to say: 1. The scriptures unbiased. 2. The thoughts and experiences of good men. 3. Your own experience. 4. The condition of the people. Beware of forms, nor be tied to one way. Divide observationally, textually, and doctrinally. Be always on the subject next to your heart. Let there be something in every sermon to draw sinners to Christ.

Bless, and Curse Not.

A bad, passionate man was one morning swearing at his wife, when his little girl of five years old came into the room and said, "Mother! I know my text; let me make haste to school."

"What is the text, my dear?" said the poor mother, wishing to keep her child from hearing the oaths of the father.

"Bless, and curse not," said the little girl, putting up her rosy mouth to her father for a kiss as she finished the words.

The tears came into the man's eyes as the child departed. All that day "Bless, and curse not" rang in his ears. He became a changed man from that time. God had spoken by the mouth of a little child.

Be Cordial.

The necessity of cordiality in a church is thus set forth by Dr. Hall in the Christian Intelligencer:

"You enter a church on the Sabbath forenoon with a timid, hesitating step; are gravely, civilly scrutinized by the sexton, who, you feel, is taking your measure and estimating your social position. The worshipers pass you as if you were a post. They do not jostle you, nor yet notice you; they are not rude, but severely let you alone.

"You sit in the pew near other worshipers in body, but remote enough from them as far as sympathy is concerned. One or two children see you furtively, and a casual adult may, perhaps, suggest to you the propriety of your explaining how you came to be there, but you are no further noticed; and when the minister pronounces the blessing, you do not feel as if you had any right to appropriate any part of it to yourself.

"Many quiet respectable churches have this spirit. It is hard to say who is responsible for it, or for correcting it. But it is no help. It chills those who had a little warmth, and it keeps out those who are a little cold. It is as effective against the approach of the poor as a notice against trespassers. And while persons who value the church as a social elevator may go and help to work the refrigerating machine, some 'respectable' persons who want a little religion, as such, will keep away. For the sake of every lawful purpose of a church, all men should keep this spirit out. The sexton should look pleasant, and find a stranger a seat as if he expected him. Bibles and hymn-books should be handed by the nearest worshipers. There would be no harm in the minister praying for those friends who have turned in to worship; and if a pleasant nod came as the hymn-book is returned, as much as to say, 'Glad to see you—hope you'll come again,' it would eke out even a poor sermon, and send the 'casual' away with a good impression. A church may have a spirit that welcomes or a spirit that repels the people, but surely the Bride is to say, 'Come.'"

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

AT HOME.

—Brigham Young says that any of his wives can leave him any day they wish.

—Grasshoppers in immense numbers have attacked the growing wheat and corn of Kossuth, Osceola, O'Brien, and Clay Counties, in Iowa, and have desolated the fields.

—The officials of the leading railways centering in Chicago finally signed the agreement abolishing the free-pass system. No more free passes, except to their own employers, will be issued by any of these roads after June 30.

—The 23rd was the warmest day this summer in Chicago—94 degrees in the shade at noon; but there is a refreshing breeze from the southwest. Physicians assure us that there is but little sickness in town compared with previous seasons.

—The forest fires in Northern Michigan have been extinguished by soaking showers. Upward of forty persons were burned, and many drowned in the lake at Michigammi while trying to escape from the flames. The sufferers are well cared for. Supplies are pouring in from all quarters.

—Seven car-loads of Mormon recruits from Europe, are now on their way westward for Utah. This is the first lot of several thousands of new dupes that Brigham Young's missionaries have picked up in the Old World during the past year, and who are to be transferred to the imaginary Eden west of the rocky mountains this summer.

—The cholera has reached Paducah Ky, when there were six deaths (June 21st.) out of forty cases. There were thirty-three deaths the same day and twenty-four the next in Memphis Tennessee nearly all of them from cholera. This is the largest mortality since the epidemic of 1866, and consequently the city is in a bad fright.

—The monster steamship, Great Eastern, is now on her way across the Atlantic laying the new ocean telegraph cable between the British coast and Newfoundland, on this side. This cable will take the place of the one laid in 1865, which is disabled, and which the Great Eastern will take up for repairs on her return trip. The big steamer has two smaller steamers to assist her in the work.

—Chicago's public officials are now doing their very utmost toward cleaning the streets and alleys and deodorizing offensive gutters compools, etc. If all citizens will second their efforts and co-operate with them by keeping their private premises clean, Chicago will be able to keep off the cholera. Clean houses and clean streets and alleys will give us a healthy city in any event.

—Something very much like a tornado swept through Chicago on Sunday the 22nd of June, doing considerable damage. It came from the southwest and passed [illegible] through the city in a northeasterly direction. Its track can readily be traced by numerous fallen trees and injured buildings in the West and North Divisions. The South Side seemed to have escaped entirely.

—Michigammi, a minin settlement of 800 inhabitants on the shore of Lake Superior, took fire Thursday from the burning woods which surrounded it, and was destroyed. The people to save their lives sought refuge in the lake, but a number were overtaken by the flames; eight bodies have been found, and more are known to have perished. To add to the sorrowful plight of the people, they are cut off from communication by rail and telegraph, as the great heat has warped the rails and burned down the wires.

Some little time since it was announced in the Journal that an extensive religious movement had been inaugurated in this city, having for its doctrine a firm belief in the special power of the Holy Ghost to lead sinners to repentance and make saints more holy, as in the days of the Apostles. The movement gained ground so rapidly last winter that it became exceedingly strong, and it now embraces Christians of several denominations and men of wealth and influence, who are fostering it in the hope of bringing about a more spiritualized state of religion in all the churches. After a few weeks' rest, in which the interests of the movement have not languished, a handsome tent, capable of holding nearly a thousand people, has been erected on the vacant lot at the corner of West Randolph and Ada streets, near Union Park, and convenient to the street car and 'bus lines, where at the usual hours of worship, and on week day evenings and Sundays, services will be held, in which all denominations of Christians and the public are invited to participate. The Rev. Mr. Kinman, an evangelist of high reputation, will conduct the meetings.

—There were 72 deaths from cholera in Nashville Ten. June 21—and 19 the 24th. The Mayor has issued the following proclamation:

MAYOR'S OFFICE, June 21, 1873.

To all whom it may concern:

In pursuance to resolutions adopted by the sanitary Board of Physicians, I hereby proclaim and make known:

FIRST—That from and after Monday, the 23rd inst., the sale or use of all kinds of vegetables, berries, and fruits of every kind whatsoever, except onions, tomatoes, and old mealy Irish potatoes, also all kinds of fresh fish, are prohibited and interdicted, either in the market house or anywhere within the city. Any person found with such articles, and offering them for sale, until further notice, will have them seized wherever found and destroyed by the City Marshal or any of the police.

SECOND—That until further notice citizens are interdicted from the further cleansing of privies, except as is set forth and recommended by the Sanitary Board of Physicians in their resolutions, and that each and every one will at once attend to and strictly adhere to the request in said resolution in useing disinfectants.

I earnestly appeal to the good, common-sense of all kinds and classes of our citizens to strictly adhere to the requests made of them, and to cease and abstain from eating any fruits or vegetables, except those designated by the Sanitary Board.

Our city is, as you are aware, now undergoing probably one of the greatest scourges from cholera that it has ever passed through, and unless we shall act wise and prudently, and be careful of what, and how much we eat there is no telling when we may see the end of the disease.

Very respectfully,
THOMAS A. KERCHEVAL, Mayor.

The Emperor is one of the oldest reigning sovereigns of Europe, and news of this character is not surprising.

—The Khedive of Egypt has purchased his independence of the Sultan of Turkey on the easiest possible terms. In case Turkey is invaded, he is to furnish 150,000 troops for the Sultan's defense. Notwithstanding that the Khedive has many accomplished foreign officers in his service, his troops would scarcely prove formidable in resisting the advance of a Russian army.

Quarterly Conference Report.

The third quarterly conference of the North Mo., and Southern Iowa A. C. district met June 1, at 1 p. m., at Bethlehem, Br. Folsom in the chair. On motion A A Davis was elected Clerk pro tem., and Br. Clark Gurnea was elected Clerk to fill vacancy.

Application of the Spring Valley church to be admitted into the conference was accepted.

The Carmel church was represented by Br. James Barnes, as being in a prosperous condition.

Voted to change the annual conference from Missouri to Ridle S. H., Decatur Co., Iowa.

Adjourned to call of the chair.

Preaching at 3 p. m., by J. F. Adair, from 2 Tim. 2:15, showing the necessity of studying the Word in order to be approved of God, and was followed by S. Grover and A. A. Davis.

Sabbath, met at 10 a. m., and had a good meeting. Quite a good many spoke in honor of the cause of Christ, and were looking for the Bridegroom soon to come.

Preaching at 11 a. m., by Br. S. Baldwin, from Rev. 10:1. Subject well handled. At 4 p. m., by Br. J. F. Adair, from Ps. 8:4, bringing forward man in his creation, in his present state, and what he is to be in the future. Also in the evening, by Br. Adair, from John 3:3-5, showing the difference between the two births, the second to be at the resurrection instead of at conversion.

Interest good, considering the rainy weather, and it is hoped that seed has been sown that will bring forth much fruit to the glory of God.

Report of the A. C. Conference of Central Ill.

The conference met on May 31, at 9 o'clock and organized, and proceeded to choose officers for the ensuing year, which resulted as follows: G. W. Hurd, President; J. G. Bush, Vice President; O. D. Gibson, Secretary.

Next was the report from the churches, which were quite poorly represented.

Clayton.—No regular preaching, yet a few are holding on.

Denver.—All is peace and harmony. Have regular preaching twice a month by Br. Hurd, who is of good report in the community. Some twenty or so added to the church, others yet to be baptised.

Mt. Pleasant.—Church is harmonious and strong in the faith. Preaching once a month. Six have been baptised and seven added to the body.

Winchester.—Owing to removals and other causes, we number but few; yet we are holding on. Keep up meeting, yet have no regular preaching.

Other churches were heard from, but had no regular report.

J. S. Bush.—Have no regular appointments, yet go out occasionally as circumstances permit.

G. W. Hurd.—Have regular appointments four Sundays in each month, at five different points. Have held several protracted efforts, and seen some good. Have no definite time, yet the Lord is at hand.

L. Scott.—Since last August have had no regular appointments. Visited Scott and Macoupin counties, also some new fields near home, found some in the faith. Hope to do more the year to come. As a people we lack zeal in proportion to our knowledge.

O. D. Gibson.—Have but one regular appointment. My labors are mostly missionary in new and destitute fields. Have seen some good results. Two or more, I think, will enter our ranks as laborers in word and doctrine.

H. M. Wheeler, (by letter).—I am old and feeble, yet am doing a little as I can find opportunity. Wish there might be more done in this county, as there are many inquiring minds.

The following resolution was then introduced and adopted.

Inasmuch as certain parties are circulating a report to the effect that Dr. J. C. Bywater was unjustly dealt with and finally expelled from this conference upon charges that had been previously examined and adjusted or settled. Therefore we as a conference, deem it proper to say that Dr. J. C. Bywater was tried at Clayton, Sept. 24, 1870 upon ne charges, after being duly notified, and he refused to attend said trial, it was proceeded with, and the charges being fully sustained, we were compelled to withdraw fellowship from him.

It was then voted that we have [illegible]emi-annual conference about the middle of Octob[illegible] Also, that Br. O. D. Gibson act as our e[illegible]gelist the ensuing year, so that a[illegible] des[illegible] or new fields will know to whom [illegible]

O. D. Gibson, Cor. Se[illegible]

From Gershom P. Mattoon.

I wish to tell you a little of my experience, and the reason for my hope that the Lord will soon appear. I was taught all the traditions of the popular sects from my childhood. My father was an earnest Christian from my earliest recollection, and sought to provide all possible means of knowledge for his children.

I have been a member of the Congregationalist and Presbyterian orders for nineteen years, but when I heard the first Advent sermon in '43, it came with power, and demonstration of the Spirit, and the Bible was like a new book to me. The near coming of the Lord, and the earth inheritance has been a fixed truth with me ever since, and I now as fully believe in the sleep of the dead and destruction of the wicked. We have been over two years with a little band of Adventists in St. Johns, but being old and feeble, and more than four miles away, I can not meet with them often.

From Cynthia Benjamin, Clyde, Wayne Co., N. Y.

I am greatly desirous for the prosperity of the paper, and trust that it will thrive until our great Master shall appear; and the time hasteth greatly.

O yes, we are almost there, for now over the hill tops comes plainly the gleam of the morning; how the worn spirit expands, and the dim eye lights up, as we think of seeing home and friends ere long, and I am strong in the belief that I shall be among the number that shall not sleep, but shall put on immortality in a moment. In fact, I believe the Lord hath revealed this much unto me. Now may the Lord strengthen our hearts and our hands, and may we be like the faithful servant he tells of in his Word, watching; every thing in a state of complete preparation. How glorious is our hope. Well may we toil, and suffer persecution, for I reckon "that the sorrows of this present time are not worthy to be compared with the glory that shall be revealed."

From E. S. Burrill, Ashland, Mich.

Have received the tracts and distributed them all. They are doing much good. The truth will prevail in time. Let us all so let our light shine that others may be influenced by our good works to seek for the truth. Let us seek to possess true religion, as well as profess it. Be patient always in well doing, seeking for glory, honor, and immortality. God has promised if we seek we shall find, if we ask we shall receive.

Dear brethren, let us hold fast to our profession, and all will be well when Jesus comes. O that we may be found among the faithful that have part in the first resurrection, on whom the second bath hath no power.

It has only been about one year since I experienced this blessed truth, and to-day I am firm and steadfast. I am a young man of but twenty-three, and have spent most of my past life in the follies of youth, but now rejoicing in the blessed hope of a soon coming Savior to redeem fallen man. Let us be faithful and never forget the duties we owe to our Redeemer.

From Philo Hitchcock.

Within the past few months, I have had occasion to employ a Methodist local preacher, to fill some of my regular appointments, who is by the way, seeking light upon God's Word, and as a preacher will compare favorably with many who have "passed" into a higher sphere of ministerial labor. But he is minus that bigoted, intolerant spirit that characterizes many whose disposition savors more of popery than of Christianity, and who say they are Jews and are not. And he also possesses some of the spirit that calls no man master but Christ.

Well, they have just held a quarterly conference, and have passed a resolution that "no local preacher within the bounds of said conference shall preach or fill appointments for the Adventists." Well, they must have a sandy foundation to be so afraid of their cause as that. I had rather have a position that is fortified by God's eternal truth, whose foundation rests upon the pillars from God's throne. No wonder that the cause sustained by human creeds is so cowardly, for the Christ they profess to love, is robbed of his crown and glory as a life giver, and another takes his place.

May God dispel the gloom of priestly rule, and give the captives liberty and truth.

Fr[illegible] W. S. Corey, Spavinaw, Benton County [illegible]

[illegible] have taken your paper nearly a year, but [illegible] not a member of the faith until about [illegible]e weeks ago. Through the influence of [illegible]ruth and exhortation of Br. J. H. May, [illegible]fe and myself were baptized in hope of [illegible] coming kingdom, and of sharing in its [illegible]

[illegible]e been delaying for some time, tempted [illegible]a, but at last resolved that inasmuch as [illegible] answer for myself I would act for my[illegible]nd I have seen more satisfaction and en[illegible]ent than ever before. I love to contem[illegible]ate upon heavenly things with the brethren. We have a good house of worship, and eighteen or twenty members, a small Sunday school, which will no doubt be a great benefit. Brethren, pray for us. We know the time is short, and are trying so to live that we can say, "come Lord Jesus, come quickly." We expect to receive our reward when Christ comes and not before; for the Psalmist tells us the "meek shall inherit the earth," "when the wicked are cut off." Our opposers tell us that the meek inherit the earth now, but surely the wicked inherit the most of it. Members of other churches call us "soul-sleepers," and do not want us in their houses; we pray for them, and hope they will do better.

I heard one old Baptist preacher say that the "Baptist church was the everlasting kingdom that would break in pieces all other kingdoms, and that soon."

Let us pray that we may be admitted into Christ's kingdom, is my prayer.

From W. C. Hicks, Brockway Centre, Mich.

Brethren, in my last I promised to give you some items of my labors since I came to this shore. When I arrived here, early in the spring, I went to work immediately with my dear Br. George Wright. It was under his earnest preaching that I received the truth, and, through it, brought to a knowledge of Jesus; when I did not confer with mortal man, but entered with him immediately into the gospel ministry to win souls to Christ. Shortly after, I removed to another part of the State, where I have been laboring for nearly two years; and now it seems like old times to be with him once more, shoulder to shoulder in the blessed cause. I had not been here long when we concluded, in the name of the Lord, to open meetings in Lexington. Br. Wright had been preaching for about nine months, on every Sunday evening in a hall some friends had hired for the purpose, and so the way was open for a rally on the powers of darkness. Our dear Br. Payton, of Almont, put in an appearance the second week, and with the blessing of God from the first to the last we labored together in harmony for six weeks. There were some blessed conversions in this meeting; it was blessed to hear them tell of the peace they had found in believing. Br. Wright baptised quite a number and brought a church of twenty-four members together; they have proceeded to build a chapel which, if they take hold of with a right good will, will be finished this fall. This effort has given our cause a permanency in Sanilac county which it never had before. From this place I went to Brockway Centre, where Br. Payton and myself are engaged in an effort. The Lord is abundantly blessing the meeting. In my next I will give you some particulars. The good Lord bless you all and keep you in love until he comes.

From D. O. Amos, Bero, Kan.

"Be kindly, affectionate one to another, with brotherly love."—Paul.

I feel unworthy to write to The Times as a teacher, feeling I should be taught by any of my brethren. I have been in the faith a little over two years, and spending part of that time in Iowa and Kansas with the dear brethren in like precious faith, of a soon coming Redeemer. My heart is filled with sorrow when I find there are some dissenters among the people, that will not claim the name of Advent church for a little difference in the church and the thousand years' millennium. Now, brethren, men are of different minds in the State as regards mortality. Will not all who are in the faith that they will be saved from death by a soon-coming Saviour, whether they claim the name of Adventist or church of God or Restorationist, will we not take each other by the hand and work together? There is a great work to do. Let us work in our faith while it is day. Soon, night cometh, when no, man can work; let brotherly love continue among all that are in the faith. Mark the signs in the heavens and earth. Do we not know, of a surety, that Christ is near—even at the door. The midnight cry is sounding: "Who will be ready to enter into the marriage supper of the Lamb?" Brethren, take heed! Were there not ten virgins that went out to meet the Bridegroom? The wise took oil in their vessels and were ready to enter in.

Who, then, is a faithful and wise servant whom his Lord shall find so doing when he comes. Then let us look for Him every moment, so that we will be ready to enter in at the marriage supper of the Lamb. Brethren, have your lamps trimmed and brightly burning. Let us talk often of our soon deliverance; may not any discord or dissensions arise among the people of like precious faith; may we keep firm in the faith once delivered. Keep an eye steady to that great lighthouse, which is Christ Jesus. He will land our frail bark on the banks of eternal deliverance. Let us not be slothful in business, but fervent in spirit; serving the Lord, rejoicing in hope, patient in tribulation, instant in prayer; distributing to the necessity of saints, given to hospitality.

We are poor out here and need help, and there is a great work to be done. Will the brethren East assist us? There is a good tent in the field, and Br. J. C. Smith is State Evangelist and we need help to carry on the good work. My prayer is that all will work together in brotherly love and in honor, preferring one another.

From A. S. Corey, Plowboy, Kas.

I have read with much satisfaction Br. Sanford's letter to the Adventists of Kansas, informing us of the organization of the conference, and the appointing of a State evangelist to visit the churches and inaugurate the proclamation of the coming of the Son of Man. To me this is heart cheering indeed. Seventeen years ago I came to this state from Worcester, Mass., being then a member of the Thomas st., Advent church in that city. I had no doubt that I would meet here brethren of like precious faith, and that Advent ministers had already or soon would occupy this far western field. But in this I was disappointed, having seen and heard only one Adventist preacher in this state. Two years ago Br. Himes sought us out, and made our hearts glad by a welcome visit.

Many times these long years of waiting and trial have I earnestly desired to hear proclaimed the faith I espoused in my boyhood, and to which now in later life I am very much attached.

Now our conference is organized and our missionary in the field, new duties and responsibilities meet us, and call for faithful and energetic action on the part of every Adventist in the state. As Br. Sanford very truly says, "every follower of our soon coming King ought to be a preacher." Let every believer stand up for Jesus. Sore trials will surely come, but stand up manfully for Jesus. Let the poisoned shafts of malice fly thick around, they will fall harmlessly at our feet. We should represent faithfully by word and deed the faith that is in us. To compromise with sin or error will result in spiritual death.

The report of the proceedings at Bero are very encouraging. Undoubtedly much good was accomplished. Now if a general meeting of Adventists could be held at some central point, easy of access, every heart would throb with a new impulse, and every tongue would be loosened to proclaim the glad tidings, "behold he cometh!"

Many of our people here are timid. They hesitate to stand out as an Adventist, for they stand alone! They dread the reproach which is sure to rest upon them, for the words of Jesus are true in their case, "the world has hated me, so it will hate you." It is not pleasant to be hated of men for our hope, and we wonder why it is. It seems strange to us. But think it not strange concerning the fiery trial which is to try you, as though some strange thing hath happened unto you, says the apostle. "Sin is rife and men's hearts are cold." We live in perilous times. The church is asleep and the last great day is stealing rapidly upon us.

From Wallie Catlin, Brodhead, Wis.

I would like to say to the brothers and sisters that love the blessed hope of the gospel, and are waiting for our Lord from heaven, that I am one that is looking for the same Jesus, and hope to gain the same things. I am young in the faith, yet I love the blessed promises and thank God for leading me out of the darkness into the light. With this hope in me, and by God's grace, I am trying to live for Jesus, and I find that it is good to serve God with all our hearts, for we get an hundred-fold more in this present life and in the world to come everlasting life. Let us be faithful over the few things, and, when He comes, he will make us ruler over many.

"Yes, Jesus is coming, for yet a little while, and He that shall come will come, and will not tarry." (Heb. 10:37.)

Although we are the gazing-stock of this world we are heirs with Jesus to the everlasting kingdom, which will be set up when He comes. The world looks on and wonders why we, as a people, talk so much about Jesus and his coming. I can tell them why. It is because we love Him and believe God's Word: "And unto them that look for Him shall he appear the second time without sin unto salvation." (Heb. 9:28.)

The testimony of the two angels on this subject is true, which also said: "Ye men of Galilee, why stand ye gazing into heaven? this same Jesus, which is taken up from you into heaven, shall so come in like manner as ye have seen him go up to heaven." (Acts 1:11.) Then just as sure as those men of Galilee saw Him go up into heaven, he will come back to earth again; and as the clouds received Him out of their sight, the clouds will open and we shall see Him return. It will be the very same Jesus that was baptised of John; that healed the sick; that raised the dead, and comforted the afflicted; yes, the one that loved little children so well. Should we fear and tremble at the thought of His coming to judge the world? No; for ourselves we tremble not, but we tremble for those that are not in a saved condition. O, there is a work for the church to do besides getting herself ready. It is to try to get others to go along with us. Let us try to induce some, at least, to live for the future, and to love His appearing. We love His appearing because we love Him. He is our best friend, and through Him is the only hope of a future life. The thought of His coming soon gives us new courage to fight our way through, to finish our course and have laid up a crown of righteousness which the Lord, the righteous judge, will give at that day.

Then let us love His appearing and walk worthy, and do all we can for the cause and trust in his strength to deliver us from the wrath to come, and may the blessed hope cheer you all, even to the day when hope shall be changed to sight, and the curse removed and the earth filled with the glory of the Lord. O let us put our shoulders to the wheels of salvation and roll the car on until all have heard the truth.

From J. S. Lowrance, Centreville, Leon County, Texas.

Through the kindness of Br J. S. Lawyer, of Cobden, Ill., I enjoy the pleasure now of perusing, every week, a copy of that noble defender of the faith, The Advent Times. And as I see that many of the brethren write to you, I thought I would intrude upon you with a few lines, to let you know my circumstances and my wants. I have, for several years, been a member of the Christian church (commonly called Campbellites), and am now an ordained elder in that church, holding my membership at Dongola, Ill. I am convinced by reading The Times that I believed some things that are contrary to the Word of God, and did not believe many things that are revealed in His divine will. But thanks be to His name that we can have the privilege of learning "the way of the Lord more perfectly." I moved from Illinois last November and settled here in Texas; and, since coming to this country, I have never met with any of my brethren, or any of the Advent brethren. While I was in Illinois I sometimes tried, in my humble way, to preach to my fellow-creatures around me, and exhort them to prepare for the speedy coming of our Lord. But since I came here, and finding none of my brethren, I have not attempted it. And I do not wish to preach unless I can preach the "truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth." I presume that if I was to preach what I now believe, I would not be recognized by my brethren as preaching the truth. I have never had an opportunity of joining the Advent brethren, having never heard one of them preach. Now, what I want to know is this: Have I the right to preach what I now believe, without connecting myself with the Advent brethren? I wish to do all the good I can in the cause of my Master, but do not wish to make a wrong step. I came to Texas with scarcely means enough to commence work, and cannot realize anything from my crop until fall. I expect, then, to be able to assist you some in your noble work. I am very anxious to have some of your tracts to assist me in the study of the Bible, but have not the means now to send for them; but if you could indulge me to send a few by mail I will remunerate you in the fall. There is a great field of labor here for some good brother, and I would be glad if some one would come out here. I think there could soon be a congregation organized.

Note.—Many of our Advent preachers have come out from other denominations; having seen the light they walk by it. All such will feel a sympathy for the brother who penned the above lines, and we doubt not, could they speak personally to him, would say: Obey God, and He who promised to be with his disciples alway, will be with you to the end. If you feel that the commission of this last time has been given to you, "Fear God; give glory to Him for the hour of his judgment is come," go forth in the name and with the Spirit of the Master; proclaim it to a dying world. Let this be your one effort, to gather sheaves for the great harvest-day, and the Lord will take care of all the rest. Time is short; the Lord is at hand, and the cry comes from all quarters, "Come over and help us." May the Lord raise up and send forth laborers everywhere into his vineyard.—[Ed. Times.]

My father was an earnest Christian from my earliest recollection, and sought to provide all possible means of knowledge for his children.

I have been a member of the Congregationalist and Presbyterian orders for nineteen years, but when I heard the first Advent sermon in '43, it came with power, and demonstration of the Spirit, and the Bible was like a new book to me. The near coming of the Lord, and the earth inheritance has been a fixed truth with me ever since, and I now as fully believe in the sleep of the dead and destruction of the wicked. We have been over two years with a little band of Adventists in St. Johns, but being old and feeble, and more than four miles away, I can not meet with them often.

From Cynthia Benjamin, Clyde, Wayne Co., N. Y.

I am greatly desirous for the prosperity of the paper, and trust that it will thrive until our great Master shall appear; and the time hasteth greatly.

O yes, we are almost there, for now over the hill tops comes plainly the gleam of the morning; how the worn spirit expands, and the dim eye lights up, as we think of seeing home and friends ere long, and I am strong in the belief that I shall be among the number that shall not sleep, but shall put on immortality in a moment. In fact, I believe the Lord hath revealed this much unto me. Now may the Lord strengthen our hearts and our hands, and may we be like the faithful servant he tells of in his Word, watching; every thing in a state of complete preparation. How glorious is our hope. Well may we toil, and suffer persecution, for I reckon "that the sorrows of this present time are not worthy to be compared with the glory that shall be revealed."

From E. S. Burrill, Ashland, Mich.

Have received the tracts and distributed them all. They are doing much good. The truth will prevail in time. Let us all so let our light shine that others may be influenced by our good works to seek for the truth. Let us seek to possess true religion, as well as profess it. Be patient always in well doing, seeking for glory, honor, and immortality. God has promised if we seek we shall find, if we ask we shall receive.

Dear brethren, let us hold fast to our profession, and all will be well when Jesus comes. O that we may be found among the faithful that have part in the first resurrection, on whom the second hath hath no power.

It has only been about one year since I experienced this blessed truth, and to-day I am firm and steadfast. I am a young man of but twenty-three, and have spent most of my past life in the follies of youth, but now rejoicing in the blessed hope of a soon coming Savior to redeem fallen man. Let us be faithful and never forget the duties we owe to our Redeemer.

From Philo Hitchcock.

Within the past few months, I have had occasion to employ a Methodist local preacher, to fill some of my regular appointments, who is by the way, seeking light upon God's Word, and as a preacher will compare favorably with many who have "passed" into a higher sphere of ministerial labor. But he is minus that bigoted, intolerant spirit that characterizes many whose disposition savors more of popery than of Christianity, and who say they are Jews and are not. And he also possesses some of the spirit that calls no man master but Christ.

Well, they have just held a quarterly conference, and have passed a resolution that "no local preacher within the bounds of said conference shall preach or fill appointments for the Adventists." Well, they must have a sandy foundation to be so afraid of their cause as that. I had rather have a position that is fortified by God's eternal truth, whose foundation rests upon the pillars from God's throne. No wonder that the cause sustained by human creeds is so cowardly, for the Christ they profess to love, is robbed of his crown and glory as a life giver, and another takes his place.

May God dispel the gloom of priestly rule, and give the captives liberty and truth.

Fr[illegible] W. S. Covey, Spavinaw, Benton County A[illegible]

[illegible] have taken your paper nearly a year, but [illegible] not a member of the faith until about [illegible] weeks ago. Through the influence of [illegible] truth and exhortation of Br. J. H. May, [illegible] and myself were baptized in hope of [illegible] coming kingdom, and of sharing in its [illegible]

[illegible] been delaying for some time, tempted [illegible], but at last resolved that inasmuch as [illegible] answer for myself I would act for my[illegible] I have seen more satisfaction and con[illegible] than ever before. I love to contem[illegible]ate upon heavenly things with the brethren. We have a good house of worship, and eighteen or twenty members, a small Sunday school, which will no doubt be a great benefit. Brethren, pray for us. We know the time is short, and are trying so to live that we can say, "come Lord Jesus, come quickly." We expect to receive our reward when Christ comes and not before; for the Psalmist tells us the "meek shall inherit the earth," "when the wicked are cut off." Our opposers tell us that the meek inherit the earth now, but surely the wicked inherit the most of it. Members of other churches call us "soul-sleepers," and do not want us in their houses; we pray for them, and hope they will do better.

I heard one old Baptist preacher say that the "Baptist church was the everlasting kingdom that would break in pieces all other kingdoms, and that soon."

Let us pray that we may be admitted into Christ's kingdom, is my prayer.

From W. C. Hicks, Brockway Centre, Mich.

Brethren, in my last I promised to give you some items of my labors since I came to this shore. When I arrived here, early in the spring, I went to work immediately with my dear Br. George Wright. It was under his earnest preaching that I received the truth, and, through it, brought to a knowledge of Jesus; when I did not confer with mortal man, but entered with him immediately into the gospel ministry to win souls to Christ. Shortly after, I removed to another part of the State, where I have been laboring for nearly two years; and now it seems like old times to be with him once more, shoulder to shoulder in the blessed cause. I had not been here long when we concluded, in the name of the Lord, to open meetings in Lexington. Br. Wright had been preaching for about nine months, on every Sunday evening in a hall some friends had hired for the purpose, and so the way was open for a rally on the powers of darkness. Our dear Br. Payton, of Almont, put in an appearance the second week, and with the blessing of God from the first to the last we labored together in harmony for six weeks. There were some blessed conversions in this meeting; it was blessed to hear them tell of the peace they had found in believing. Br. Wright baptised quite a number and brought a church of twenty-four members together; they have proceeded to build a chapel which, if they take hold of with a right good will, will be finished this fall. This effort has given our cause a permanency in Sanilac county which it never had before. From this place I went to Brockway Centre, where Br. Payton and myself are engaged in an effort. The Lord is abundantly blessing the meeting. In my next I will give you some particulars. The good Lord bless you all and keep you in love until he comes.

From D. O. Amos, Bero, Kan.

"Be kindly, affectionate one to another, with brotherly love."—PAUL.

I feel unworthy to write to THE TIMES as a teacher, feeling I should be taught by any of my brethren. I have been in the faith a little over two years, and spending part of that time in Iowa and Kansas with the dear brethren in like precious faith, of a soon coming Redeemer. My heart is filled with sorrow when I find there are some dissenters among the people, that will not claim the name of Advent church for a little difference in the church and the thousand years' millennium. Now, brethren, men are of different minds in the State as regards mortality. Will not all who are in the faith that they will be saved from death by a soon-coming Saviour, whether they claim the name of Adventist or church of God or Restorationist, will we not take each other by the hand and work together? There is a great work to do. Let us work in our faith while it is day. Soon, night cometh, when no man can work; let brotherly love continue among all that are in the faith. Mark the signs in the heavens and earth. Do we not know, of a surety, that Christ is near—even at the door. The midnight cry is sounding: "Who will be ready to enter into the marriage supper of the Lamb?" Brethren, take heed! Were there not ten virgins that went out to meet the Bridegroom? The wise took oil in their vessels and were ready to enter in.

Who, then, is a faithful and wise servant whom his Lord shall find so doing when he comes. Then let us look for Him every moment, so that we will be ready to enter in at the marriage supper of the Lamb. Brethren, have your lamps trimmed and brightly burning. Let us talk often of our soon deliverance; may not any discord or discussions arise among the people of like precious faith; may we keep firm in the faith once delivered. Keep an eye steady to that great lighthouse, which is Christ Jesus. He will land our frail bark on the banks of eternal deliverance. Let us not be slothful in business, but fervent in spirit; serving the Lord, rejoicing in hope, patient in tribulation, instant in prayer; distributing to the necessity of saints, given to hospitality.

We are poor out here and need help, and there is a great work to be done. Will the brethren East assist us? There is a good tent in the field, and Br. J. C. Smith is State Evangelist and we need help to carry on the good work. My prayer is that all will work together in brotherly love and in honor, preferring one another.

From A. S. Covey, Plowboy, Kas.

I have read with much satisfaction Br. Sanford's letter to the Adventists of Kansas, informing us of the organization of the conference, and the appointing of a State evangelist to visit the churches and inaugurate the proclamation of the coming of the Son of Man. To me this is heart cheering indeed. Seventeen years ago I came to this state from Worcester, Mass., being then a member of the Thomas st., Advent church in that city. I had no doubt that I would meet here brethren of like precious faith, and that Advent ministers had already or soon would occupy this far western field. But in this I was disappointed, having seen and heard only one Adventist preacher in this state. Two years ago Br. Himes sought us out, and made our hearts glad by a welcome visit.

Many times these long years of waiting and trial have I earnestly desired to hear proclaimed the faith I espoused in my boyhood, and to which now in later life I am very much attached.

Now our conference is organized and our missionary in the field, new duties and responsibilities meet us, and call for faithful and energetic action on the part of every Adventist in the state. As Br. Sanford very truly says, "every follower of our soon coming King ought to be a preacher." Let every believer stand up for Jesus. Sore trials will surely come, but stand up manfully for Jesus. Let the poisoned shafts of malice fly thick around, they will fall harmlessly at our feet. We should represent faithfully by word and deed the faith that is in us. To compromise with sin or error will result in spiritual death.

The report of the proceedings at Bero are very encouraging. Undoubtedly much good was accomplished. Now if a general meeting of Adventists could be held at some central point, easy of access, every heart would throb with a new impulse, and every tongue would be loosened to proclaim the glad tidings, "behold he cometh!"

Many of our people here are timid. They hesitate to stand out as an Adventist, for they stand alone! They dread the reproach which is sure to rest upon them, for the words of Jesus are true in their case, "the world has hated me, so it will hate you." It is not pleasant to be hated of men for our hope, and we wonder why it is. It seems strange to us. But think it not strange concerning the fiery trial which is to try you, as though some strange thing hath happened unto you, says the apostle. "Sin is rife and men's hearts are cold." We live in perilous times. The church is asleep and the last great day is stealing rapidly upon us.

From Wallis Catlin, Brodhead, Wis.

I would like to say to the brothers and sisters that love the blessed hope of the gospel, and are waiting for our Lord from heaven, that I am one that is looking for the same Jesus, and hope to gain the same things. I am young in the faith, yet I love the blessed promises and thank God for leading me out of the darkness into the light. With this hope in me, and by God's grace, I am trying to live for Jesus, and I find that it is good to serve God with all our hearts, for we get an hundred-fold more in this present life and in the world to come everlasting life. Let us be faithful over the few things, and, when He comes, he will make us ruler over many.

"Yes, Jesus is coming, for yet a little while, and He that shall come will come, and will not tarry." (Heb. 10:37.)

Although we are the gazing-stock of this world we are heirs with Jesus to the everlasting kingdom, which will be set up when He comes. The world looks on and wonders why we, as a people, talk so much about Jesus and his coming. I can tell them why. It is because we love Him and believe God's Word: "And unto them that look for Him shall he appear the second time without sin unto salvation." (Heb. 9:28.)

The testimony of the two angels on this subject is true, which also said: "Ye men of Galilee, why stand ye gazing into heaven? this same Jesus, which is taken up from you into heaven, shall so come in like manner as ye have seen him go up to heaven." (Acts 1:11.) Then just as sure as those men of Galilee saw Him go up into heaven, he will come back to earth again; and as the clouds received Him out of their sight, the clouds will open and we shall see Him return. It will be the very same Jesus that was baptized of John; that healed the sick; that raised the dead, and comforted the afflicted; yes, the one that loved little children so well. Should we fear and tremble at the thought of His coming to judge the world? No; for ourselves we tremble not, but we tremble for those that are not in a saved condition. O, there is a work for the church to do besides getting herself ready. It is to try to get others to go along with us. Let us try to induce some, at least, to live for the future, and to love His appearing. We love His appearing because we love Him He is our best friend, and through Him is the only hope of a future life. The thought of His coming soon gives us new courage to fight our way through, to finish our course and have laid up a crown of righteousness which the Lord, the righteous judge, will give at that day.

Then let us love His appearing and walk worthy, and do all we can for the cause and trust in his strength to deliver us from the wrath to come, and may the blessed hope cheer you all, even to the day when hope shall be changed to sight, and the curse removed and the earth filled with the glory of the Lord. O let us put our shoulders to the wheels of salvation and roll the car on until all have heard the truth.

From J. S. Lowrance, Centreville, Leon County, Texas.

Through the kindness of Br J. S. Lawyer, of Cobden, Ill., I enjoy the pleasure now of perusing, every week, a copy of that noble defender of the faith, THE ADVENT TIMES. And as I see that many of the brethren write to you, I thought I would intrude upon you with a few lines, to let you know my circumstances and my wants. I have, for several years, been a member of the Christian church (commonly called Campbellites), and am now an ordained elder in that church, holding my membership at Dongola, Ill. I am convinced by reading THE TIMES that I believed some things that are contrary to the Word of God, and did not believe many things that are revealed in His divine will. But thanks be to His name that we can have the privilege of learning "the way of the Lord more perfectly." I moved from Illinois last November and settled here in Texas; and, since coming to this country, I have never met with any of my brethren, or any of the Advent brethren. While I was in Illinois I sometimes tried, in my humble way, to preach to my fellow-creatures around me, and exhort them to prepare for the speedy coming of our Lord. But since I came here, and finding none of my brethren, I have not attempted it. And I do not wish to preach unless I can preach the "truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth." I presume that if I was to preach what I now believe, I would not be recognized by my brethren as preaching the truth. I have never had an opportunity of joining the Advent brethren, having never heard one of them preach. Now, what I want to know is this: Have I the right to preach what I now believe, without connecting myself with the Advent brethren? I wish to do all the good I can in the cause of my Master, but do not wish to make a wrong step. I came to Texas with scarcely means enough to commence work, and cannot realize anything from my crop until fall. I expect, then, to be able to assist you some in your noble work. I am very anxious to have some of your tracts to assist me in the study of the Bible, but have not the means now to send for them; but if you could indulge me to send a few by mail I will remunerate you in the fall. There is a great field of labor here for some good brother, and I would be glad if some one would come out here. I think there could soon be a congregation organized.

NOTE.—Many of our Advent preachers have come out from other denominations; having seen the light they walk by it. All such will feel a sympathy for the brother who penned the above lines, and we doubt not, could they speak personally to him, would say: Obey God, and He who promised to be with his disciples alway, will be with you to the end. If you feel that the commission of this last time has been given to you, "Fear God; give glory to Him for the hour of his judgment is come," go forth in the name and with the Spirit of the Master; proclaim it to a dying world. Let this be your one effort, to gather sheaves for the great harvest-day, and the Lord will take care of all the rest. Time is short; the Lord is at hand, and the cry comes from all quarters, "Come over and help us." May the Lord raise up and send forth laborers everywhere into his vineyard.—[ED. TIMES.]

From A. R. Munson, Sterling, Whiteside Co., Ill.

I have been a subscriber and reader of THE TIMES for more than six years. It has been a great comfort to me in affliction. It is my teacher and preacher, without it I could not understand my Bible so clearly. This is my first attempt to write a letter for its columns. I am so little gifted in the way of writing, but if it be only a "mite" like the widow's, may the blessed Master say, "she hath done what she could."

I learn by a late issue of THE TIMES that Wm. Sheldon has lost a son. How my heart responds to the tribute paid. Their hearts and home are not the only ones made desolate. We too lost an only son, the sun-light and joy of our home; a[illegible] Rachael, the mothers weep for the[illegible]sing to be comforted beca[illegible]

I went o[illegible] [illegible]ork City just six weeks ago, [illegible]eat a[illegible] [illegible]alth and rest from domestic ca[illegible], hoping much from the change. But when [illegible]d been there a week my boy was taken [illegible]nd in less than a week died. So far from husband and home. What a sad termination for all my bright anticipations. I looked for joy, and "lo, sorrow cometh." What a long sad journey homeward. More than a thousand miles with my baby. But for prayer to God for strength, I must have fallen beneath the blow.

The first night after he died I turned to the Bible for comfort and opened to the 88th Psalm, "O Lord God of my salvation, I have cried day and night before thee." It seemed so appropriate. For Oh, I did plead with God to spare my darling, that I might take him home alive, but my prayer was unanswered. Surely it could not have been for want of faith, for I believe God is omnipotent; it may be I merited the chastisement.

Will some of the dear believers write me some comforting words through THE TIMES. I am as it were shut out from all the world, and audible words of consolation are all silent to me. But O, when the blessed Lord shall come, I shall no longer sit in silence, and in tears mourning for the loved ones sleeping in death's icy arms. Do any of the brethren and sisters ever think how hard it must be for those who are wanting the sense of hearing, but in that great day the deaf shall hear, the dumb shall speak and the lame walk.

I am doing what I can to make ready. I want my lamp trimmed and burning. There is no Adventist church here, and no person to my knowledge, who believes in the doctrine. I have done what I could to introduce THE TIMES, lending to those who would read them, hoping indeed some good seed might be sown, even if it does not spring up until after many days.

This is a place of five or six thousand inhabitants, and I think would afford a large missionary field. I have a dear, kind husband, but, alas, he is one of the careless ones. Who will volunteer their prayers, that he [illegible]y be brought under the banner of light, [illegible] two bright little girls, respectively ten [illegible] six years. We had a dear little girl die [illegible] years ago. It was at that time a friend ([illegible] does not live here now) introduced to [illegible] THE TIMES—then the "Voice of the West." She taught me many things of which I was in the dark, and I shall always bless her as being the first to give me light. She is the wife of an Episcopal bishop, and is acquainted with several persons who are or have been connected with THE TIMES.

In conclusion I would beg an interest in your prayers.

From O. D. Gibson.

I noticed an article in our paper of May 20th, headed "To the age," in which reference is undoubtedly had to an article I wrote not long ago, on the words of Jesus to Martha, Jno. 11:26. The writer asks if the expression "never die" in this text might not as well, from the Greek, read "forever die," making Jesus affirm the believer to remain dead only for a season, and then to rise. Now, I do not know what the Greek will allow in the case, but that change in my mind has two serious objections to encounter. First, the living again, or rising after a season, is thereby asserted of believers only, and is predicated on their believing in Him: thus negatively asserting that those who do not believe in Him will never be raised, which would conflict with the plain and positive assertion of Christ in Jno. 5:29, where all, even those "who have done evil, shall come forth" from their graves. Again, it seemingly destroys the force of the contrasted condition of believers which he is evidently giving. One is in the 25th, the other in the 26th verse. The first is a believer dead, but going to live. The other is alive, and never going to die. Now, the Saviour could not use the words, "dead" and "die" in two senses, when speaking of the same class. It must be the same event, only to the one it had happened, while to the other it was not to happen. Notice, in verse 25, "Here is a believer dead, but going to live." Now it will not do to say this is spiritual death, for then we destroy his being a believer, [illegible] a spiritually dead believer would be as great a contradiction as "the death that never dies," which we sometimes hear about; hence, it must be a believer literally dead and going to literally live again, for Jesus had just declared, "I am the resurrection." But why is this dead believer going to live? This, Christ answers more fully in Jno. 6:39: "And this is the Father's will that sent me, that of all which he hath given me I should lose nothing, but should raise it up again at the last day." We see, then, the why in the case is they are in an enemy's prison and power, but the Father has given them to me and wills that I should not lose them; therefore, I will redeem them from death and ransom them from the power of the grave "in the last day," that they may have everlasting life and not perish. Now, read verse 26th: "Here are some who are not dead, but alive, hence will not have to be made alive." But what is wanting in their case? Simply a change of condition so as to never die, which will be mortality putting on immortality. Here they are a little lower than the angels; then they will be equal unto the angels to die no more, and are the children of God, being the children of the resurrection or its equivalent—a change from corruption to incorruption. So, then, the point from which, or beyond which, the living believer "shall never die" is not any point along the course of time, but is that point when, and where, the dead believer re lives, which Jesus said was at "the last day."

One great truth should always be borne in mind, which is, that life is the great boon of reward; hence, will never be received until the time of reward or rewarding comes, therefore all expressions such as "never die," "never see death," "not die," "live forever," "eternal life," "everlasting life," etc., all refer to that state beyond the day of rewards, when the last enemy shall be destroyed and there shall be no more death. With this view all is clear and harmonious, and harmony is what I love to see.

THE Christian's fellowship with God is rather a habit than a rapture. He is a pilgrim, who has the habit of looking forward to the light before him; he has the habit of not looking back; he has the habit of walking steadily in the way, whatever be the weather, and whatever the road. These are his habits; and the Lord of the way is his Guide, Protector, Friend, and Felicity.—Cecil.

Our Young Folks.

The Little Ones.

A row of little faces by the bed,
A row of little hands upon the spread,
A row of little roguish eyes all closed,
A row of little naked feet exposed.

A gentle mother leads them in their praise,
Teaching their feet to tread in heavenly ways,
And takes this lull in childhood's tiny tide,
The little errors of the day to chide.

No lovelier sight this side of heaven is seen,
And angels hover o'er the group serene;
Instead of odor in a censer swung,
There floats a fragrance of an infant's tongue.

Then tumbling headlong into waiting beds,
Beneath the sheets they hide their timid heads,
Till slumber steals away their idle fears,
And like a peeping bud each face appears.

"Booful."

A gentleman went to see a poor family pinched by poverty. He sent them wood and food, and, what was as good, he showed them his pleasant face.

"This is booful! this is booful!" cried the little boy, warming his cold hands by the stove, which for many days had been as cold as all out doors.

"Are you a man's comed from God?" asked the child, looking up to the gentleman.

"Yes," said he; "God sent me."

"And when you go back, tell him I's glad—I's so glad. Tell him, thank him, ever so many times." The child stood some time with as shining a face as you ever saw.

"Now I's warm, I think of Pete and Lizzie. Maybe I's take them some of my wood God guv us."

"Maybe not," cried his father gruffly.

"Daddy," said the child, struggling to tell his feelings, "Daddy, God give, I give. God good; I be like him. So!"

The child had been a few times to a missionary Sunday School, and there a few little seeds of divine truth dropped into his heart. Nothing, it would seem, favored their growth; yet they sprang up, and the first chance he had he showed the grateful and sympathizing spirit of God's little ones.

The gentleman hunted up Pete and Lizzie, and they, too, had a basket of wood.

I wonder if we, according to our light, are up to this little child?—Child's Paper.

Sorry is not Enough.

"Allen! Where is Allen?"

A moment ago he was playing with his little cart in the yard, hauling dirt to the currant-bushes. I cannot tell how many cartfulls he carried. He was busy as a little man. But Allen was gone. There is his cart.

"Allen! Allen!"

"I's here!" at last said a small voice from the back parlor.

"What are you there for?" asked his mother, opening the door and looking in.

Allen did not answer at first. He was standing in the corner with a pretty sober look on.

"Come out to your little cart," said his mother. "It's waiting for another run."

"I'se not been here long 'nuff," said the little boy.

"What are you here for at all?" asked his mother.

"I punish my own self. I picked some green currants, and they went into my mouth," said Allen.

"Oh! when mother told you not to! Green currants will make my little boy sick," said his mother in a sorry tone.

"You needn't punish me," said Allen; "I punish me my own self."

His mother often put him in the back parlor alone when he had been a naughty boy, and you see he took the same way with himself.

"Are you not sorry for disobeying mother?" she asked Allen.

"I sorry; but sorry is not 'nuff. I punish me. I stay here a good while and have thinks.

Have You Done Anything For Christ?

A lady was teaching a class of ten bright boys in the Sabbath school. They were attentive and thoughtful, but none were Christians. The lesson was, "Showing our love for Christ."

At its close the teacher asked her scholars, one by one, if they had done one single thing for Christ during the week. As she questioned each, some answered sadly, "No," and others shook their heads in silence.

"Not one deed for Christ!" said the teacher, and she looked sadly at the solemn, earnest faces.

A thoughtful boy of thirteen at her side sat a while in silence. Perhaps he was thinking, "I wonder whether any one really loves Christ, if any one tries to please him?" Suddenly he turned his expressive eyes upon his teacher and said, respectively but earnestly, "Miss M——, have you done anything for Christ?" The question was unexpected. Emotion crimsoned her cheek and brought tears to her eyes. At length she controlled herself and said, in broken accents:

"I hope so, John, but I know I have not done what I ought or might have done for him."

That question followed the teacher home. In her closet, upon her bed, she saw that inquiring gaze, and heard that earnest question, "Have you done anything for Jesus?" It seemed as if Christ himself had asked her, "What have you done for me?"

Each day a voice repeated the question, and each Sabbath, as she came before her class an echo came, "What have you done this week for Christ?"

Earnestly, prayerfully, did she strive to heed the warning. More closely did she cling to the Savior, and more faithfully labor to show those dear ones the way. Her prayerful labors were blessed: and now, teacher and pupils rejoice together in a Savior's love.

Teacher, what have you done for Christ to-day?—Morning Star.

A Night in a Station-House.

It was a forlorn sight.

A drunken father, blear-eyed and bloated, to whose hand a child of five years old clung with a tenacious grasp.

"What's this man brought in for?" asked the Chief of Police.

"Disorderly conduct, throwing stones at people, cursing and swearing."

"Very well; put him into the cell. But stop; there's the child!"

The little fellow was an exceptionally beautiful boy. He had grave blue eyes, so large, and so pitiful that their glance appealed to the Chief's stout heart. His complexion, where it was not discolored by dirt and tears, was the finest and fairest. His lips were like cherries. His yellow hair curled thickly over a noble shaped head.

"That man has seen better days," said the Chief to himself. "Come bub, your father must go in the cell. We'll find a place for you somewhere."

"No, no sir; oh, no!" cried the boy in a terrified voice. "I go with papa. Oh! please don't take me from my papa."

"But, child you must. See here, Colbert, you must take the child away."

Easier said than done. The little fellow caught his father's hands, clung to his body, which staggered at his touch, all the time screaming, in heart-breaking tones, that he must, he would go with papa. "L' 'm alone," said the man at last, seeming to come out of his stupor for a moment. Don' you see—he's got nobody but me? L' 'm alone.

I can't allow the child to go into the cell, said the Chief, "but I can't bear to hear his cries. I suppose there's nothing else to do. He must go. Put them in together, Colbert."

So they were put in together in the dark, stifling den, and the door was shut. The little fellow cuddled himself against the half insensible form and laid his head upon his father's bosom. So they slept together.

The faint light looked in through the grimy bars when, on the following morning, the father awoke and bestirred himself. Of course, as is usually the case, he wondered where he was and how he came there. The last thing he remembered, he had gone into a saloon alone and drank a few glasses, and then recollection ceased. Where was his hat? where was his coat? And looking round, he cried out in agony:

"God of heaven, there's little Benny!"

Yes; there was little Benny, the pure, fair child, the idol of a broken-hearted mother. There was little Benny and he had spent the night in this hole.

The man fairly beat his breast as he looked down on that bright, curly head.

"Husband and child both," he muttered bitterly. "Too bad, too bad."

At that moment, the blue eyes of the boy opened. He raised himself in wonder but as he met his father's gaze he smiled like an angel.

"The bad man would put you in here, papa, but I wouldn't let him take me. You didn't know anything, papa, when I found you in the street. You lost your hat—I guess the wind took it—and the boys were all laughing. You was sick; wasn't you, papa? And when the bad man took you off I came, too. Now, let's go home and tell mamma all about it. Let's tell her we was stoled," and the dear, unconscious little fellow laughed merrily over the brilliant idea.

But that father! God help him! His heart was touched as it never was before. He could not speak—he could scarcely think. What was the mother suffering that moment? And this awful sin that had led him into its toils—it never had looked as it looked to him now, within the unsightly cell, the faint light lying on the curls of his innocent boy.

And when they went out, there stood the mother who, half distracted, had been wandering and searching all night. Oh! what a sight for her gentle, loving eyes! With a wild cry she fell upon the neck of the child, and drawing him away, sunk to the floor with him, sobbing as if her heart would break.

Think of the bitter anguish so many good and gentle women are called to endure, and then look in the face of the respectable rumseller and call him a gentleman if you can.—Selected.

To Correspondents.

A. CUSHING.—Where is David Young's address.
MRS. A. BILLINGS.—Your paper was stopped by your post master. Have put your name on the list again.

Job Work.

We are now prepared to do all kinds of job work with despatch, and in a satisfactory manner. Envelopes, Letter-Heads, Note-Heads, Bill-Heads, Cards of all kinds, Circulars, etc., etc. Friends at a distance from printing offices, and often close to them, will do well to get our figures before ordering work elsewhere.

Notices.

Notice.—Postponed.

To avoid interference with other meetings, the Conference at Jeffersonville, will be postponed until Thursday the 3d of July, at which we hope to have a good attendance. N. FIELD.

Book Notices, Etc.

The July number of the PHRENOLOGICAL JOURNAL opens volume 57—certainly a venerable magazine—in a most creditable manner. Readers must find the following among the specially interesting papers, which impart a high value to the number. Salmon P. Chase, with portrait; The Problem of Government, which every politian should read carefully; Sketches from daily Life, illustrated; Creating an Atmosphere; Genius and talent: How to use Phrenology, illustrated; How I gained it; The Shaker problem, a defence; James L. Orr, with portrait; Integrity; Where will you Summer; Compulsory Attendance, a powerful discussion of the educative question. Address S. R. Wells, 389 Broadway, N. Y.

The Great South series of magnificently illustrated articles begins in SCRIBNER'S for July. In the first paper entitled The New Route to the Gulf, Mr. Ed. King gives us graphic descriptions of the movement of the army of emigrants into the great South-west land, and the romantic border life—past and present—of that strange but now rapidly modernizing country. An entertaining illustrated paper on Low Life in Berlin follows this. One of the most interesting magazine articles of the day is Rev. J. A. Reed's defence of Lincoln from the attacks of certain late biographers. Another noteworthy article in this number is Dr. Newell's singular autobiographic paper entitled Recollections of a Restored Lunatic. There are, besides the continuation of Arthur Bonnicastle (in which is chronicled the death of Old Jenks), stories by Adeline Trafton and Mrs. Osgood; a bright little article on Children's Magazines; a remarkable paper by An Orthodox Minister on The Liberty of Protestantism, and poetry by MacDonald, G. P. Lathrop, B. F. Taylor, Miss Annan and others.

In Topics of the Time, Dr. Holland discusses American Morals, Skilled Domestic Service, and Summer Play. In The Old Cabinet we find The Stove that makes its own Twilight, Within and Without, Ideal and Real, Song of a Heathen—sojourning in Galilee, A. D. 32. The book reviews are more than usually full and readable, and the other departments have their customary interest. Bret Harte's new story will begin in the August number.

The SCIENCE OF HEALTH for July is the first of its second year. It is a most practical and useful magazine, devoted to the best interests of the people. This would be a new world of ours, in its conditions, if the avoidable causes of diseases were understood by others as they must be by the readers of this magazine. The July number contains; The Physical needs of a Baby, Are you Cat Footed? Rules for Bathing; Constipation and its Cure; Science and Temperature; How to make lean folks Fat; Graham bread; How to cook Green Peas, New and Old Potatoes, Squashes, Apples, etc; Diseased Liver; Three Theories of Disease; Woman's Dress; with the usual Talks and Answers, making a most valuable number. Address S. R. Wells, 389 Broadway, N. Y.

Obituary.

GRAHAM.—Died, Friday, June 6th, at her residence in Flint, Mich., of cancerous tumor, Mrs. Sophronia Graham. Funeral, Sunday, June 8th.

She looked for the coming of Jesus to bring life and immortality to those that are his. The writer addressed the friends and mourners from these words: "There will be no more death."

Her sickness was long and painful, and all felt that death in her case, was a release and rest. Her last desire seemed to be for all her children, that they might prepare for the coming of Christ, that they may be an unbroken family in the kingdom.

> "When shall the ransomed victors be > Enrobed in immortality?"
> "When Jesus comes."

J. M. SNOOK.

TOOKER.—Died, Sunday, June 15th, at his home in Ypsilanti, Mich., of consumption, Hiram B. Tooker, after a painful illness of several months. Aged 71 years and 6 months.

He came to Ypsilanta about 27 years ago, and has been a lover of the blessed hope, and looking for Jesus since '42 and '43. But death has stepped between and taken him captive. However, his wife sorrows not as those who have no hope, for Jesus will soon come and destroy the captor and release the captive.

Words of comfort by the writer, at his late residence June 17th, from 2 Sam. 14:14. J. M. SNOOK.

Advent Herald, and Crisis please copy.

MACON.—Died in St. Louis, Mo., June, 1873, Elder Napoleon Macon. Aged 60 years.

He was a freedman, pastor of the Advent church in Lowell, a talented and good man. He embraced the Advent faith some years ago, and was one of the fruits of the St. Louis mission among the freedmen. He continued faithful to the end, and died in peace. His death was caused by a fall of earth from an embankment, which mortally crushed him. Dear saint, his memory will be precious to those of us who knew him.

J. V. HIMES.

ALICE E. RATHBUN.

As I expect to visit Minnesota, I would say to those on my route, if any wish me to stop over with them, and will write me, I will try to arrange so to do. My route will be from Mendota to Dubuque, thence to Cedar Falls, and thence north to St. Paul. Shall start, D. V., July 4.
L. F. COLE.

Oneida, Knox Co., Ill.

Grove meeting on the 4th of July, four miles south of Ionia, on the Galesburg road, in Henderson Grove, near Br. Jonas Smith's, commencing at 10½ a. m., and holding over Sunday. Br. William McCullock is expected to be with us to preach the Word.

The Q. M. of the Neponset District is hereby called to meet at this meeting, hence we earnestly request all the churches in this district to send their representatives. Come in the name of the Lord, brethren, and let us have the best of all our quarterlies yet. L. F. COLE, Sec'y.

P. S.—The brethren have thought best not to have the tent at the above meeting. L. F. C.

The Northern Illinois A. C. Conference will hold its annual session during the campmeeting at Wyanet. It is hoped that each church within the bounds of this Conference will send either by delegate or by letter, a full report of the past year. Each minister is expected to be present in person or else report by letter.

Come brethren in the ministry and laity, let us make a united and earnest effort to proclaim to a judgment bound world the good news of our soon coming King.

Any letters for the Conference should be addressed to the Secretary, Wyanet, Bureau Co., Ill. N. W. SPENCER, Prest.
C. C. MARSTON, Sec'y.

The camp meeting of the Northern Illinois Conference will be held at Wyanet, Bureau Co., commencing August 20, and continuing over two Sabbaths.

Wyanet is on the C. B. and Q. R. R.; west from Mendota. Those coming on the I. C. R.R., will change cars at Mendota. Those coming on the C. and R. I. R. R., will change at Burlington Crossing.

The camp ground is a half a mile east from the depot.

It is earnestly hoped that each church will be represented in the tented grove at Wyanet this year. Lumber will be furnished on the ground for making tents, at cost if desired, and free if uninjured. Let there be a general rally from all parts of the conference, and we should rejoice to see tents on the ground from any of our sister conferences. Come one, come all, laymen and ministers, brother and sister, saint and sinner, from this or any other conference. Come praying, come in the spirit of Elijah's God, and come to labor for the salvation of perishing sinners. We hope to see the best camp meeting this year ever held in the State. So mote it be.

A cordial invitation is hereby extended to any minister from abroad who may be desirous of attending the meeting. There will be a hearty welcome accorded to all who come in the spirit of the Master to labor for his glory.

For those who may wish to board on the ground ample provision will be made.
In behalf of Committee,
N. W. SPENCER, Chairman.
C. C. MARSTON, Secretary.

Religious services will be held in the Afton Center Chapel, on the 4th of July, at 10:30 a. m., and 2 p. m. Several ministers from abroad have signified their intention to be present. We invite all who can to meet with us and enjoy a season of social converse and worship. Let all who can, bring provisions, so we can have dinner without leaving the church. Those who come by rail to DeKalb or Waterman Station, if they will write me I will see that they are brought out. We prefer to have them come the day before the 4th.
By order of Committee,
H. G. McCULLOCK.

NEW YORK.

Saratoga Springs; meetings every Sunday in the Lower Town Hall, corner of Broadway and Lake Avenue, at 10:30 a. m. and 7 p. m. Sunday School and Bible class directly after morning service.

Prayer meeting every Thursday eve., at the residence of the pastors, 213 Broadway, nearly opposite Town Hall.

WM. A. & M. L. DURAND.

The Lord willing, one of the series of Time Campmeetings, (as per arrangements at the recent Charlestown Council, and advertised in the "Watchman's Cry,") will be held at Fairport, in the same grove where we held our meeting last year, to commence Sunday, July 6, and continue over the following Sunday.

The evidences for the coming of the Lord Jesus Christ this present year (1873), will be thoroughly canvassed by Brn. Geo. W. Brown, C. C. Barker, S. W. Bishop, Caleb Thompson, J. F. Nickerson, Jones, Wendell, and others.

Come out once more to the woods, dear brethren and sisters, to our feast of tabernacles. We expect a general rally of "all those that love his appearing," and especially of those who believe and those who desire to hear or support the evidences of Jesus' coming this watch—'tis the morning watch!

Let everyone coming to the forest, come prepared for forest emergencies; bring umbrellas, overcoats, overshoes, bedding, and the like, all you need; don't expect to borrow in the woods. Those who desire will arrange to board themselves, but it is recommended to spread a common table thus avoiding confusion.

A large boarding tent will be put up and plain, substantial fare furnished at 50c. per day; transient boarders will be charged 25c. per meal; dinner on Sundays, 50c. Tents can be rented at the following prices per week, freight extra: 24x30, $13; 16x24, $8; 12x17, $4 50; 9x12, $3; 7 or 9x9, $2 50; 14x14, $4 50. Send orders promptly to Br. D. T. Cooper, 70 Mount Hope Avenue, Rochester, N. Y.

Fairport is 10 miles east of Rochester, on the N. Y. C. R. R., (direct) and the campground is 1½ miles north of the depot. Come early and stay through the meeting. Pray for good weather and a profitable time.

Wm. E. Brown, R. C. Brown, South Butler; J. E. Wells, D. T. Cooper, Rochester; A. C. Newell, Darien; C. Pennoyer, Lockport; Silas Hewett, Seneca Falls; E. A. Bowe, LeRoy; J. S. Schoonmaker, Syracuse.

Poetry.

What's the Matter?

[Air—Ring, ring the bell!]

What means the tidings that falls on the ear;
What is the message the watchman doth bear—
Omens are filling the earth and the air—
Rouse up the people—Oh, prepare! Oh, prepare!

Cho. Send out the message, loud let it ring;
This is the anthem the pilgrims will sing.
Loud let it echo o'er mountain and plain;
Jesus is coming, and he's coming to reign!

What makes the nations excited and vexed!
What ai's the people, so sorely perplexed?
Why are they looking for something to come?
Do they see the tokens of the soon coming One?

Cho. Send out the message, etc.

What mean the rumblings of earth all around;
Sea and waves roaring, a terrific sound!
Fire, hail, and tempest, famine and sword;
Is old earth a groaning, and a groaning for her Lord!

Cho. Send out the message, etc.

What ails the devil that he is so spry,
Marshaling his host to the last battle cry!
See how they rally at their leader's call!
Is it not a presage of the usurper's fall?

Cho. Send out the message, etc.

What means the echo that thrills o'er the land?
Legions are marching at Jesus' command!
Shouting and singing in unmeasured strain,
Jesus is coming, and he's coming to reign?

Cho. Send out the message, etc.

Regeneration.

JOHN BOWER.

[The following article is so much to the point and affords so much light on the subject contemplated, that its republication is very desirable. T.]

The doctrine of regeneration as taught in the gospel, is to me a glorious theme. There is such harmony between the natural and the spiritual.

By generation we are the natural children of the first Adam; by regeneration we are the spiritual children of the second Adam, the Lord from heaven. To generate is to beget and bring forth. To regenerate is to rebeget and be born again. The first gives us a natural existence, and is birth of the flesh. The second gives us a spiritual existence and is a spirit birth. In natural generation the child exists in its immature begotten state, and is dependent upon another for its present and future life. It lives because its parent lives. When born it has life in itself. In regeneration we are begotten again. (1 Pet. 1:3.) Of his own will begat he us by the word of truth. (Js. 1:19.) And in our begotten state we are the unmatured sons of God. "Therefore the world knoweth us not, because it knew him not." "And it doth not yet appear what we shall be; but we know that when he shall appear, we shall be like him; for we shall see him as he is." (1 Jn. 3:2.) In this rebegotten state we are dependent upon another, that is, Christ, for present, spiritual, and our future life. As the branch draws its nourishment from the vine, and lives because the vine lives, so, said our Savior, "because I live, ye shall live also." "Our life is hid with Christ in God." "When he who is our life shall appear, then shall we also appear with him in glory." Being born again we shall have life in ourselves, independent, immortal life. "Neither can they die any more; for they are as the angels, and are the children of God, being the children of the resurrection." The first birth gives us a natural body; the second, or birth of the spirit, gives us a spiritual body. There is a natural body and there is a spiritual body. First the natural, afterward the spiritual by the resurrection. (1 Cor. 15:55.) Let us here apply the Savior's figure, "The wind bloweth where it listeth; thou hearest the sound thereof, but canst not tell whence it cometh, or whither it goeth." Did you ever see a converted person to whom that figure could apply? But, say you, it means that the Spirit cometh and goeth as the wind. But why twist it to mean what it does not say? Would it not be far better for us to twist our theories to suit the Word? It reads, "so is every one [not his spirit] that is born of the Spirit." If this figure could not be literally applied to the new birth or resurrection state, then there would be some reason it means what it does not read. Our Savior was the first born from the dead, (Cor. 1:8,) and was declared to be the Son of God, with power according to to the spirit of holiness, by the resurrection from the dead." Christ is the first fruits of the resurrection from the dead. His rising again is a pledge and sample of the resurrection of all the children of God. If we apply the figure to Christ, it is complete. When he was known of the two disciples at Emmans in breaking bread, he vanished out of their sight. He appeared in their midst when the doors were shut, and the disciples were afraid, and supposed him a ghost, (for they had their supposed ghosts then as we have now,) but he said, "It is I, be not afraid, a ghost has not flesh and bones as ye see me have." We are to be as angels, being the children of the resurrection. Angels appear and go away, and who can tell whence they came or whither they go?"

With this view of the regeneration we are not at a loss to know when it begins and where it ends. It begins at conversion. It is then we are begotten by the Word of Truth. We exist in our begotten state, dependent upon Christian life until the resurrection, or its equivalent, a translation, when regeneration will be complete. That will be the time of Zion's travail, and a "nation shall be brought forth at once." The Scriptures reveal two Adams, two covenants, two begettings, two births, two Jerusalems, a paradise lost and a paradise restored. The paradise lost is inherited by the generated family of the first Adam. Paradise restored, or the new earth, will be inherited by a regenerated family out of the first Adam's lost posterity, and Christ at the head, the everlasting Father; "the Father of the everlasting age."

We are sons of God now by adoption in the gospel, "not by works of righteousness which we have done, but according to his own mercy he saved us by the washing of regeneration and renewing of the Holy Spirit." Mark! The washing or baptism is not the regeneration, but is necessary to regeneration, for, if we have been planted (baptised) together in the likeness of his death, we shall be also in the likeness of his resurrection." (Tit. 3:5; Rom. 6:3-5.)

And Jesus said unto them, "Verily, verily I say unto you, that ye which have followed me, in the regeneration when the Son of Man shall sit on the throne of his glory, ye shall also sit upon twelve thrones judging the twelve tribes of Israel. And every one that has forsaken houses, or brethren or sisters, or father or mother, or wife or children, or lands for my name's sake, shall receive an hundred fold, and shall inherit everlasting life." Then regeneration will be complete. The kingdom will be under the whole heavens, and the holy ones, born of the Spirit, will enter and inherit the kingdom prepared for them from the foundation of the world. Glorious day! May it soon come! Amen.

Growth and Purity.

MARTHA TRASK.

I have before me, in the Advocate of Christian Holiness, an article which I feel will do every brother and sister good to read. And if the editor of THE TIMES will give it space in the paper, I will give God all the glory for his wonderful plan of salvation.

"Spiritual acquisition and freedom depend largely on intellectual apprehension of the truth. On this account it is a great pity that so many good people will mix up the different facts of religious doctrine and experience. Large blessings are received, but for want of properly defining them they are frequently lost. Perhaps on no point is there more need of discrimination than that of the relation of growth in grace and entire sanctification. To grow in grace is our bounden duty, and the address is to all who love our Lord in sincerity, whether the new convert or the old soldier of the cross; the justified and regenerate, or those who are cleansed from in-bred sin. Many have a desire for some experience they have not got, but they do not quite understand the unrest of their hearts. They imagine that growth in grace is the thing to gain them satisfaction and rest, and so for this they pray. Did they apprehend the matter fully, they would think of growth in grace only as preparatory to the circumcising which shall take away the irritating cause from their hearts. Growth is initial and incidental, but it does not let the soul, with its remaining native corruption, down into the living blood of Jesus. It does not cleanse, but it apprehends the need of cleansing. We can never grow into the blessing of holiness; no, not as long as wood grows and water runs. The very form and matter of this blessing, and of growth, are different. They are antagonistic, but they are in no wise identical. Look at them: Growth is accretion, addition, development. Entire sanctification or holiness is freedom from foreign matter, clearness, purity, perfectness. From these definitions we see the fatality of confounding growth and entire sanctification. An apple grows—it is not purified. Gold is purified, but it does not grow. But the Christian may grow and be purified also—not with identical experience, but as part of his religious attainments. We grow in knowledge, in addition of the parts of experience, and in heart-size or capacity of experience and usefulness. This may all be before the blessing of holiness is received, or at least the two first; but entire sanctification prepares us for a larger growth than formerly in knowledge, and the facts of experience, and especially in heart-size or capacity. Before the blessing of holiness is received there will be a growth in desire and in apprehension of the beauty of the desired blessing. After the blessing is received the desires largely will take new forms. The prayers for growth in grace now becomes doubly pertinent. It looks after a filling in of God into the whole soul, a baptism of both light and fire. (The light to illuminate, and the fire to warm our cold hearts.) With purity, God is careful to give the filling in also. But in the filling up with blessings there is room for indefinite enlargement afterwards. The cup was cleansed; now it is filled, so that we have the inward glory. Let us grow in grace, but let us not confound with it the work of cleansing, and so cover up and thereby put off the blessing of entire sanctification. Get blessed, brothers and sisters; get blessed in all desirable and needed ways; but be sure and get your heart sanctified, and washed, and purified for a permanent and extraordinary growth in the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ."

I can testify to the truthfulness of the above piece; for I once hungered and thirsted after this fullness of perfect peace, and sought it with tears, but did not get it until I gave myself fully to God, and let him cleanse the cup. And glory be to God, he did fill it, and he has been filling and enlarging my poor heart ever since. He fills my cup to overflowing; and I am fully persuaded that if I did not confess this power, this fullness, this perfect peace, that my heart is filled with, God would take it from me. And I know he does keep me every moment, but I must keep my eyes on Jesus. I can't withdraw my eyes a single moment to look at anybody, or at my own imperfections, for I cannot make one hair white or black. But Jesus paid it all—all to him owe. May God help each one that reads these lines, not only to consecrate their time, talent, soul and body, but their belief. If unbelief keeps you from this great blessing, cast it on Jesus and leave the result with him, and you will be filled with perfect peace. Satan is the author of all doubt and unbelief, and if he can keep us in doubt he has accomplished a very important point. Even while I, in weakness, try to write this, Satan tells me that others can write so much more ably on this point, that I ought to keep still, but he has cheated me long enough, and I will not listen any longer to his lies, but will trust in God to bring strength out of weakness. And may God help us to break loose from all entanglements of Satan, and strike out into deep waters of perfect love and liberty in Christ Jesus, and to God be all the glory.

ONCE a Sabbath school teacher remarked that he who buys the truth makes a good bargain, and inquired if any scholar recollected an instance in Scripture of a bargain.

"I do," replied a boy; "Esau made a bad bargain when he sold his birthright for a mess of pottage."

A second said: "Judas made a bad bargain when he sold his Lord for thirty pieces of silver."

A third boy observed: "Our Lord tells us that he makes a bad bargain who, to gain the whole world, loses his own soul."

A Rule that would not Work.

Several years ago, in the State of Georgia, an excellent brother, who had been for some time "exercising his gifts," was called to a pastorate of the church to which he belonged, and where for years they had acted upon the old idea of not stipulating what salary the pastor should have, but leaving each member to give what he felt like giving—the aggregate amount being always very small. This excellent brotner, who, by the way, is said to be one of the best preachers in Georgia, told the church frankly that if he accepted their call he should give up his plantation and devote his whole time to their service, and that he should expect them not only to stipulate what salary he should receive, but also to pay it promptly. This met with considerable disfavor; but they were anxious to secure the service of so excellent a preacher, and the church finally fixed upon a definite salary, and put the deacons to work to raise it. One brother still refused to put down his name for any given sum, and not wishing the pastor to feel hurt at this, went to him and said:

"I intend to give you something, but I am opposed, on principle, to subscribing any definite sum. I may not be able to pay much; I may fail in my crop, and may not be able to pay anything. But I will give what I feel in my heart at the end of the year to be right."

The pastor pleasantly dismissed the subject, and presently asked the good brother if he would not like to run his plantation for him next year, saying that he wanted to give his whole time to the work of the ministry, and wished to get some reliable man to farm for him.

The face of the good brother brightened as he replied, "That would suit me exactly; I want a place, and your's is one of the best I know."

"Very well," replied the pastor, "I will vacate the first of next month, and you can just move down."

'But upon what terms? What will you give me?"

"Oh, we will settle that at the close of the year; I am not willing to make a definite promise now."

"But that will not suit me. I have a family dependent upon me, and I must know definitely beforehand what I am to get."

"Well, I suppose that would be more agreeable to you; but I cannot tell now what I can pay you—the crop may turn out badly, or the price may be so low I cannot pay you anything. But you just move down; and if you work faithfully, I will give you at the end of the year whatever I feel to be just."

"The excellent brother lost all patience, and replied to this: "You must have a very poor opinion of my judgment if you think I will farm for you on such terms. Did you ever know a man to be fool enough to make a contract with such conditions as you propose?"

"No," replied the pastor, "I never did; but you wanted me to be fool enough to make a contract to serve the church on such terms."

"The brother was fairly caught, and at once hurried off and put his name on the subscription to the pastor's salary for a good sum.

We are glad to say that the faithful honest stand taken by that pastor has brought forth its legitimate fruits, and he has been ever since well supported. Would that churches and pastors generally could learn the proper lesson from this incident.—Religious Herald.

"Thou Hast the Words of Eternal Life."

PHILO HITCHCOCK.

Many of the disciples upon hearing the words of Jesus went back and walked no more with him. They could not understand some of the "hard sayings" uttered by him, and many of them began to leave him. He then said to the twelve, "Will ye also go away?" Peter says, "To whom shall we go; thou has the words of eternal life." There was an acknowledgement of his divine mission. "I am come that ye may have life" is the claim of the Lord Jesus Christ; and the Apostle Paul declares that Jesus Christ "hath abolished death, and brought life and immortality to light through the gospel." Christ, by his resurrection, came into possession of an immortal nature, "being raised from the dead he dieth no more;" after his ascension he also declares that "I am he that liveth, and was dead; behold I am alive for evermore, and have the keys of hell and of death." In this he affirms that he has conquered death in his own person, and also has the "keys" of the dismal house of death. He says, "I can open and no man can shut."

Once more: Paul says, "Ye are dead and your life is hid with Christ in God; and when Christ, who is our life, shall appear, then shall ye also appear with him in glory."

These are the "words of eternal life;" and it is true that Jesus Christ is the only being in the universe of God that can bestow immortal life upon the children of men. And how much more this truth exalts the Son of God than the poetry of modern times? Hear the poet that was doubtless moved to write, but I am sure the Holy Spirit never dictated the theology:

"There is a land immortal,
The beautiful of lands,
Beside the ancient portal
A sentry grimly stands!
He only can undo it
And open wide the door,
And mortals who pass through it
Are mortals never more!

"That glorious land is heaven;
And death the sentry grim;
The Lord has therefore given
The op'ning keys to him.
And ransomed spirits sighing,
And sorrowing for sin,
Do pass the gate in dying,
And freely enter in."

Poetry very good, but theology false. It savors of the old lie in Eden, "Ye shall not surely die." It robs the Crucified of his well-earned glory, and decks the brow of "him that hath the power of death, that is, the devil."

Oh! why is it that Orthodoxy is so afraid to let the blazing light of investigation come in contact with their system? It would open the dark corners of their theology and bring to light its hidden deformites. It would show apostate Christendom and a Christless world a brighter and a more inviting way. It would reveal a truth that would harmonize revelation and nature, and with it would correspond the standard of truth that dwells within the breast of every living being; not that "death is the gate to endless joy or opening key to heaven," but a revolting and cruel foe that "hath invaded earth," and humanity cries out for its destruction. May God hasten the day when error shall forever hide behind the fadeless glory of the truth of God, and when the sons of Adam shall honor their Redeemer by lifting to the breeze of heaven the banner of immortal truth —"Thou hast the words of eternal life."

At Jesus' Feet.

Lord Jesus, life is hard, as thou dost know,
And hours of peace and rest are very rare;
But it is sweet, after the toil and woe,
To nestle close to Thee with thoughts of prayer,
If Thou wilt lay Thy hand upon my head,
I shall arise refreshed and comforted.

Dear Master I am sitting at Thy feet;
I would not miss a look or lose a word;
The hour is very holy when we meet;
I fain would see and hear none but the Lord.
I long to lay aside, joy, grief and fear,
And only know and feel that Thou art near.

Deliver up the Kingdom.

WM. MURPHY.

It is a matter of wonder to many that Christ can, after coming into possession of an everlasting kingdom, over which he is to reign forever, at any time afterwards deliver up the kingdom to the Father. I do not believe that he does. I know that at first sight 1 Cor. 15: 24 seems to teach it. But let us attempt to find out Paul's exact meaning in the text, bearing in mind that he has a Scripture on his mind which he quotes in immediate connection, and we will see that even this verse agrees with the declaration that Christ shall reign over the house of Jacob (the sacred,) forever, and of his kingdom there shall be no end. He certainly cannot do this and yet deliver up the same kingdom to the Father forever. Paul's quotation is from the 110th Psalm, "The Lord [the Father] said to [David's] my Lord [Christ] sit thou on my right hand"—How long?—"Until I make thine enemies thy footstool." The Father puts Christ's enemies under Christ's feet. This makes quite a difference.

The right hand is the second, not the first place. The Father reigns and Christ sits on his right hand; the position of honor next the throne. As Pharoah said to Joseph, "only in the throne shall I be greater than thou." (Gen. 41: 40.) He that reigns, the Father, is he that puts down the enemies. But Christ, at or after his coming, gives something into his Father's hand. What is it? When on earth Christ said: "The Father loveth the Son, and hath given all things into his hand." (John 3: 35.) "All things are delivered unto me of my Father." (Mat. 11: 27.) (Greek Paradothee, the word delivered up in 1 Cor. 15: 24 is the same, Paradidomi.) In Luke 13, the parable of the barren fig tree teaches that something was delivered up to Christ as Mediator for a time: "Let it alone for this year also till I shall dig about it and dung it; and, if it bear fruit, well: if not, after that thou, [not I,] shalt cut it down." A delivering up of the tree first to the Mediator, afterwards of the unfruitful to the owner of the vineyard.

But the word kingdom—this is the stumbling-stone in 1 Cor. 15: 24.

Well, what kingdom is it that is like a net cast in the sea? We take one of many parables for our purpose. Is this the kingdom promised to those that love God, and over which Christ shall reign forever? I think not; only in this way: this is a kingdom full of rebellion, which is delivered for a time to a Mediator or Reconciliator for the purpose of reconciliation, until the long suffering of God shall end, and then the office of Mediator shall cease. His duties shall be done as connected with that office, and the kingdom as it shall be then, is delivered up to the Father. This is at the end. Before Christ reigns in his kingdom, "this kingdom is not of this age," but of the ages to come.

Where is Christ now? Let Paul answer: "But this man, after he had made one sacrifice for sins forever, sat down on the right hand of God; from henceforth expecting till his enemies be made his footstool." (Heb. 10: 12.) He will be at the right hand of God when he comes the second time to earth. "Hereafter shall ye see the Son of man sitting on the right hand of power, and coming in the clouds of heaven," et al. (Mat. 26:64.)

But "when the Son of man shall come in his glory, then shall he sit on the throne of his glory." Then shall he say to some, "Come, ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world." "Hitherto," we imagine him saying, "it has been filled with violence; the violent have taken it by force, and ye, my friends, have been with me in it as strangers and aliens; but now my Father, who has counted those who have spurned my loving offers as his enemies, and he has put them all under my feet, and now you shall reign with me for ever and ever." (Rev. 21: 5.)

Let me conclude with a paraphrase of 1 Cor. 15: 24: Then, at Christ's coming, cometh the end, when Christ shall have delivered up, or over to judgment, or punishment, (see Paradidimo, Greenfield's Lexicon,) the kingdom or world to God, even the Father; when the Father shall have put down all rule and all authority and power. For the Father must reign till he hath put all enemies under the Son's feet....For the Father hath put all things (in his decree) under the feet of his Son. But, when he saith all things are put under him, it is manifest that the Father is excepted who did put all things under the Son. And, when all things shall be subject to the Son, then shall he also himself be subject to the Father, who put all things under him, that God may be all in all.

Christ shall judge the world in righteousness. The Father will beat down his foes before his face and plague them that hate him. "The beast is slain and his body given to the burning flame; afterwards there is given the Son of Man, by the Ancient of Days, dominion, glory, and a kingdom." (Dan. 7.)

Whose Reign is it?

S. K. GIBSON.

For he must reign till he hath put all enemies under his feet. (1 Cor. 15: 25.)

The question is asked, Who it is that shall reign till he shall put all enemies under his feet? One thinks that it is God the Father, another that it is the Son of the Father. What saith the Word? Now we do not doubt the sovereignty of God, and that by him all things exist, and all power is of and from him, but has he not laid help upon One that is mighty? and that one is Christ. "He that honoreth the Father honoreth the Son," and we cannot honor the Father without honoring the Son. "For [because] the Father judgeth no man but hath committed all judgment unto the Son. And hath given him authority to execute judgment also because he is the Son of Man."

We have here a clear and concise statement that God himself does not judge man, but that work he hath committed to the Son. "For this purpose the Son of God was manifested, that he might destroy the works of the devil." Is sin and are sinners the works of the devil? Then Christ is to destroy them, for he came or was manifested to do this very work. From the introduction of sin into the world, Christ was promised to remedy the evil, and "bruise the serpent's head."

The child born and the Son given is just as surely to have the "government upon his shoulders and execute judgment in the earth," as that "a virgin should conceive and bring forth a Son," and Christ literally to appear in the world. (Is. 9: 6,7.) "Upon the throne of David, and upon his kingdom, to order it, and to establish it with judgment and with justice from henceforth, even forever." (Also Jer. 33; 15.)—"I will cause the Branch of righteousness to grow up unto David: and he shall execute judgment and righteousness in the land."

By these texts we learn that Christ is to have judicial power to "order," arrange, plan, to set in order; and to "establish," to adjust, to prepare and to execute with judgment and justice. Now let us inquire, what is he to order and establish? The prophet says, "it," "the kingdom." What is to be done? "Gather out all things that offend." And for this special work, God has given the Son all power in heaven and on earth, "and to execute also, because he is the Son of Man." Can we for a moment suppose that God has given Christ all this power, and made all these promises to him, and about him, and then He himself do all this work, leaving Christ without power, rule or kingdom? Again, Christ is to judge the world. "For we must all appear before the judgment seat of Christ, that every one may receive the things done in the body,....whether it be good or bad." "In the day when God shall judge the secrets of men by Jesus Christ according to my gospel." (Rom. 2: 16.) "He that judgeth is the Lord therefore, judge nothing before the time, until the Lord come." (1 Cor. 4: 5.

Thus the Bible teaches us that the world is not judged until Christ's second advent, and then by him after he comes. "The unjust are reserved unto the day of judgment to be punished," and this cannot occur while Christ is at the right hand of the Father. The dead are not raised until Christ's second advent; and the Lord does not judge dead folks. "The dead small and great shall stand before God." The dead are not raised until the seventh trumpet sounds, and at that time the Lord himself shall descend from heaven, and John the Revelator tells us the kingdoms of this world then become the kingdom of our Lord and his Christ, and at that time the nations are angry, thy wrath is come and the time of the dead that they should be judged, and should give rewards, and destroy those who destroy the earth. (Rev. 11.) Then rewards and punishments are not due prior to judgment and the judgment does not take place prior to the resurrection, and the resurrection does not occur prior to the second advent of Christ. Then Christ will come before the enemies are destroyed, "for every eye shall see him, and they that pierced him."

Once more, we learn that it is at his coming that he sits upon the throne of his glory, and when the kingdoms of this world become his, "who shall judge the quick and the dead at his appearing and his kingdom." (2 Tim. 4: 1.) Here is the appearing judgment (and this includes the resurrection) and the kingdom all occurring at that time. When the Son of Man shall come in his glory and all the holy angels with him, then shall he sit upon the throne of his glory, and before him shall be gathered all nations and he shall separate them.....Then shall the King say to them on his right hand, Come, ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom," and to those on the left, "depart."

Now, here we have the coming of the Lord in his kingdom, and really, are all his enemies destroyed before this? No. For this is the very time for rewards and punishments. And then, who is the executioner but Christ the King? It is the King who says, "Come," and it is the King who says, "depart." Then it is all the work of Christ, and not the Father. "For the Father hath committed all judgment unto the Son and hath given him authority to execute judgment, also because he is the Son of Man." (John 5: 22, 27; also 2 Tim. 4: 1.) "Who shall judge the quick and the dead at his appearing and kingdom." Paul here connects the resurrection, the judgment, the appearing, and the kingdom all together, or at the same time. Is that right? Then it is not right to say that God the Father is the one to reign and destroy all enemies before Christ shall take his throne. (See also 2 Thes. 1.) When the Lord Jesus shall be revealed from heaven, with his mighty angels, in flaming fire, taking vengeance on them that know not God,....who shall be punished." The same one that comes is the one that takes vengeance, and punishes, without any doubt.

God the Father says to the Son, "Ask of me and I shall give thee the heathen for thine inheritance, and the uttermost parts of the earth for thy possessions, thou shalt break them with a rod of iron, thou shalt dash them in pieces as a potter's vessel." (Ps. 2: 8, 9.) This prophecy of David is to be fulfilled by Christ at his coming. He is the man-child who was to "rule the nations with a rod of iron," (Rev. 12: 5,) "and he treadeth the wine press of the fierceness and wrath of Almighty God." (Rev, 19: 15.) It is Christ "that doth judge and make war."

"The Lord cometh with ten thousand of his holy ones to execute judgment," "whose fan is in his hand, and he will thoroughly purge his floor and gather his wheat into the garner," but he will "burn up the chaff with unquenchable fire." (Mat. 3: 12.) It is Christ who follows John; and just as truly is Christ to purge the world, gather the wheat, and burn up the chaff. What need we of further testimony, God's word is true. Christ is to reign until all enemies are destroyed.

"For he must reign till he hath put all enemies under his feet." Now if these words "he" and "his" refer to Christ, it is all in harmony with the above Scripture, but if to God, it is not, and then, the word "till" limits the reign spoken of to the time all enemies are destroyed. But will God ever cease to reign? and Paul does say that Christ will deliver up the kingdom to God the Father, when all rule and authority and power is put down, and he does say that the Son also himself shall be subject unto God. Christ is to have a kingdom, but not until his coming; he is to destroy his enemies; but not until he comes, and Paul very clearly teaches that his reign will close and he will himself become subject unto the Father. Says David, as he looks with true prophetic eye to the reign of Christ, "The Lord saith unto my Lord, Sit thou at my right hand, until I make thine enemies thy footstool." Now, can this mean that Christ is not to leave the throne of his Father until God has destroyed his enemies? I think not; for if so, then much of the Scripture is out of harmony. And I feel it very important that the Scriptures harmonize. Well, the next verse reads, "The Lord shall send the rod of thy strength out of Zion: rule them in the midst of thine enemies." (Ps. 110: 1, 2.)

Paul says, "From henceforth expecting, till his enemies be made his footstool;" which makes the matter clear. Christ, as the promised Lord, and the only begotten of the Father, expects to rule and reign and execute judgment and justice in the earth. Amen.

Ignorant Worshipers.

C. C. M.

There is probably no clearer illustration of the dearth of intelligence among many worshiping communities of negroes at the South than the following extract from a hymn, to be found in a "Colored Folks' Hymn Book," used in South Carolina:

"We's be nearer to de Lord
Den de white folks, and dey knows it;
See de glory gate unbarred—
Walk in darkeys, past de guard!
Bet yer dollar he won't close it!

"Walk in darkeys, troo de gate.
Hark! de kullered angels holler;
Go away, white folks, you're too late!
We's de winnin kuller!' Wait
Till de trumpet blow to foller!

"Halleloojah! tanks to praise!
Long enuff we've borne our crosses;
Now we's de sooperior race,
And, wid Gorramighty's grace,
We's gwine to hebben afore de bosses."

It is certainly an ignorant class of persons that will use such an effusion of poetic nonsense as a praise to him, who seeks to be worshiped "with the spirit," and with the understanding also, but what shall we think of the man or men who composed the hymn? Will they plead ignorance? Then we will say that a man, who has no more intelligent idea of worshiping God than is displayed in this so-called hymn, should never attempt the composition of songs to be sung by the waiting hosts of Zion. Talk about ignorance among the freedmen! What else can be expected so long as such men are their tutors? Let the standard be elevated, and all true and noble minds will seek its level.

The Unpardonable Sin.

E. A. P. GILBERT.

The sin against the Holy Ghost is unpardonable, and those who commit it must suffer the second death. Let us look to the Bible to see what it is, then we can decide whether we are under this great condemnation or not.

Mat. 12:31, 32 says, "All manner of sin and blasphemy shall be forgiven unto men: but the blasphemy against the Holy Ghost shall not be forgiven unto men,....but whosoever speaketh against the Holy Ghost it shall not be forgiven him, neither in this world, neither in the world to come." Knight renders the 31st v., "though every other sin and detraction in men is pardonable their detraction from the Spirit is unpardonable." By reading John 14:26; 15:26; 16:7, 13; Eph. 1:13; 4:30, we see that the Holy Ghost spoken of in Mat., Mk., and Lk. is the Holy Spirit of promise which Peter said should come upon those baptised by water, and calls it the gift of the Holy Ghost. He says, "the promise is unto you and your children, and all that are afar off, even as many as the Lord our God shall call." Acts 2:38, 39. It is the Spirit by which we are sealed unto the day of redemption. In Rom. 8:16, we find it is the Spirit that beareth witness with our spirit that we are the children of God; also in the 26th v., it is given to help our infirmities by making us free from the law of sin and death; 2nd v., or the law in our members, (7:23.) and without this spirit we have no title to the inheritance: "for if any man have not the Spirit of Christ he is none of his. Rom. 8:9. But as many as are led by the Spirit of God, they are the sons of God. v. 14. Paul therefore concludes that if we have the Spirit, we are the children of God, if children, then heirs; heirs of God and joint heirs with Jesus Christ; if so that we suffer with him, that we may be glorified together. If children, what are we heirs to? Jas. 1:5 says, the "kingdom."

We see from the Scriptures how important this spirit is; our salvation depends on our receiving this gift, and being led by it, which we can have by simple faith. Now it is this Spirit against which if any man speak it shall never be forgiven him. But is it alike unpardonable to all? the ignorant as well as those who understand what they say? Paul says, (Heb. 10:26,) "If we sin wilfully after we have received the knowledge of the truth, there remaineth therefore no more sacrifice for sin." The 29th v. says because they have done despite unto the spirit of grace. Heb. 7:1–7, we find Paul speaking of a class who, after having been once enlightened, and tasted of the heavenly gift and made partakers of the Holy Ghost, etc., if such shall fall away, (or sin wilfully,) it shall be impossible to renew them again unto repentance. Ch. 10:18, Now where remission of these (sins and iniquities) there is no more offering for sin. V. 14, For by one offering he hath perfected you, even them that are sanctified. The two last texts show us why they cannot be renewed to repentance or forgiven, there would have to be another sacrifice made. For we find by Rom. 3:25, that Christ was set forth as a propitiation for sins that are past, up to the time of our believing in Christ. Now by turning again to the 12th of Mat., 22–33, we find the reason of Jesus making the remarks about the sin against the Holy Ghost, was, because the Pharisees accused him of casting out devils by beelzebub, the prince of devils. Jesus told them that if he cast out devils by the Spirit of God, then the kingdom of God had come unto them. Mark says, he spake this because the Pharisees said he had an unclean spirit. They attributed to devils the work of the Holy Ghost. The force of his argument seems to be, if any one attribute the influence of the Spirit of God working through themselves or through others, to another power, such as the spirits of the dead, or of devils, or mesmerism, etc., wilfully, they shall have no forgiveness, in this world, or the world to come. We see by Paul that those who commit this sin, must have been enlightened and partakers of the Holy Ghost. Therefore, we see a good reason why they cannot be forgiven; they cannot do it ignorantly, but wilfully, because those who have had the Spirit have had the witness in themselves that it was of God, and if they have grieved that Spirit which they can do, see Eph. 4:30, it will depart from them and leave them in darkness. If they then being ashamed of its influence, or by any other motive, are induced to deny its power, they have committed the sin that is unto death, that cannot be forgiven. 1 John 5:16.

Dear brethren and sisters, beware how you grieve the Holy Spirit of promise if you have received it. Perhaps no one ever committed the unpardonable sin while the Holy Ghost had its abode in them but by grieving it, by commission of wrong, or omission of duty, it takes its flight like a timid dove; then beware, the temptation comes to commit the unpardonable sin. But if you have never felt the witness of peace which this Spirit always brings with it, then do not rest one moment in your present state, but submit, Oh, submit now, your will to God's will, and when you say with all your heart, "Father, not my will but thine be done" in me, and to me, and through me, and with me, and by me, now, henceforth and forever, then you will find that Spirit witnessing with your spirit that you are the child of God by finding peace in believing; that peace that passeth understanding, which the world can neither give nor take away. You will find true, by experience, what John says, "He that believeth hath the witness in himself, and if any man have not this Spirit and the witness and its fruits he is none of his." Oh, hasten, I beseech you, hasten! to secure the witness that you may be an heir of God and joint heir with Jesus Christ to the kingdom which God has promised to them that love him.

"Destruction" the End of the Wicked.

VERNON HOLMES.

This is a solemn subject, and I approach it with feelings due to its gravity. I have no theory of my own to advance concerning it, but wish to show what I plainly conceive to be God's will concerning the final destiny of the wicked.

No declaration is more frequently or more emphatically made in the Bible than the declaration that the "wicked shall be destroyed." Our Saviour says, "Broad is the way that leadeth to destruction." (Mat. 7:13.) "Fear him which is able to destroy both soul and body in hell." (Mat. 10:28.) These assertions being made by him "who spake as never man spake," command our most earnest and serious consideration as to the meaning of the words destruction and destroy, for they denote what is to overtake those who go in the "broad way," and have not "the fear of God before their eyes." The sense of the word destruction, is, according to Webster and all other lexicographers, to "annihilate the form of anything, that form of parts which constitutes it what it is." For instance, a house that is burned down or otherwise demolished, is, as a house, annihilated, though the particles which once constituted it remain as ashes or debris. Now, this is the meaning of the words destruction and destroy by our dictionaries, yet orthodox theologians give to them an exactly contrary meaning in their theology, agreeing with the Websterian definition in all else. Where do they get authority for such a strange and inconsistent variance? When our Saviour speaks of the end of the wicked as the "Second Death," by what rules of interpretation can they construe this to mean "eternal life," which, our Saviour also says, is to be the portion of the righteous only? Is it answered that, because of the assumption that eternal life in hell is an eternity of torment, therefore it is a "second death?" Not so. How can torment be called "second death," when it has no resemblance to the first death? First and second imply an agreement with each other, as first and second man, implies two men, and not one man and one horse. Is there any possible similarity between excruciating torment or the slightest misery and the peaceful "sleep in Jesus?" I think there is no room for doubt here. Well then, can we doubt our Saviour knew what he was saying? Certainly immortal-soulism teaches that he did not mean that God could destroy a soul in hell—Gehenna! The inevitable conclusion is, Orthodoxy is at fault; and the disrelish in its ranks for the idea of annihilation, and the spiteful, scornful way in which the term annihilationist is hurled at Adventists amounts to naught. It only argues simplicity of mind or a disposition to cavil to exclaim annihilation to be a philosophical impossibility, as I have shown the destruction of sinners to be their annihilation, as a house is annihilated by fire, or, as a fort or castle is annihilated by being rased.

The "second death" will be like the first death in that the victims of the former shall be in a condition similar to that of the latter, i. e., being and consciousness are totally destroyed. When death has completed his work the most powerful and beautiful human body is reduced to a mere handful of ashes. It is, as a human body, "as though it had not been," and this God most emphatically declares shall be the finality of the wicked: "They shall be ashes under the soles of your feet in the day that I shall do this, saith the Lord of Hosts." (Mal. 4:3.) "For yet a little while and the wicked shall not be." (Ps. 37:10.) Why should hell exist since "the wicked shall not be?" They shall be destroyed from the presence of the Lord in the fire at the last day. This is the Bible hell, and, consequently, the truth of the matter; such poets as Bailey and metaphysical writers like Swedenborg to the contrary notwithstanding, who would have us infer that the Bible means that the principle of wickedness only is to be destroyed. Bailey closes his magnificent Festus with the devil restored to his pristine condition! I have only to say that, if the Bible is a book which "he who runs may read," then it is not such a book as writers like the above would have us believe it to be.

I know our orthodox friends infer the immortality of the soul, and consequently, eternal torment to the damned, from the parable of the Rich Man and Lazarus, and the reply by our Saviour to the thief on the cross, and from a few other passages of Scripture, but they are inferences only. I feel assured that, if they will investigate these seemingly hidden parts of the Bible with all the light attainable from any and every source, they must and will conclude in favor of the exposition put upon them by the advocates of the Advent or pure Hebrew faith—such as Martha possessed who, when Jesus told her "Thy brother shall rise again," replied "I know that he shall rise again in the resurrection at the last day." She evidently believed her brother was then in the grave and not in paradise or the "spirit land," as the Pharisees taught, and of which teaching the Saviour warns us.

"And the day cometh that shall burn them up, saith the Lord of Hosts, that it shall leave them neither root nor branch!" What a complete and awful destruction is here declared of them that do wickedly by Jehovah himself! Now, the question is, shall we allow an inference to contradict a plain declaration uttered by One who neither lies nor equivocates, or shall we construe it to harmonize with this passage and the Scriptures throughout; for upwards of 200 texts directly affirm the utter destruction of the wicked. Is there any doubt as to the meaning of the following terms: "They shall not live forever," "They shall die," "Shall perish," "They shall be cut off," "They shall be destroyed," "Shall be consumed," "Shall be burned up root and branch," "Shall be as though they had not been," "The soul that sinneth it shall die," "Shall be banished from the presence of the Lord for ever!" Is eternal hell out of God's presence, or is he not omnipresent, and the Creator and Sustainer of all things? Since God has so often, through the prophets and apostles declared destruction to be the end of the wicked why shall we not believe it? Why the necessity of supposing eternal torment to make out the justice of God when there is not the first principle of justice in it, and when no authority for eternal suffering is to be found in the Bible? Why oppose the destruction of the wicked as repugnant and unjust in that it is merciful, dealing, they say, so kindly with the sinner as to make the Word of God of none effect toward their conversion? I deny the truth of such reasoning in my own case. Since believing "all the wicked will be destroy," my heart has felt a love for him and an interest in his Word that it never knew and could never know under orthodox teachings. I am bound to love him for he has made himself, and his ways concerning my being and destiny so plain and agreeable to my judgment that the very laws of my being impel me to love and to exalt him in the day and in the night season, and to do all in my power to cause others to love him, in which spirit this article is written. Indeed God has "set life and death before us." He says "Choose ye for yourselves," only remember "I have no pleasure in the death of the wicked." How good he is! He has done all he consistently can to cause you to choose a glorious, unending life as your portion! Oh! sinner, why will you die? Turn you, turn you, and your soul shall live. Is the loss of life, unending, glorified life no loss to you? Impossible! no sane man can choose death in preference to such a life sublime! It will add to your discomfiture in the last day, O sinner, to know that your doom will be acquiesced in by all orders of intelligence who will declare God just, and thou an unfeeling reprobate.

It is sad to know that infidelity is so prevalent and apparently steadily on the increase in our land and throughout the world. What is the cause of this? Is it because of ignorance? No, not in the common acceptation of that term are they ignorant who regard the Bible as a mere fable, they are ignorant only in that, as a class, they are proud. They boast of intellect, elegance, and culture. They pride themselves as possessing a superior judgment to those who believe the Bible is the will of God, whom they term as superstitious. Their God is intellect, and they feel themselves above the standard of "mortal man," they possess immortal souls because Greek philosophy says so. But Paul, who was an accomplished and brilliant scholar, was also a Christian, and he tells us to beware of vain philosophy and mere tradition, which warning, if these skeptical people will heed, they may search the Scriptures with a better motive than merely to find fault with God and with men wiser than themselves. They may then perceive that man is "mortal" and that eternal life is the "gift" of God, bestowed by Jesus Christ upon those who are worthy, at the resurrection of the dead, at the end of the world; and so perceiving, the Bible, perhaps now a mass of contradictions and absurdities, will astonish them by its clearness, harmony, and simplicity, as it did the writer. Throw away the heathen doctrine of immortal soulism and all is made clear and straight!

The Christian Life.

The Prayerless Day.

Mrs. Mason was tired; the day's busy cares and perplexities had pressed their labor-soiled fingers upon her comely face, leaving traces of their visits in the wrinkled forehead, the closely set mouth, and the deepened lines about the eyes. Mrs. Mason was preparing for her nightly rest; the last little prattler had long ago been tucked away in the cosy bed; the rosy, crowing baby was sleeping sweetly in the cradle; the work-basket was relieved of its weekly load of patching; and for the first time that busy day, Mrs. Mason was free from the planning and arranging that had all the day long lingered in her active brain.

It had been a long, hard day: this much Mrs. Mason felt both bodily and mentally. Not only had hands and feet been busy, but the burden of house keeping and child watching had pressed home upon her with an unusual weight.

"I have too many cares," she said half aloud; "it is enough to craze any woman; five noisy restless children to look after, and not a soul to lift a finger towards the work but myself; the only wonder is that I bear up beneath the burden so well;" and again Mrs Mason's mental vision reviewed the scenes of the day just dropped into eternity. Alas! now that the hurry and worry and bustle were over, how many acts could she see to deplore; the cross answers to the many questions; the impatient shake given in the ferment of the moment to a restless child: the denial of harmless petitions, and so on to the close.

Mrs. Mason meant to be a faithful, earnest mother; she also meant to be more—a sincere Christian. Her aims were too high, her aspirations too pure, to allow peace and joy to dwell in her breast as she took a retrospect of the last few walking and working hours. This day, she keenly felt, had not been a golden link in the long chain of earthly days that was winding around her mortal life; rather was it a cold, hard, dull link of iron.

"It must not be so to-morrow," was her mental resolve; and as she stepped to the stand to extinguish the light her eyes fell upon a small copy of Thomas a Kempis, "Imitation of Christ." She took the book up half thoughtfully—it was a gift from her mother; yet, although it had lain for nearly a year upon the little stand, very, very few of the ancient meditations had entered Mrs. Mason's understanding.

How could she ever find time to read—she with so much care? As she lightly turned the leaves wishing sadly that she were not too tired to read a few pages, her eyes fell upon these words: "As long as thou livest in this world, thou wilt have need of the whole armor of God."

"The whole armor of God," said Mrs. Mason: "have I worn it to-day?" And quickly her thoughts ran over the inspired words that St. Paul used to describe the panoply that should ever encase the fighting Christian. Mrs. Mason knew them well; she had known them from a child, and as the closing words ran through her mind, her thoughts lingered upon these; "praying always, with all prayer and supplication in the Spirit." "Ah!" said Mrs. Mason, "I see the cause of all this wrong; this has been a day begun without prayer. It's no marvel that I have wandered in a tangled way!"

Ere Mrs. Mason went to her bed, her evening prayer rose to the throne of the Most High, and a new resolve was also taken, that the work of the day should never again be commenced till strength to perform it had been sought from him who giveth, upbraiding not.

Mother, do the days bring you weariness? Are they filled with cares, crosses, anxieties? How is it then with you? Do any prayerless days steal upon you with their blackness, their deformity, marring with their hideousness the fair proportions of your Christian Life?—Mother's Journal.

CHICAGO, TUESDAY, July 8, 1873.

ALL PERSONS in the least interested in seeing the debt of the Association disposed of, that the new society may begin its immediate and important work free and untrammeled, will meet at this office, 25 West Lake Street, on Thursday, July 17th, at 10 a. m. As you love the cause of truth, and desire the loud proclamation of the near approach of the Master, attend this call—letting nothing hinder or delay.

Closet Prayer.

Jesus enjoined it, and his true friends relish it. It is the secret of our success, as ministers, in winning souls to Christ. There we get strength. When we slight the closet we are shorn of our power in the presence of our foes, and become like other men. The Presbyterian inserts the following article from Herrick Johnson, D. D., which is richly worth perusal, and clearly sets this subject in its true light:

Every soul needs a closet. True prayer will find one. It is the instinct of the heart thirsting for God. It is the command of the Master—Enter thy chamber. It is the way trodden by Jesus. "When he had sent the multitudes away, he went up into a mountain apart to pray." "He withdrew himself into the wilderness and prayed." "He continued all night in prayer to God." "Sit ye here while I go and pray yonder."

"Cold mountains and the midnight air Witnessed the fervor of his prayer."

Men are professing to follow Jesus who never think of following him into these solitudes. Men are professing to have found Jesus who, alas! have never found, or at least kept, a closet. The tendency of the age is to outwardness in Christian life—to activities, works, push, stir, doing. God forbid that we should deprecate any true Christian activity. But there is a morbid externalism, which may cut off the very springs and sources of our piety, and leave us smitten with dry rot. The good works may not be done in the spirit of ostentation and with noise of trumpets, "to be seen of men;" but they may be done in such forgetfulness and neglect of inner life, personal holiness, communion with God, as to rob them, however arduous, and however self-denying, of all their efficacy and spiritual power.

There is no blast of trumpets in this duty; it attracts no notice, makes no noise. The closet is a still, hidden place, not seen of men; and its duties are secrets with God. But he who thinks he can accomplish very much for God without this source of supply, has yet to learn the very alphabet of Christian efficiency. The closet is where a believer replenishes his stock. It is the secret place where the culture of personal holiness goes on. He enters in, and opens the sluices of his heart, and asks God to flood them with his spirit. He shuts the door and communes in spirit with Jesus. He leans upon that bosom, weeps his tears there, sobs out his sorrow for sin, gets his "Go in peace" from his forgiving Lord, washes in his blood again, strengthens his faith, catches something more of his Lord's spirit, fortifies his soul, deepens and widens his spiritual experience of grace power; and when he opens that door and comes forth, he is something better, stronger, purer, humbler for that talk with God in the secrecy of an inner chamber.

Hence the unspeakable, indispensable value of frequent solitude for communion with God; not simply for hurried, ejaculatory, or silent petition, but for thoughtful and even protracted prayer, with posture of devotion and audible expression. Mount, desert, closet, still hour, to what uses have these been ordained! How grand spirits have been girded for heroic work by them! What solemn and precious baptisms they have furnished! What preparations for labor and sacrifice and victory! Jacob at the ford Jabbok, Elijah on the mount, Elisha in the chamber with the dead child, "the door shut on them twain," Daniel in the den of beasts, Jeremiah in the court of the prison, Jonah in the belly of hell, Jesus in Gethsemane; it was the closet, the still hour, the talk face to face with God alone, that gave all these their lofty moods, their might with men, their spiritual victories. It is there the soul touches the unfailing fountain of spiritual supply. There the mountain tops are reached that pierce the clouds and bring down fatness.

We have activities enough; the church never so bristled with good works. The busy hum of our ecclesiastical machinery is heard all over the land. Alas! what meager and inadequate results! The activities have been with too great self-sufficiency, and without the sufficiency that is of God. Our works need to be vitalized and surcharged with power from on high. The channels of that power are broken hearts. Hearts get broken in the closet; and there and then they pull down the power. Surely it is the voice of the Master to every disciple this day, "Enter into thy closet and shut thy door."

LONG ISLAND, JACKSON CO., ALA.

Eld. Wm. Sheldon.

DEAR BROTHER:—You have already learned that I have cut loose from the Baptists, and am now fully allied to those of like precious faith, the Second Advent Christians. It was a hard struggle to leave the denomination after nearly 44 years association with them, and 35 of it in the ministry. But I find how pleasant it is to dwell together in unity with those precious waiting ones. While many give me the cold shoulder, many yet treat me kindly. Opposition comes hard from some quarters, but invitations to occupy new fields are continually opening before me. I a[illegible] able to answer all the calls to preach a[illegible] places. I hope some day ere long an e[illegible]at laborer will be sent to aid Br. Cargile [illegible]myself in building up. We begin to ne[illegible] more organization of those of like faith. We are felling, scoring, and hewing the timber, we want the builder to follow us and rear the edifice.

Do you think of ever visiting us again? Can you send one this way on a preaching tour? Will you give the addresses of myself and Br. Cargile an insertion in THE TIMES and request ministers coming this way (I hope the Lord will send them) to correspond with us and call on us.

Will you please send us a few tracts, half a dozen of your work, "Christ's reign on David's throne," one "Faith of St. Paul," and one "Hades and Sheol."

I am yours, in hope of eternal life.

J. J. SMITH.

NOTE.—We will send the books called for, so far as we can obtain them. Can not yet speak positively about visiting Alabama. Our heart is with these ministers in their bold stand for the truth. If we cannot visit them, we will use our influence to have some one go who will help them.

Queries and Replies.

BR. SHELDON:—I have a few questions to ask, and I have as much confidence in your ability to answer them as any man that I know of, consequently I call upon you to favor your brother and all concerned with an answer:

1. Do the Scriptures teach that believers in Christ now-a-days receive a baptism of the Holy Spirit, either before or after being immersed in water?

2. Does the Word of God teach the abstract operation of the Holy Spirit in conversion of the sinner independent of the written word?

3. Does the Word of God teach sinners to pray to God for pardon while they still remain in disobedience to the command to be baptized; or, in other words, do the Scriptures promise pardon to the sinner by prayer?

4. What do some of the brethren, the correspondents of THE TIMES mean when giving a report of their success in the preaching of the Word, say that so many rose for prayers? Do they mean that these sinners wished the Christians to intercede for them at the throne, for God then and there to pardon their sins? I am somewhat puzzled by these things, and am not able to harmonize such things with God's Word, being a babe in Christ. Please answer through the paper, and oblige your brother waiting for that blessed hope.

R. P. JOHNSON.

1. We are not particular whether the term "baptism" or "gift" of the Holy Spirit is used, since they were both accompanied by signs at first and evidently refer to the same thing. Christ, before his ascension, alludes to John's promise of a "baptism" of the Holy Ghost, (Act 1:5,) which was witnessed on the day of pentecost, producing signs and miracles. When Peter preached to the Gentiles, "On the Gentiles also was poured out the gift of the Holy Ghost; for they heard them speak with tongues," etc. (Acts 10: 45.) Here the "gift" of the Holy Spirit as well as its "baptism," was followed by tongues; hence, if the claim so often made, that there can now be no "baptism" of the Holy Spirit without causing its possessor to speak with tongues, is worth anything, it would also prove that there could be no "gift" of the Spirit without producing the same result; yet we hear Peter saying: "Repent and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ, for the remission of sins, and ye shall receive the "gift" of the Holy Ghost. For the promise is unto you and to your children, and unto all that are afar off, even as many as the Lord our God shall call." (Acts 2: 39.) That certainly brings the gift of the Holy Spirit down to our day, even though it once was attended with unknown tongues, in some cases, just as the baptism of the Holy Ghost was. To repudiate the one for the lack of attending miracles, would involve the repudiation of the other.

2. If our brother means to include pardon in the term conversion, we reply God never pardons men with the Bible, but always by his Spirit. The Bible is simply the mind of the Spirit put on record, and is always in agreement with the Spirit; but the Spirit is an agent that existed before the Bible, and continues to exist, and also continues to act, but always in harmony with the word that it dictated. A knowledge of the Word may change the purpose of a man, but it requires the operation of the Spirit to change the character, by pardoning sin. Paul thus refers to the process and principle of changing sinners into saints: "Such were some of you: but ye are washed; but ye are sanctified; but ye are justified [how?] in the name of the Lord Jesus, and by the Spirit of our God." (1 Cor. 7: 11.) This cleansing work, or conversion, or whatever other name may be applied to it, is wrought "by the Spirit of God."

3. God "now commandeth all men everywhere to repent," which cannot be done without prayer; and an angel told the joyful news concerning Paul before his baptism, "Behold he prayeth!" (Acts 9: 11.) We also have this rule laid down: "If we confess our sins, he is faithful and just to forgive us our sins, and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness." (1 John 1: 9) We confess to God by prayer, and we repent by prayer. When dead to sin we are buried in baptism. It is not a good plan to bury men alive to make them die!

4. They mean that so many desired pardon, and solicited prayers to this end. We are to pray for "all men" and certainly for those who especially solicit our prayers.

The Beasts and Elders.

North Fairfield, Hebron Co., Ohio.

BR. SHELDON:—If you please, I would very much like your assistance in the proper understanding of a portion of Scripture found in Revelations 5:8-10, inclusive:

Who or what are these beasts and elders, first introduced in the 4th chapter, and in other places spoken of?

In the 10th verse of 5th chapter, they say: "And we shall reign on the earth."

Your brother searching and striving to live and spread the truth. H. C. SMITH.

Without entering into a full exposition at present, we are satisfied that these beasts and elders symbolize the church and its ministry, which church and ministry are firstly redeemed by the blood of Christ out of every kindred and tongue, and nation, and people, and are finally to "reign on the earth." No other class of intelligences in the vast universe have thus been redeemed out of every nation; hence, there can be no mistake in this application.

In the first place, the elders and beasts are all seen at once, symbolizing the entire church with its ministry. Subsequently, to set forth important particulars, the four beasts are brought to view under the opening of four successive seals—only one beast being seen under any one seal; and thus the different stages and changes in the history of the church are set forth. Our exposition may be found in part second, of the work entitled "Adventism," which is too lengthy to republish in this connection.

Books on Prophecy.

Wellington, Kan.

BR. SHELDON:—Will you tell me what books I want to study the subject of prophecy, Daniel's visions, and John's in Revelations. I want books that will give full information; the names of the governments symbolized by the beasts in Daniel and Revelations; the date of their rise and fall. Where can they be obtained, and what will they cost?

Please answer through the paper and oblige your brother in the "blessed hope."

VIRGIL HUNT.

If you mean by this an examination into the various views of European and American authors, ancient and modern, the works are numerous and costly, requiring an extensive list of authors. If you ask only for works by our own writers, you will be enabled to select from the printed list in TIMES and Crisis, such as we now have on hand, with prices appended. Among them you will find Good Tidings, Adventism—its relations to Prophecy, and several pamphlets by different authors.

Minutes of the W. A. C. P. Association,

Held at Norwood Park, Ill., June 10th 1873.

The meeting was called to order by the President. The minutes of the last Board meeting were then read by the Secretary. On motion the shares presented at the last Board meeting to the Trustees of the Association were voted to be canceled. A. S. Calkins, O. S. Knapp and L. H. Davis were then appointed a committee to prepare business to come before the meeting and proposed—that the property of the association be leased to the Western Advent Christian Society whose basis should be that of a delegation from the State Conferences.

J. M. Snook moved, and C. Fox seconded, that the basis of the Association remain as it is. O. S. Knapp opposed the motion. L. H. Davis moved an amendment, that this Association instruct the Trustees to lease the property of the Association to a new Association for ninety-nine years, when ascertained what the new Association should be.

A. E. Babcock spoke against, followed by many of the brethren for and against.

The Chairman read the article and certificate for the new Association, and the amendment passed as follows:

Dedication.

It was my privilege on Sunday, June 29th, to preach the dedication sermon of the Advent Christian Chapel in Norwalk, Ohio, and I wish to write a word in relation to the interest in the cause of Christ as felt by the A. C. church of that place.

The work of the Lord was greatly revived in all that region during the past winter, and the little company in Norwalk were graciously blessed in the quickening of the saints and the conversion of sinners among them.

As a result of the revival they went to work enlarging and remodeling their chapel, and making a comfortable and convenient place of worship for those who assemble there. At the dedication many brethren from adjoining towns were present, and together with the citizens made a crowded audience. Elds. E. McCulloch, of Nevada, and H. C. Smith, of Fairfield, were present to assist in the services. The occasion was an interesting one, as it seemed to be the opening of a new era in the history of the cause of Bible truth and spiritual holiness among the brethren in that region. The spirit of harshness and censorship if it ever was found among them, seemed to be gone, and while the chapel was dedicated to God's service, the church made likewise a heartfelt consecration of themselves to God, to do and to suffer his righteous will. And we all felt that God accepted the whole, and gave his Spirit to bear witness to the work. It was indeed good to be there.

At the close of the evening service the church voted an invitation to me to remove to Norwalk and labor among them in word and doctrine. Although my health is poor at present, in consequence of nervous prostration caused by the railroad accident in which I narrowly escaped death; yet I am glad to report that it is improving, and if the Lord will I shall remove from Chicago to Norwalk, Ohio, and labor there and in that vicinity as the Lord gives me strength.

I would say in conclusion that my P. O. address will hereafter be Norwalk, Ohio, where all communications to me may be sent.

FRANK BURR.

Is the Definite Time of the Second Advent Revealed in the Bible?

A PROPOSITION.

It having been repeatedly and publicly stated that no minister of this State dare to meet the definite time argument for the Lord's return in 1873, I beg leave to submit the following proposition:

If suitable preliminaries, such as time and place of meeting, can be satisfactorily arranged, I will meet in debate any Christian gentleman who may be chosen to represent and support the affirmative of the following question, namely: "Is the Definite Time of the Second Advent Revealed in the Holy Scriptures?"

This seems to me to be the fundamental question to be settled. It is plain that every thing depends upon this. If it can be shown that it was the intention of the Holy Spirit to reveal the definite time of the second advent, then it is equally plain that it is our duty no less than our privilege to know it. I also submit as a necessary condition precedent to the proposed discussion, that each party or disputant shall be responsible for one-half of the necessary expenses of said meeting, and that a stenographer be employed to report the discussion for the purpose of publication. Thousands of persons in various parts of the country will be interested in the arguments pro and con, who could not possibly attend the discussion itself. If "light" be needed—and I think it is—I know of no better way of letting it shine on this question than in the way proposed. It is of course understood that if the discussion be held, it shall be governed by the usual parliamentary rules, and the courtesies and amenities usual among gentlemen shall be observed. The sole object of both parties should be to elicit truth.

J. H. WHITMORE.

CLOSE COMMUNION.

Dear Friend:

I am sorry to learn that your mind is somewhat troubled upon this question. You think you cannot conscientiously commune with those who do not belong to the church which you represent; especially those who repudiate Scripture baptism. Though I differ from you materially, yet, being fully aware of your Christian character, I am sure that I can conscientiously commune with you. Let us take a brief survey of the ground together, and then, perhaps, you will be able to help yourself out of the difficulty.

1. What is the design of the Lord's Supper? Says the evangelist (Matt. 26:26), "And as they were eating, Jesus took bread, and blessed it, and brake it, and gave it to his disciples, and said, Take, eat; this is my body [i. e., this represents my body—a figure of metonymy.] And he took the cup and gave thanks, and gave it to them, saying, Drink ye all of it; for this is [represents] my blood of the New Testament, which is shed for many for the remission of sins." Again, in 1 Cor. 11:26, we read: "For as often as ye eat this bread, and drink this cup, ye do shew the Lord's death till he come." From these statements we learn the symbolic character of the bread and wine. The institution of the eucharist is designed as a standing memento of the sufferings of Calvary. Lest in the flight of centuries we should forget the tragedies of the cross, and become absorbed in the anticipation of future glory, Jesus says to the church in all time, "This do in remembrance of me." And not only does this preserve fresh in our memory the agonies of the Crucified, but it is an open profession to the world of our faith in the great atonement.

2. What are the qualifications necessary to the partaking of the communion? If, as we have just observed, we represent not only the events of the cross, but our faith therein, by partaking of the bread and wine, it directly follows that whoever has experienced the efficacy of the divine sacrifice thus symbolized, and gives proof of a godly life, is a proper communicant. He who by faith accepts Christ as his savior, is entitled to a seat at the Lord's table; and it is not only our privilege, but our duty to commune with him, and extend the hand of Christian fellowship. This conclusion is inevitable, from the very design of the institution.

3. Do these qualifications exist before baptism? If so, the Lord's supper may be taken before the performance of that ceremony; and we are at liberty to invite the unbaptized to the table. That a change of heart always precedes baptism we shall not say; but that it may precede that ordinance, admits the clearest proof.

Forgiveness and justification from past offenses are one and the same circumstance. In this condition, we are entitled to all the ordinances of God's house. Now, we would ask, By what are we justified? by baptism? Let Paul answer: "Therefore being justified by faith, we have peace with God through our Lord Jesus Christ." Again, "Much more then being now justified by his blood [i. e., faith in his blood], we shall be saved from wrath through him....And, not only so, but we also joy in God through our Lord Jesus Christ, by whom we have now [Greek nun—nun—at this time, already, i. e., when justified by faith in his blood], received the atonement." Says the apostle again, "Where is boasting then?" It is excluded. By what law? of works? Nay; but by the law of faith. Therefore we conclude that a man is justified by faith without the deeds of the law.

From these and other inspired statements, we conclude with Paul, that faith is the principle upon which we are justified. Not that works are of no weight, but that if the faith be genuine, works will follow as a necessary sequence.

Faith accompanies repentance. When the heart-broken sinner truly repents, and casts himself upon the merits of Jesus, God does not say, "I cannot forgive you until you are baptized." No, no; he offers pardon on the spot. "If we confess our sins, he is faithful and just to forgive us our sins, and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness." Thus, justification immediately follows repentance, which is an expression of living faith. Hence, at that time, whether baptized or not, the qualifications necessary to partaking of the Lord's supper are fully exhibited.

4. If we may commune with those who are unbaptized, may we not also with those who are honestly in error in regard to this truth? Our conclusions here are easily reached. The church universal is the church of God. He whom God accepts, of whatever name, is a member of the body of Christ, and we have no right to disfellowship him. If the inspired Word says that "we are all the children of God by faith in Jesus Christ," it is not our prerogative to say that this spiritual relation is dependent upon a ceremony or a theory. If God makes character a test of fellowship, who are we that would make opinion a test? To say that the truth is so plain that one cannot fail to see it without dishonesty, is certainly uncharitable, for why may not an error be honestly held upon this point as well as upon any other? And further, if we refuse to commune with others because they do not believe as we do, we take the work of judging into our own hands. This is strictly forbidden. It is not said that we are to examine one another, but "let a man examine himself, and so let him eat." And even if a hypocrite get to the table, it is not said that his eating condemns all (as if it necessarily followed that we fellowship all whom we allow to come to the table); but he that eateth and drinketh unworthily, eateth and drinketh damnation to himself. The rest are uncondem

In conclusion, my [illegible]nd, I trust you will not fail to pursue the investigation of this matter until you are fully settled. I entreat you not to deprive yourself of the benefits of this sacred ordinance because you esteem some others to be unworthy. The matter lies only between them and God. You are not responsible.

Statistics.

C. C. M.

The following statistics, gathered from various sources, will no doubt interest the many readers of the TIMES:

There are, on the globe, 1,288,000,000 souls, of which 360,000,000 are Caucasians; 522,000,000 are Mongolians; 190,000,000 are Ethiopians; 176,000,000 are Malayans; 1,000,000 are Indo-Americans.

There are 3,642 languages spoken, and 1,000 religions.

The yearly mortality of the globe is 33,333,333 persons. This is at the rate of 91,334 per day, 3,730 per hour, 62 per minute. So each pulsation of the human heart marks the decease of some human creature.

The average of human life is 33 years.

One-fourth of the population dies at or before the age of 7 years.

One-half at or before 17 years.

Among 10,000 persons one arrives at the age of 100; one in 500 arrives at the age of 90; one in 100 lives to the age of 7[illegible]

Married men live longer than single ones.

In 100 persons 95 marry; and more marriages occur in June and December than in any other month in the year.

One-eighth of the whole population is military.

Professions exercise a great influence on longevity. In 1,000 individuals who arrive at the age of 70 years, 42 are priests, orators, or public speakers; 40 are agriculturists; 33 are workmen; 32 are soldiers or military employes; 29 advocates or engineers; 27 professors, and 24 doctors. Those who devote their lives to the prolongation of others, die the soonest.

There are about 335,000,000 nominal Christians.

There 5,000,000 Israelites.

There are 160,000,000 Mohammedans.

There are 200,000 Pagans.

In the Christian churches 170,000,000 profess the Roman Catholic faith, 75,000,000 the Greek, 80,000,000 profess the Protestant.

It is not claimed that these figures are absolutely correct. Approximation to the naked truth is all that can be claimed by the statisticians in such matters.

A Good Word for Tobacco from the Fair Sex.

C. C. M.

It is frequently said that if such things would be left to the ballot-box, and the ladies endowed with the elective franchise, that whisky and tobacco would be voted out of the world at the first election. The following note to the N. Y. Herald, however, has an entirely different ring in it:

"I happen to be the wife of an inveterate smoker, and do boldly avow that I love the perfume of his cigar better than all the perfumes of Arabia. I think there is nothing more delightful, and I am never more happy than when my husband is by my side, with slippers on, and a fragrant Havana between his lips—a picture of home comfort which many a poor married man has never seen, who is driven from home by a cross, selfish wife, who would rather send her husband to the 'club,' or worse places, so as to be rid of his after-dinner smoke."

I am glad this is a "free country," and ladies possessing so peculiar a taste as this can enjoy their bliss without fear of molestation. What a world this would be, if all the ladies were so fond of the "perfume" of the "fragrant Havana!"

Dr. Chalmers' Daughter.

In one of the alleys running off from Fountain Bridge, Edinburg, a street crowded with drunkenness and pollution, is the low-roofed building in which this good woman is spending her life to help men and women out of their miseries. Her chief work is with drunkards, their wives and daughters. Some of the poor women of the neighborhood, who have sober husbands, complain against her, saying, "Why do you pass us? Because our husbands are good, you do not care for us. If we had married some worthless sot, you would then have taken care of us in our poverty."

In the winter, when the nights are long and cold, you may see Helen Chalmers, with her lantern, going through the lanes of the city hunting up the depraved, and bring them out to her reform meetings. Insult her do they? Never! They would as soon think of pelting an angel of God. Fearless and strong in the righteousness of her work, she goes up to a group of intoxicated men, shakes hands with them, and takes them along to hear the Thursday night speech on temperance.

One night as she was standing in a low tenement talking with an intemperate father, and persuading him to a better life, a man kept walking up and down the room, as though uninterested in what was said; but finally, in his intoxication, staggered up to her, and remarked: "I shall get to heaven as easy as you will; do you not think so?" Helen answered not a word, but opened her Bible and pointed to the passage: "No drunkard shall inherit the kingdom of God." The arrow struck between the joints of the harness, and that little piece of Christian stratagem ended in the man's reformation.—Recorder.

"Dear Bro. Wellcome—I have read your work entitled "The Plan of Redemption," and must confess it is, in my candid opinion, the best work of the kind extant, or that I have seen. I do not see how it can be improved upon. It should be in the hands of every lover of Jesus. I consider it a full and complete exposition of the great and glorious plan of gospel redemption. If I can induce any to send for it, I shall be happy to do so.

AT HOME.

—The Ute Indians have commenced hostilities in Washington Ter., and a general war is feared.

—The trial of Frank Walworth for the murder of his father is at last ended, with a verdict of guilty of murder in the second degree, his sentence imprisonment for life.

—With the recent successful attempts at throwing off two trains on the Illinois Central Railway—in one of which the engineer, fireman, and brakeman were killed—there seems to be an organized gang of vandals who are working for the destruction of trains and human life.

—A dispatch from Wyoming says that a party of Indians shot a man and drove off some stock. A party of ten citizens went in pursuit, and overtook the Indians, who refused to give up the stock. A fight ensued, in which several Indians were killed and wounded. None of the citizens were wounded. The Indians were reported to be a war party of Utes.

—In a brief card published in the Brooklyn Eagle, Henry Ward Beecher breaks silence on the charges that have so long been paraded through the press against him. He gives his free consent to the publication of any letters that Victoria Woodhull or any other person may have received from him, and pronounces the whole vile story, as far as it relates to him, to be utterly untrue.

—A terrible explosion of nitro-glycerine occurred recently at Virginia City, Nev., killing ten persons and wounding many others. Several buildings were shattered and thrown to the ground. The nitro-glycerine was stored beneath the room of General Van Bokkelen, agent for the giant powder, and exploded without any apparent cause. The concussion caused the explosion of forty pounds of powder.

—A terrible tragedy occurred at Ionia, Mich., July 4th, resulting in the death of Prof. La Montain, a distinguished aeronaut. The balloon in which the fatal ascension was made was filled simply with hot air, and at a hight of fifteen hundred feet it collapsed, and instantly a fearful descent to the ground took place. The body struck with such a terrible thud that it jarred the ground for fifty rods around, and made an indentation in the solid ground eight inches in depth. There was scarcely a bone in the whole body not broken into fragments. It was as limp as a rag. There were very few fractures in the skin, except the right foot, the bone of the right leg being driven through the bottom of the foot. There were from ten to twelve thousand people who witnessed this horrible tragedy.

—During the past week terrible storms have visited all parts of the country, east and west, the greater damage to life and property seems to have been in the west. We give some of the details: In Des Moines, Iowa, the country was deluged, the wheat and oats broken down. Along the line of the Rock Island railroad the hail storm did great damage. A farm house near Stewart Station was blown down, and five persons seriously injured. At Alexandria, Mo., several houses were blown down. The bridge of the M. F. & W. R. R. crossing the Des Moines river was blown down. Culverts were washed away, and great damage done. In Hancock, Ill., farm houses and barns were blown down, and two children killed. At Augusta the Christian church was leveled to the ground. The steeple of the Presbyterian church was blown down, grain elevator was blown over, houses unroofed, and much other damage done. At Carthage the high school and part of the college was unroofed, and fences, chimneys, etc., demolished. At West Point the dwelling of Dr. Carril was torn to pieces, and the stores of Wolf & Cordle, and Frank & Howerton destroyed. A school house was blown down, and a carding machine factory and flouring mill unroofed. The dwelling of Henry Garner was blown down, Mrs. Garner, her child, and sister killed. At Warsaw several houses were demolished.

ABROAD.

—ROME.—Fresh shocks of earthquake are reported in Bellano and vicinity.

—The Shah of Persia has accepted the invitation to visit Italy.

—The telegraph cable to Porto Rico is working.

—Several hundred vagrants recently sent to work in the trocha have deserted and joined the insurgents.

—President MacMahon intends to ask the Commission of Pardons to remit the sentences of those Communist prisoners whose behavior has been unexceptional since their conviction.

—Madrid.—A dispatch from the commander of the Government troops at Seville announces that he has withdrawn his forces from that city to prevent a conflict between them and the citizens.

The Gaceta publishes the decree of the Government instituting a medal on the commemoration of the Cuban war, which is to be bestowed upon such officers and soldiers of the Spanish army as distinguished themselves in the suppression of the rebellion.

—THE CARLISTS.—Intelligence has reached here that 4,000 men of the province of Biscay have declared in favor of Don Carlos. The insurgents have appointed officers for the province and municipalities from among their own number.

—The English Government has received dispatches from Sir Samuel Baker, dated Khartoum, May 29, where he had safely arrived with the other Europeans of the command. He reports that the country as far south as the equator has been annexed to Egypt. The slave trade has been suppressed and all rebellious movements and intrigues checked. The country is orderly, and its Government perfectly organized. A road has been opened to Zanzibar free from interruption. He won a victory on the 6th of May with only 105 men over the army of the African Chief Oaloso. His mission has been perfectly successful.

—A terrible earthquake occurred June 29th in the neighborhood of Verona producing the most disastrous results, and causing great loss of life and property. Upwards of one hundre persons perished.

The shocks were of the most violent character, and producing the greatest alarm at Verona and the surrounding country for miles. On the first warning of the disaster the people left their houses with the greatest haste and ran into the streets. Others forsook the city and fled to the country for safety. Buildings were shaken to their foundations and many fell into ruins, burying their occupants in the pile or crushing and killing those who happened to be in the streets beneath. Many fine buildings have thus been destroyed, the loss of which it is impossible at present to estimate.

I am sorry to learn that your mind is somewhat troubled upon this question. You think you cannot conscientiously commune with those who do not belong to the church which you represent; especially those who repudiate Scripture baptism. Though I differ from you materially, yet, being fully aware of your Christian character, I am sure that I can conscientiously commune with you. Let us take a brief survey of the ground together, and then, perhaps, you will be able to help yourself out of the difficulty.

1. What is the design of the Lord's Supper? Says the evangelist (Matt. 26:26), "And as they were eating, Jesus took bread, and blessed it, and brake it, and gave it to his disciples, and said, Take, eat; this is my body [i. e., this represents my body—a figure of metonymy.] And he took the cup and gave thanks, and gave it to them, saying, Drink ye all of it; for this is [represents] my blood of the New Testament, which is shed for many for the remission of sins." Again, in 1 Cor. 11:26, we read: "For as often as ye eat this bread, and drink this cup, ye do shew the Lord's death till he come." From these statements we learn the symbolic character of the bread and wine. The institution of the eucharist is designed as a standing memento of the sufferings of Calvary. Lest in the flight of centuries we should forget the tragedies of the cross, and become absorbed in the anticipation of future glory, Jesus says to the church in all time, "This do in remembrance of me." And not only does this preserve fresh in our memory the agonies of the Crucified, but it is an open profession to the world of our faith in the great atonement.

2. What are the qualifications necessary to the partaking of the communion? If, as we have just observed, we represent not only the events of the cross, but our faith therein, by partaking of the bread and wine, it directly follows that whoever has experienced the efficacy of the divine sacrifice thus symbolized, and gives proof of a godly life, is a proper communicant. He who by faith accepts Christ as his savior, is entitled to a seat at the Lord's table; and it is not only our privilege, but our duty to commune with him, and extend the hand of Christian fellowship. This conclusion is inevitable, from the very design of the institution.

3. Do these qualifications exist before baptism? If so, the Lord's supper may be taken before the performance of that ceremony; and we are at liberty to invite the unbaptized to the table. That a change of heart always precedes baptism we shall not say; but that it may precede that ordinance, admits the clearest proof.

Forgiveness and justification from past offenses are one and the same circumstance. In this condition, we are entitled to all the ordinances of God's house. Now, we would ask, By what are we justified? by baptism? Let Paul answer: "Therefore being justified by faith, we have peace with God through our Lord Jesus Christ." Again, "Much more then being now justified by his blood [i. e., faith in his blood], we shall be saved from wrath through him.... And, not only so, but we also joy in God through our Lord Jesus Christ, by whom we have now [Greek nun—nun—at this time, already, i. e., when justified by faith in his blood], received the atonement." Says the apostle again, "Where is boasting then?" It is excluded. By what law? of works? Nay; but by the law of faith. Therefore we conclude that a man is justified by faith without the deeds of the law.

From these and other inspired statements, we conclude with Paul, that faith is the principle upon which we are justified. Not that works are of no weight, but that if the faith be genuine, works will follow as a necessary sequence.

Faith accompanies repentance. When the heart-broken sinner truly repents, and casts himself upon the merits of Jesus, God does not say, "I cannot forgive you until you are baptized." No, no; he offers pardon on the spot. "If we confess our sins, he is faithful and just to forgive us our sins, and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness." Thus, justification immediately follows repentance, which is an expression of living faith. Hence, at that time, whether baptized or not, the qualifications necessary to partaking of the Lord's supper are fully exhibited.

4. If we may commune with those who are unbaptized, may we not also with those who are honestly in error in regard to this truth? Our conclusions here are easily reached. The church universal is the church of God. He whom God accepts, of whatever name, is a member of the body of Christ, and we have no right to disfellowship him. If the inspired Word says that "we are all the children of God by faith in Jesus Christ," it is not our prerogative to say that this spiritual relation is dependent upon a ceremony or a theory. If God makes character a test of fellowship, who are we that would make opinion a test? To say that the truth is so plain that one cannot fail to see it without dishonesty, is certainly uncharitable, for why may not an error be honestly held upon this point as well as upon any other? And further, if we refuse to commune with others because they do not believe as we do, we take the work of judging into our own hands. This is strictly forbidden. It is not said that we are to examine one another, but "let a man examine himself, and so let him eat." And even if a hypocrite get to the table, it is not said that his eating condemns all (as if it necessarily followed that we fellowship all whom we allow to come to the table); but he that eateth and drinketh unworthily, eateth and drinketh damnation to himself. The rest are uncondem

In conclusion, my friend, I trust you will not fail to pursue the investigation of this matter until you are fully settled. I entreat you not to deprive yourself of the benefits of this sacred ordinance because you esteem some others to be unworthy. The matter lies only between them and God. You are not responsible.

Statistics.

C. C. M.

The following statistics, gathered from various sources, will no doubt interest the many readers of the TIMES:

There are, on the globe, 1,288,000,000 souls, of which 360,000,000 are Caucasians; 522,000,000 are Mongolians; 190,000,000 are Ethiopians; 176,000,000 are Malayans; 1,000,000 are Indo-Americans.

There are 3,642 languages spoken, and 1,000 religions.

The yearly mortality of the globe is 33,333,333 persons. This is at the rate of 91,554 per day, 3,730 per hour, 62 per minute. So each pulsation of the human heart marks the decease of some human creature.

The average of human life is 33 years.

One fourth of the population dies at or before the age of 7 years.

One-half at or before 17 years.

Among 10,000 persons one arrives at the age of 100; one in 500 arrives at the age of 90; one in 100 lives to the age of 7[illegible]

Married men live longer than single ones.

In 100 persons 95 marry; and more marriages occur in June and December than in any other month in the year.

One-eighth of the whole population is military.

Professions exercise a great influence on longevity. In 1,000 individuals who arrive at the age of 70 years, 42 are priests, orators, or public speakers; 40 are agriculturists; 33 are workmen; 32 are soldiers or military employes; 29 advocates or engineers; 27 professors, and 24 doctors. Those who devote their lives to the prolongation of others, die the soonest.

There are about 335,000,000 nominal Christians.

There 5,000,000 Israelites.

There are 160,000,000 Mohammedans.

There are 200,000 Pagans.

In the Christian churches 170,000,000 profess the Roman Catholic faith, 75,000,000 the Greek, 80,000,000 profess the Protestant.

It is not claimed that these figures are absolutely correct. Approximation to the naked truth is all that can be claimed by the statisticians in such matters.

It is frequently said that if such things would be left to the ballot-box, and the ladies endowed with the elective franchise, that whisky and tobacco would be voted out of the world at the first election. The following note to the N. Y. Herald, however, has an entirely different ring to it:

"I happen to be the wife of an inveterate smoker, and do boldly avow that I love the perfume of his cigar better than all the perfumes of Arabia. I think there is nothing more delightful, and I am never more happy than when my husband is by my side, with slippers on, and a fragrant Havana between his lips—a picture of home comfort which many a poor married man has never seen, who is driven from home by a cross, selfish wife, who would rather send her husband to the 'club,' or worse places, so as to be rid of his after-dinner smoke."

I am glad this is a "free country," and ladies possessing so peculiar a taste as this can enjoy their bliss without fear of molestation. What a world this would be, if all the ladies were so fond of the "perfume" of the "fragrant Havana!"

In one of the alleys running off from Fountain Bridge, Edinburg, a street crowded with drunkenness and pollution, is the low-roofed building in which this good woman is spending her life to help men and women out of their miseries. Her chief work is with drunkards, their wives and daughters. Some of the poor women of the neighborhood, who have sober husbands, complain against her, saying, "Why do you pass us? Because our husbands are good, you do not care for us. If we had married some worthless sot, you would then have taken care of us in our poverty."

In the winter, when the nights are long and cold, you may see Helen Chalmers, with her lantern, going through the lanes of the city hunting up the depraved, and bring them out to her reform meetings. Insult her do they? Never! They would as soon think of pelting an angel of God. Fearless and strong in the righteousness of her work, she goes up to a group of intoxicated men, shakes hands with them, and takes them along to hear the Thursday night speech on temperance.

One night as she was standing in a low tenement talking with an intemperate father, and persuading him to a better life, a man kept walking up and down the room, as though uninterested in what was said; but finally, in his intoxication, staggered up to her, and remarked: "I shall get to heaven as easy as you will; do you not think so?" Helen answered not a word, but opened her Bible and pointed to the passage: "No drunkard shall inherit the kingdom of God." The arrow struck between the joints of the harness, and that little piece of Christian stratagem ended in the man's reformation.—Recorder.

We give some of the details: In Des Moines, Iowa, the country was deluged, the wheat and oats broken down. Along the line of the Rock Island railroad the hail storm did great damage. A farm house near Stewart Station was blown down, and five persons seriously injured. At Alexandria, Mo., several houses were blown down. The bridge of the M. F. & W. R. R. crossing the Des Moines river was blown down. Culverts were washed away, and great damage done. In Hancock, Ill., farm houses and barns were blown down, and two children killed. At Augusta the Christian church was leveled to the ground. The steeple of the Presbyterian church was blown down, grain elevator was blown over, houses unroofed, and much other damage done. At Carthage the high school and part of the college was unroofed, and fences, chimneys, etc., demolished. At West Point the dwelling of Dr. Carril was torn to pieces, and the stores of Wolf & Cordin, and Frank & Howerton destroyed. A school house was blown down, and a carding machine factory and flouring mill unroofed. The dwelling of Henry Garner was blown down, Mrs. Garner, her child, and sister killed. At Warsaw several houses were demolished.

CLOSE COMMUNION.

Dear Friend:

I am sorry to learn that your mind is somewhat troubled upon this question. You think you cannot conscientiously commune with those who do not belong to the church which you represent; especially those who repudiate Scripture baptism. Though I differ from you materially, yet, being fully aware of your Christian character, I am sure that I can conscientiously commune with you. Let us take a brief survey of the ground together, and then, perhaps, you will be able to help yourself out of the difficulty.

1. What is the design of the Lord's Supper? Says the evangelist (Matt. 26:26), "And as they were eating, Jesus took bread, and blessed it, and brake it, and gave it to his disciples, and said, Take, eat; this is my body [i. e., this represents my body—a figure of metonymy.] And he took the cup and gave thanks, and gave it to them, saying, Drink ye all of it; for this is [represents] my blood of the New Testament, which is shed for many for the remission of sins." Again, in 1 Cor. 11:26, we read: "For as often as ye eat this bread, and drink this cup, ye do shew the Lord's death till he come." From these statements we learn the symbolic character of the bread and wine. The institution of the eucharist is designed as a standing memento of the sufferings of Calvary. Lest in the flight of centuries we should forget the tragedies of the cross, and become absorbed in the anticipation of future glory, Jesus says to the church in all time, "This do in remembrance of me." And not only does this preserve fresh in our memory the agonies of the Crucified, but it is an open profession to the world of our faith in the great atonement.

2. What are the qualifications necessary to the partaking of the communion? If, as we have just observed, we represent not only the events of the cross, but our faith therein, by partaking of the bread and wine, it directly follows that whoever has experienced the efficacy of the divine sacrifice thus symbolized, and gives proof of a godly life, is a proper communicant. He who by faith accepts Christ as his savior, is entitled to a seat at the Lord's table; and it is not only our privilege, but our duty to commune with him, and extend the hand of Christian fellowship. This conclusion is inevitable, from the very design of the institution.

3. Do these qualifications exist before baptism? If so, the Lord's supper may be taken before the performance of that ceremony; and we are at liberty to invite the unbaptized to the table. That a change of heart always precedes baptism we shall not say; but that it may precede that ordinance, admits the clearest proof.

Forgiveness and justification from past offenses are one and the same circumstance. In this condition, we are entitled to all the ordinances of God's house. Now, we would ask, By what are we justified? by baptism? Let Paul answer: "Therefore being justified by faith, we have peace with God through our Lord Jesus Christ." Again, "Much more then being now justified by his blood [i. e., faith in his blood], we shall be saved from wrath through him.... And, not only so, but we also joy in God through our Lord Jesus Christ, by whom we have now [Greek nun—at this time, already, i. e., when justified by faith in his blood], received the atonement." Says the apostle again, "Where is boasting then?" It is excluded. By what law? of works? Nay; but by the law of faith. Therefore we conclude that a man is justified by faith without the deeds of the law.

From these and other inspired statements, we conclude with Paul, that faith is the principle upon which we are justified. Not that works are of no weight, but that if the faith be genuine, works will follow as a necessary sequence.

Faith accompanies repentance. When the heart-broken sinner truly repents, and casts himself upon the merits of Jesus, God does not say, "I cannot forgive you until you are baptized." No, no; he offers pardon on the spot. "If we confess our sins, he is faithful and just to forgive us our sins, and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness." Thus, justification immediately follows repentance, which is an expression of living faith. Hence, at that time, whether baptized or not, the qualifications necessary to partaking of the Lord's supper are fully exhibited.

4. If we may commune with those who are unbaptized, may we not also with those who are honestly in error in regard to this truth? Our conclusions here are easily reached. The church universal is the church of God. He whom God accepts, of whatever name, is a member of the body of Christ, and we have no right to disfellowship him. If the inspired Word says that "we are all the children of God by faith in Jesus Christ," it is not our prerogative to say that this spiritual relation is dependent upon a ceremony or a theory. If God makes character a test of fellowship, who are we that would make opinion a test? To say that the truth is so plain that one cannot fail to see it without dishonesty, is certainly uncharitable, for why may not an error be honestly held upon this point as well as upon any other? And further, if we refuse to commune with others because they do not believe as we do, we take the work of judging into our own hands. This is strictly forbidden. It is not said that we are to examine one another, but "let a man examine himself, and so let him eat." And even if a hypocrite get to the table, it is not said that his eating condemns all (as if it necessarily followed that we fellowship all whom we allow to come to the table); but he that eateth and drinketh unworthily, eateth and drinketh damnation to himself. The rest are uncondemned.

In conclusion, my friend, I trust you will not fail to pursue the investigation of this matter until you are fully settled. I entreat you not to deprive yourself of the benefits of this sacred ordinance because you esteem some others to be unworthy. The matter lies only between them and God. You are not responsible.

There were very few fractures in the skin, except the right foot, the bone of the right leg being driven through the bottom of the foot. There were from ten to twelve thousand people who witnessed this horrible tragedy.

—During the past week terrible storms have visited all parts of the country, east and west, the greater damage to life and property seems to have been in the west. We give some of the details: In Des Moines, Iowa, the country was deluged, the wheat and oats broken down. Along the line of the Rock Island railroad the hail storm did great damage. A farm house near Stewart Station was blown down, and five persons seriously injured. At Alexandria, Mo., several houses were blown down. The bridge of the M. P. & W. R. R. crossing the Des Moines river was blown down. Culverts were washed away, and great damage done. In Hancock, Ill., farm houses and barns were blown down, and two children killed. At Augusta the Christian church was leveled to the ground. The steeple of the Presbyterian church was blown down, grain elevator was blown over, houses unroofed, and much other damage done. At Carthage the high school and part of the college was unroofed, and fences, chimneys, etc., demolished. At West Point the dwelling of Dr. Carrol was torn to pieces, and the stores of Wolf & Cordin, and Frank & Howerton destroyed. A school house was blown down, and a carding machine factory and flouring mill unroofed. The dwelling of Henry Garner was blown down, Mrs. Garner, her child, and sister killed. At Warsaw several houses were demolished.

ABROAD.

—M. Jules Ferry, Minister at Athens, is recalled. M. Gobrieac succeeds him.

—The Sultan of Turkey intends to make a long visit to the Khedive of Egypt.

—Rome.—Fresh shocks of earthquake are reported in Bellano and vicinity.

—The Shah of Persia has accepted the invitation to visit Italy.

—The telegraph cable to Porto Rico is working.

—Several hundred vagrants recently sent to work in the trocha have deserted and joined the insurgents.

—President MacMahon intends to ask the Commission of Pardons to remit the sentences of those Communist prisoners whose behavior has been unexceptional since their conviction.

—Madrid.—A dispatch from the commander of the Government troops at Seville announces that he has withdrawn his forces from that city to prevent a conflict between them and the citizens.

The Gaceta publishes the decree of the Government instituting a medal on the commemoration of the Cuban war, which is to be bestowed upon such officers and soldiers of the Spanish army as distinguished themselves in the suppression of the rebellion.

—The Carlists.—Intelligence has reached here that 4,000 men of the province of Biscay have declared in favor of Don Carlos. The insurgents have appointed officers for the province and municipalities from among their own number.

—The English Government has received dispatches from Sir Samuel Baker, dated Khartoum, May 29, where he had safely arrived with the other Europeans of the command. He reports that the country as far south as the equator has been annexed to Egypt. The slave trade has been suppressed and all rebellious movements and intrigues checked. The country is orderly, and its Government perfectly organized. A road has been opened to Zanzibar free from interruption. He won a victory on the 6th of May with only 105 men over the army of the African Chief Onioso. His mission has been perfectly successful.

—A terrible earthquake occurred June 29th in the neighborhood of Verona producing the most disastrous results, and causing great loss of life and property. Upwards of one hundre persons perished.

The shocks were of the most violent character, and producing the greatest alarm at Verona and the surrounding country for miles. On the first warning of the disaster the people left their houses with the greatest haste and ran into the streets. Others forsook the city and fled to the country for safety. Buildings were shaken to their foundations and many fell into ruins, burying their occupants in the pile or crushing and killing those who happened to be in the streets beneath. Many fine buildings have thus been destroyed, the loss of which it is impossible at present to estimate.

GREAT SECOND ADVENT CONFERENCE.

The meetings of this conference came to a close on Saturday afternoon. Meetings were held in the morning and afternoon of that day and were full of interest to the very last. At the morning meeting your correspondent among the rest of the speakers, pointed, out to the auditory the blessed hope, but more especially the time of its fulfillment

By the kindness of M. Baxter, I am enabled to present it to your readers.

SPEECH OF BROTHER KELLAWAY.

W Kellaway (from America), said: Dear Friends—The reasons which prompt me to believe in the Second Advent of our Lord, I conceive are two.

The first is: Before Jesus went away he promised, "If I go away I will come again unto you;" and, therefore, the reason of my faith in the return of the Lord is the promise of our Lord Jesus Christ himself. All the responsibility, therefore, of my soul's trust rests with him. He has provoked it by his words and promise. And this promise also is the occasion of my hope. Had he never so promised, had he never spoken of his return, I had never so known or believed. But, I believe, because he has said it.

The second reason why I believe in the second glorious personal coming of our Lord is: Because it is one of the lessons grace has taught me." Its lessons are principally three. The first is self and world denial; the second is godly living, the third is watching and waiting by faith and expectation for the Second Advent. In Titus 2: vs. 11 to 13, we read: "The grace of God, that bringeth salvation to all men hath appeared, teaching us:

1. That denying ungodliness and worldly lusts, (2) we should live soberly, righteously, and godly in this present world; (3) looking for that blessed hope, and the glorious appearing of the great God, and our Saviour Jesus Christ: to which (4) is added this blessed reminder: "He gave himself for us."

The first lesson, then is one of self denial, and I thank God for as many as have learned it: the second is that we live godly in Christ Jesus; and I rejoice there are so many who are "followers of God, as dear children;" but the third is faith and watchfulness for the second appearing of our Lord. Brethren! shall I learn the first lesson, and the second, and omit the third? No, beloved; let us, as little children, learn all the lessons which grace teaches

All the hopes of the Christian have to do with coming of the Lord Christ, and can never be realized until he who is our life doth appear; and then when he comes, "his reward is with him." Then, we who are waiting for him and loving his appearing shall reap the reward of our faith, and gather fruit of our hope. My friend, who preceded me, said, "Nowhere in in the Scriptures are we pointed to death (dark, dismal death), as the period of the consummation of our hope; but to the second appearing of our Lord Jesus." I cordially agree with him; and oh! can I then help loving that time, or looking forward to that day? because I know and am assured that when he comes I shall see him.

The hope of righteousness is to see Jesus Through him now, at this present, we have pardon, peace, justification, righteousness, sanctification, a good hope of life, and the Holy Spirit. (And oh, is it not overwhelmingly wonderful to think that we poor creatures have the same spirit in us as God has in him? Is anything then too hard for us? Can we not overcome the world, and continually rejoice in victory through him?) But though we have these many great and unspeakable benefits through Jesus, yet we desire him, the glorious risen person of the Lord. For "now we see him not, yet believing [we shall see him], we rejoice with joy unspeakable, and full of glory. We cry, "O give me Christ. O show me him who loved me, and gave himself for me." Let me see the prints of the nails in his body, where "he was wounded for our transgressions, and bruised for our iniquities!" "Sirs, we would see Jesus." And thus we cry out, in longing for Christ: "O that I knew where I might find him." O, beloved, he will come; he will show us himself; he will appear to our joy and rejoicing. Then we shall be able to say, in rapt delight, "I have found him whom my soul loveth!" And, as we look into his face, with what emphasis shall we speak it: "I have heard of thee by the hearing of the ear; but now mine eye seeth thee."

But when shall we thus see Jesus? When he returns for us; after his return from the Father.

In John 16 we hear him saying: "I go my way to him that sent me….And because I have said these things sorrow hath filled your heart. A little while, and ye shall not see me; and again, a little while, and ye shall see me; and because I go to the Father!" And he adds: "I will see you again, and your heart shall rejoice, and your joy no man taketh from you." As a friend who leaves for awhile; but who, ere he leaves, promises to return; so Jesus is gone to the Father; but he will return from his visit to the Majesty on High, and see us again; and then we shall see him and be forever glad.

So St. John testifies in his epistle; he beautifully puts it thus: "When he who is our life doth appear….we shall see him as he is." When shall we see him, John? "When he who is our life doth appear," not before….So our hope of seeing Jesus is in immediate connection with his second coming. But when we see him we shall be changed and made like him, and this hope is likewise placed in connection with his second coming. We read: "As we have borne the image of the earthly, we shall also bear the image of the heavenly." And again we read: "We shall all be changed in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye."

But when? "At the last trump." So says St. Paul in 1 Cor 15: "We shall not all sleep; but we shall all be changed, in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, at the last trump; for the trumpet shall sound and the dead shall be raised incorruptible, and we shall be changed." Concerning the trumpet, it is when the last one sounds that the saints have their hope come to pass. Is there more than one trumpet, then? Yes, in the Apocalypse we read of seven; and the seventh is the last. In Rev. 11:15, we read: "The seventh angel sounded: and there great voices in the heaven, saying, The kingdoms of this world are become the kingdoms of our Lord, and of his Christ, and he shall reign forever and ever." Here the seventh and last trump introduces the kingdom and reign of Jesus on the earth. This trumpet is again referred to by the Apostle Paul, as his first epistle to the Thessalonians. In that epistle, he says "The Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangel, and the trump of God, and the dead in Christ shall rise first, Then we who are alive and remain, shall be caught up together with them in the clouds to meet the Lord in the air, and so shall we ever be with the Lord"

So, it is evident, we are to be changed. But, I ask again, when? According to our reading of the Bible, it is at the sounding of the last—that is, the seventh trumpet, which will take place according to St. Paul's communication to the Thessalonians, when "the Lord himself shall descend from heaven," and "the dead in Christ shall rise;" and, according to the same apostle to the Corinthian saints, when "the dead shall be raised incorruptible;" and, according to the Revelation, made to John, the seer, when "the kingdoms of this world shall become the kingdoms of our Lord and of his Christ." Then we, who are now of Christ, like in mind and character, and who are being daily renewed after his image, shall be made like him in person; as St. John witnesseth, "When he shall appear, we shall be like him" in that day.

Oh! thank God then, that he has transformed us, and made us in mind like Jesus; and soon, in body also, at his appearing, we shall be like him whom our souls love, whom we admire and copy. We shall be exactly like him, for he shall change the bodies of our humiliation and fashion them like to his own glorious body.

Then, being changed, we shall be gathered far and near unto him; this is another promise which godliness hath, and another hope indulged of righteousness; and the word of the Lord teaches that this also shall blow into flower at our Lord's return.

So Jesus himself teaches us in the 13th of Matthew's gospel. Therein is reported a parable spoken by our Saviour, about tares and wheat. And after speaking the parable he supplies the interpretation. The parable is this: A man sowed good seed in his field; but, when men slept, an enemy sowed tares among the wheat. When the wheat sprung up, the tares appeared with it; and the servants asked the master of the field if they might not pull up the tares. The master replied: "No; lest you pull up the wheat also. Let both grow together till the harvest, and in the time of harvest I will say to the reapers, 'Gather ye together first the tares, and bind them in bundles to burn them; but gather the wheat into my garner.'" Jesus then says: "The field is the world; the good seed are the children of the kingdom, but the tares are the children of the wicked one. The enemy that sowed them is the devil; the harvest is the end of the age; and the reapers are the angels." Notice: the reapers are the angels; the good seed are the children of the kingdom; and the time of gathering them is the time of harvest, which, Jesus says, is the end of this age. "So shall it be at the end of the age." The angels shall be sent out from Christ to gather the wheat into the granary of God. Once more: When is the time of harvest? when will the saints be gathered for Jesus? The Master says, "at the end of the age," when he comes.

Again, Jesus is prophesying in Matt. 24: and from vv. 29-31 he tells us it is after the tribulation spoken of in that chapter, when the sign of the Son of Man shall appear in heaven, when they shall see the Son of Man coming in the clouds of heaven, with power and great glory, that he shall send his angels with a great sound of a trumpet, and they shall gather together his elect from the four winds, from the one end of heaven to the other." That will be the gathering day for Christ, according to his own words.

So also St. Paul, in writing to the Thessalonians (1 Thess. 2:1), refers to "the coming of our Lord, and our gathering together unto him." You will notice how closely he unites the second coming of Christ, with the gathering of the saints, by that little conjunction, "and."

Thus, then, the realization of this hope, of being gathered for Christ, synchronizes with the harvest time of this world, which is the end of the age; with the day when the Son of Man shall appear in heaven and with the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ.

Being gathered for Christ we shall be caught up with all the blessed and holy to meet the Lord in the air; and hope rejoices in anticipation of the time, and asks with fervor: "When shall these things be?"

It is a promise of Christ, which cannot pass away, which says, "I will come again and receive you unto myself." The answers, then, as to the time of reception is, when Jesus comes again He was here once; he has gone away; he will come again, and then we shall be received to himself. Oh what embraces, what songs of joy shall be in that day, when the Absent shall be the Present! How our hearts shall rejoice in "the real Presence."

Inspiration teaches that "we shall be caught up together" with the raised sleepers, who, ere the coming have fallen asleep in Jesus, "to meet the Lord in the air," in the day of the trumpet's blast—even in that day.

For sweet shall be the Voice that shall gently shake the saintly sleepers from their slumbers, saying to them, "Rise up, my love, my fair one, and come away. For, lo, the winter is past, the rain is over and gone, the flowers appear on the earth, the time of the singing of birds is come, and the voice of the turtle is heard in our land; the fig tree putteth forth her green figs, and the vines with the tender grape give a good smell. Arise my love, my fair one, and come away." 'Tis the voice of the Beloved, sounding in the spring-time of resurrection and regeneration. And in that spring shall the hopes of the Bride, as she looks forward with expectancy to join the Bridegroom, be an accomplished desire.

Yes, it is † when the Son of Man shall come in his glory, and all his holy angels with him;" and when he shall sit upon the throne of his glory, and the nations shall be assembled before him, that he shall give call to us his church, welcoming us to everlasting habitations, saying, "Come, ye blessed of my Father"

The thing is certain, and the time is revealed, so that we know where to fix our hopes and expectations. And then we shall abide with him; this hope is the fullness of all our hopes. "So shall we ever be with the Lord." Oh, how I love the word "abide!" It is "abide in him" now; and "abide with him" then. Truly, there shall be "no more separations in the presence of the king."

We shall sing the new song, true! We shall join the "Alleluiahs"—blessed! But, better than all, we shall abide with him. "Wherefore comfort one another with these words."

But when shall these things be? Only at the coming of the Lord. Therefore I account the Second Advent a fundamental doctrine of Christ; I set all value upon it; I esteem it all-important, and my thoughts and hopes fly thither, as I wait for the promises of God until that day come.

In conclusion, I ask the questions: For what did God establish testimony in the earth? What are the purposes of his promises, and his design in giving them? Turn to Ps. 78:5, 7, and you will read these words: "He established a testimony in Jacob, and appointed a law in Israel which he commanded our fathers that they should make them known to their children….that they might set their hope in God, and not forget the works of God, but keep his commandments." And that is how I hear, and ever desire to hear, of the promise of Christ's return—knowing the testimony, to set my hope in God, through our Lord Jesus Christ, and obey him. Upon God's word do I hope. And that is all our privilege and experience who know God in Jesus and work righteousness. O then, let us pray for the coming of the Lord; and, as we pray, let us use the words of Daniel, and say: "Lord, remember the word unto thy servant, upon which thou hast caused me to hope. O send Jesus, who has been preached unto us, to fulfill all the promises thou hast made, and to make us full of joy with his presence."

Let us wait, with one arm around the cross and the other hand stretched out to grasp the crown, looking for Jesus to appear; that when he who is our life doth appear, we may also appear with him in glory.

This hope inspires, encourages, heartens, blesses, saves—with this I can live; and, if the Lord come not before I die, with this I can die; and with this realized I can rise, rejoicing in Christ Jesus.

May the Lord grant that these meetings may prove a great source of blessing to all, and may we keep in recollection and ponder what has been set forth, even after many days.

Personal—A Correction.

The undersigned being a committee to consider and settle certain differences that have grown out of a proposed debate between Eld. C. F. Sweet and Eld. J. W. Taylor, Br. Sweet being the aggrieved party, submit the following report and decision:

In the year 1870, a correspondence was carried on between Elds. Sweet and Taylor, in regard to holding a public discussion on what is known as the "Age to Come Question." The parties disagreed about the wording of the proposition and the debate, as a consequence, was not held. Some time during the latter part of the year, Eld Taylor sent to the editor of THE ADVENT CHRISTIAN TIMES a copy of the correspondence between himself and Eld. Sweet, with a request to publish. The editor, however, thinking the communication too personal, declined to publish it; but on his own judgment inserted in the "editorial gleanings," of 13th December, 1870, the following paragraph: "Br. J. W. Taylor requests us to state that he has not declined—as had been alleged—to discuss the question of probation after the Advent, although he declined to accept an indefinitely stated question as a subject of debate." Eld. Sweet took exception to this publication, as calculated to place him in a false light before the public. The committee deem it but just to Br. Sweet that this explanation, though late, should now be made. The parties have finally agreed on a question, and are willing, if thought best, to go on with the discussion; but the committee are of opinion that circumstances and the state of health of both parties are such as to render it unadvisable for the debate to proceed.

Camp-Meeting Report.

The Iowa Christian mission camp meeting met at New Hartford, June 6, 1873, and continued until June 15.

Meeting called to order June 14, by the President, P. S. W. Deyo, for the transaction of business.

Motion made and carried that we proceed to the election of officers.

The following officers were elected for the ensuing year: J. W. Burroughs, President; C. O. Ramsay, Vice-President; M. A. Newcomb, Sec; E. W. Hurlbert, Treas; and Jasper Ingals, H. W. Peck and H. Hamon, Board of Directors.

Moved and carried that N. F. Eggleston be elected auditor for the ensuing year.

Moved and carried that we adjourn to call of the president.

Called to order by the president at 5 p. m.

It was moved and carried that the president appoint a committee of two to see to teams on to morrow (Sunday). J. J. Towsley, and Nelson Peck, committee.

The treasurer's report was read and approved.

It was moved and carried to adjourn to the call of the board.

Our camp meeting was a success. The Lord was with us and that to bless. The ministers seemed to be filled with the Holy Spirit, and all seemed to realize the nearness of the end, and that the coming of the Lord was nigh at hand.

Ministers present to preach the word were C. C. Ramsay, P. S. W. Deyo, J. W. Burroughs, J. Ridley, A. Raymond, N. F. Eggleston, A. A. Webb, and E. A. Marsh. All things were conducted in love and harmony, and we parted with the blessed assurance of very soon meeting in the kingdom of Christ. May God bless and save at last on the other shore.

M. A. NEWCOMB, Sec.

From J. F. Adair, High Point, Iowa.

Sunday June 14th, I had the privilege of baptizing twenty-two persons. It was a blessed season. When we organized our church here many came out of other churches, and I must say we have in all a working people who care nothing for the scoffs and sneers of those around them, but are all young and old earnestly engaged in the cause of truth. May God bless and keep them faithful until the morning of deliverance shall come, joyful thought, when we shall gain the prize. "Our faith shall then be turned to sight before our wondering eyes."

From W. R. Smart, Gagetown, Mich.

Under the blessing of God I started a protracted meeting in Elkland Cottage S. H., being the first of our people there, with large congregations; and on Monday night the 27th, two Methodist ministers attacked me, and so weakly that they failed, and on the following Wednesday night a riot was raised, the enemy was like a roaring lion, going to cast me out of the temple. But God has upheld me with his right hand of power; the enemy retreated and the Lord has the field in peace, and has taken the veil off from the hearts of quite a number, and more are searching for truth. I hope and pray God that there is a good work begun here and the harvest will soon be gathered. May God hasten the time when our anti typical Moses will come down from the anti typical Mount Sinia, and with love in our hearts, we shall pass over in our own land in eternal rest.

From Eld. James Chenoweth, Volga, Ind.

You may think it strange that an old school Baptist, who had for fifty-five years entertained the doctrine of future rewards and punishments at death, should at this day and hour of his Christian pilgrimage, renounce it as erroneous, and accept instead the faith and practice of the denomination of Christians called Adventists. But such is the case. I had attended a series of meetings conducted by Dr. Field, at which time I discovered my error in maintaining the views of the old iron jacket predestination, and resolved to unite with the church at Volga, and on last Sabbath my wife, who had never made any pretentions to religion, went forward and confessed the Savior, and was immersed by Br. Thomas Porter, who occasionally preaches at the Chapel, and is esteemed highly as a man and an efficient worker in the good cause of the blessed Redeemer, in turning many from the ways of sin and folly. Also Br. Record is frequently on hand to administer to the faithful in Christ, of the things that pertain to their eternal wellbeing and future happiness. Should any of my Baptist friends but take the pains to read the Bible carefully, and impartially, for themselves, they will not fail to see and know why I am an Adventist, and no doubt they will go and do likewise.

From N. C. Miller, Valparaiso, Sullivan, Co., Mo.

God's truth is slowly and steadily marching forward in this part of the country. June the first I appeared in the defence of the cause in the grove at Br James A. Sloan's. I proclaimed our Master near, even at the door; taking for my subject, in the forenoon, Mat. 24:3-29, and in the evening, Dan. 12. We had a blessed time; two humble souls came forward and boldly took their stand with us. One is a minister of intelligence, from the Christian church. Yesterday, in Putnam county, he was ordained; prayer by N. C. Miller, charge by Eld Denslow, and right hand of fellowship by Eld. H. McKinley. Br. Albert Prickett, is his name; pray for him, his persecutions will now be great. The other one is directly from Satandom. He boldly yet humbly was buried with Christ in baptism. God surely must be working in him (John Auld) beyond human conception, for the devil with his agents seem to be determined to overthrow him. Br McCulloch some twelve months ago was mistaken unless Satan has emigrated from Illinois to Missouri, for the old enemy is here in all his wrath; but Jesus, by his Word, is here too, and I am inclined to think that Christ's church will prevail against the devil and triumph over the grave.

From S. C. Wellcome, Monticello, Minn.

I came to Monticello in March and commenced laboring in the blessed cause in the town and vicinity, and found a very kind and friendly people all through this section. Br. Collins has been sowing the good seed here for some years, and Br. Miller has preached occasionally to them since he came here last fall. I held evening meetings at Lilly Pond S. H., for some time, and once in two weeks on Sundays, and find that God is blessing his word at that place. At the Bailey S. H. across the Mississippi, and all through this region, the seed sown in the past is springing up. God is blessing his Word, and light is increasing; to God be all the praise. On Sunday, June 1, I had the blessed privilege of baptising sixteen happy souls in the Mississippi, a number of them heads of families. It was a pleasant scene to witness, and we have no doubt but what angels rejoiced over it, while so many went forward in obedience to Christ's commands and were buried with him in the likeness of his death, to rise again to newness of life; no longer to be under the dominion of sin, but we trust to "reckon themselves to be dead indeed to sin, and alive unto God," adopted into his family by faith, a proof of which they have given by their obedience.

June 3, I took the train for St. Paul and then a boat down the river to Winona, had a pleasant trip, and then took the train for Merrimack, Sauk Co., Wis., the place of the state camp meeting, which was then in session. Arrived there at about half past ten on Wednesday night, and found my way to camp, where, under the systematic arrangement of Br. Sheldon, "silence reigned supreme," over the whole encampment. I called for Br. Hough, and Br. Howard turned out and kindly assisted me in finding his tent, where I found comfortable lodging with our aged brother in the cause. I spent four days with this people, a season I shall never forget. Formed many acquaintances with the preaching brethren and heard them preach for the first time.

vas truly refreshing. Formed the acquaint- e of many lay brethren and sisters from 'erent parts of Wisconsin. O, how pleas- to meet so many of our Father's family, talk together of our present enjoyments future prospects. Our social meetings re truly times of power. All seemed to ungering for a greater fullness of a Savior's e, and received it, and we trust will let the keep burning, that their influence may wherever they go, and help others prepare the coming of Jesus. On Sunday evening sat down with about 200 of our Father's dren around the sacramental board to memorate the death and sufferings of our r Master. It was a solemn season never e forgotten.

n J. Anderson, South Haven, Mich.

have just read S. B. Goodenow's critique an article by "a previous writer in THE ES." He begins by stating that "a tho- gh investigation has convinced him that may and must and does exist when dead." es not this appear a contradiction? Men t when they cease to exist! Now a ough investigation has taught me rently. Who then, shall decide? No 's ipse dixit is more than bare assertion.

ow, I believe that John 11:26 refers to nal death. Lazarus was not dead. Christ self said "he sleepeth," just as all the d in Christ do. Death in the sense rred to by Christ means eternal death; as he had said, "Whosoever liveth and eveth in me shall not die eternally." This he true meaning of the Greek eis ton aion. Vulgate reads, "Et omnis qui vivit, et t in me non morietur æternum." This tes out Whitmore's understanding of ver," that is, not forever. Murdock's slation of the Syriac reads, "and every that liveth and believeth in me will not orever." The word never, according to ster, means "not ever." Hence, Whit- 's "not forever" is right, and Mr. lenow's criticism is wrong, and all the ges to which he refers, rightly under- , are in entire harmony with this view. John 8:51, "Verily, verily I say unto f a man keep my sayings he shall never eath." That is, he shall never experi- eternal death. The theoreo, means to o perceive, to experience; and eis ton means forever, or eternally; accord- , the Vulgate reads, "Si quis sermonem s servaverit mortem non videbit in ater- ," and the Episcopal liturgy, in its burial ce, true to the original, reads (John 11: thus, "And whoso liveth and believeth in all never die eternally."

erefore, our Lord's assertion that the believer should not die, has no reference pirit life in an aerial heaven, but to the al life of the just after the resurrection. do not see how any one, examining the ral in all its bearings, can doubt this. mere suspension of physical life is not rly death, but only what our Lord and postles so frequently call it, a sleep. t is the eternal separation of the man God. Hence the Greek word kolchaios, koluzo, to cut off, as is done in pruning ting off the limbs of trees, by which fe is extinguished in that which is cut s frequently made use of in the New ment to show the eternal extinction of fe of the wicked. Thus, in Mat. 25:46, verlasting punishment of the wicked is sented as eis kolasin aionion, or that is, rnal cutting off from God.

ave not seen it necessary to follow the of the critique through all the ie of his criticism. The true meaning hn 8:51 and 11:26, settles the whole r in dispute; and this meaning I think I given.

of Four Great Conquerors.

e four conquerors most conspicu- n the world's history are Alexan- Hannibal, Cæsar and Napoleon parte. What was their end?

exander, after climbing the dizzy hts of ambition, his temples bound chaplets dipped in the blood of ons, looked down upon a conquered d, and wept that there were no more ds for him to conquer, set a city on and died in a drunken revelry and uch.

nnibal, after having, to the aston- ent and consternation of Rome, d the Alps, and put all her armies ght, stripped three bushels of gold from the fingers of her slaugh- knights and made her very dations quake, fled from his own try, hated by those who once ingly united his name with that of God, calling him Hani-Aal, and at last by poison administered by his own hand, unwept and unhonored.

Cæsar, after conquering eight hundred cities, dyeing his garments in the blood of millions of his foes, and pursuing to death the only rival he ever had on earth, was miserably assassinated by those whom he considered his nearest friends, and in the very place which it had been his greatest ambition to reach.

Napoleon Bonaparte, whose mandates kings and popes obeyed, after spreading everywhere the terror of his name—after deluging Europe with blood, and clothing its nations in sackcloth, closed his days in banishment, on a lonely island, literally exiled from the world.

What comments on the evanescence of human greatness, especially the greatness won by the sword! These men all stood, for a time, on the very pinnacle of what the world calls greatness, and each in turn made the earth tremble by their tread or their bear word; yet they severally died a miserable death—one by intoxication, or by poison mingled with his wine; another, by his own hand, a suicide; a third, murdered by his friends; and a last, a lonely exile! How wretched the end of such greatness!—Sel.

THE GREAT FATHER'S LOVE.—On one occasion Guthrie was preaching from the text, "As I live saith the Lord I have no pleasure in the death of the wicked." He had described the feeling of a father who had to send a depraved son away from his door, and had made the audience feel how the child knew that he had but to amend and reform, and his father would receive him; and then, lifting himself up in the pulpit, and spreading his hands, he thundered out the words, "Is there any one in this house who believes that I would have pleasure in the death of the wicked? Would I not do whatever I could to rescue the worst among you? And what am I, sinner as I am, in comparison with him whose love I am vindicating?" One who was in the house at the time said that "it was as though a prophet spoke."

Our Young Folks.

Granny's Thinking Cap.

Close to the ruddy fire she sat;
And in her big arm-chair;
Pussy, curled snugly on the mat,
Was purring away her care.
'Twas then our dear, good Granny laid
Her knitting in her lap,
And, with a look so kind, yet staid,
Put on her "thinking cap."

"I really think that young folks now
Should very thankful be;
So many handsome toys somehow
We never used to see.
The dolls that made your Granny glad,
You would have put to bed;
The one that I dressed and petted had
A dried squash for its head.

"And then to think how children dress!
My sakes alive, how gay!
Dear little girls of five, or less,
Make such a grand display.
Neat gowns homespun we all got,
And they did well for us;
There's no use talking, things are not
The same they used to was!

"I'll have to go to school once more
To keep up, nowadays,
With little ones of three and four,
So changed are all the ways
Well, changes may be just as great
For their sweet eyes to see,
If they should linger here so late,
To chatter on like me.

"But, heaven be praised, not all can change,
And that my darlings here
Unto my heart are never strange,
But love their Granny dear!"
Then Granny's eyes began to peep,
The yarn fell from her lap;
While pussy woke, she fell asleep
And dropped her "thinking cap."

Grandpa's Gift.

JOSIE KEEN.

Willie, Kate, and Gussie, were at play together out-doors, when Willie suddenly shouted:

"There comes grandpa! There comes grandpa!" And away they all ran to meet him at the gate.

These children dearly loved their good, kind grandfather, and greatly enjoyed his visits to their home. Upon the present occasion they had so much to talk about, and were so eager to all talk at once, that he called them perfect little chatterboxes, and sent them off to play.

Before leaving, however, he called them to his side and told them an amusing story, and then gave to each of them a bright twenty five cent piece.

"There, chicks," he said, "let's see who will make their money go the furtherest." He then rode off, leaving three happy children.

"I know what I'll do with my money!" exclaimed Will. "I'll get some nice little brass rings to help fix the rigging to my vessel. I'm sure I can't make a better use of my money."

"And I mean to get some delicious cream candy," said Kate. "I have been wishing for some ever so long; and Emma Drake says they have nice fresh candy, and lots of good things, at the new confectionary."

"O, Kate, you are all the time getting something to eat! I don't think buying candy, or such stuff, will be making your money go far."

"Why, Will, grandpa meant only that we should please ourselves. What do you intend to get, Gussie?"

"I don't know yet exactly what I will get, Kate. I want some bright red ribbons for my dollies ever so much. Perhaps grandpa would not mind my spending my money in that way."

"Of course not little goosie!" said Will. "So, come, girls, let's now go shopping."

Just at that moment Freddie commenced to cry, and their mother could not pacify him. He was teething, and was very fretful, so the poor mother had been walking up and down the room with him until she was very tired.

"Mamma, give Freddie to me and I'll amuse him. See, Freddie, see this pretty, shiny, thing! Gussie will spin it on the floor for baby.

Freddy stopped crying, and with cushions on the floor, sat watching his sister toss about or spin her bright silver piece. Soon he was laughing and cooing, and the tired mother thanking Gussie, said she would lie down and get a little rest.

In the mean time, Will and Kate had gone to spend their money. Will found the little brass rings he was wishing for, and Kate saw so many goodies in the new store, that her twenty-five cent piece was soon spent. And I am sorry to add that nearly all she bought was eaten up by herself. She told her brother Will that he might have spent some of his own money for candy if he wanted any, and she took home only a tiny mite of cream candy to Gussie. The consequence was, she made herself sick, and could not go to Sunday school the next morning.

Gussie, though, was ready bright and early, for she loved her Sunday school, and always tried to be there in time, and listened attentively to all that was said by her teacher or superintendent. This Sunday a stranger addressed the children instead of their superintendent. He said he had come to tell them of the poor heathen—of how much they needed the Bible to teach them to give up their idols and learn to love the true God. He then said that every mite helped, for even twenty-five cents could get a Bible to send to them, and he hoped the teachers and scholars would give what they could toward this worthy object.

In an instant Gussie's hand went deep down into her pocket, and there, in the corner, lay her bright silver piece. She did not hesitate a moment, but at once drew it forth, and with a sweet, happy smile, handed it to her teacher for the poor heathen.

Grandpa Burton soon came again to see his pets.

"Well, little ones," said he, after they had had quite a chat together, "what use did you make of my last gift?"

"I got some little brass rings for my vessel," at once said Will. "And, grandpa, you must see how grand the rigging looks now. I can haul it up and down like that on a real vessel!"

"I am glad, dear, that my gift helped to complete your vessel. You have shown a great deal of patience and perseverance in making it. But, Will, in spending your pocket-money over it, have you remembered the tenth as belonging to the Lord, and not your own, to spend as you pleased?"

"I am sorry, grandpa, but really I forgot all about it," replied Will with a blush of shame. "But I'll try and be more careful in the use of my money for the future."

"That's right, my son! There is nothing like 'try, try again.' If you don't succeed at one time, why 'try try again.'"

The children laughed merrily at the comical manner in which their grandfather repeated these words, and they all joined in the second "try, try again."

"Now, Kate tell us what you did with your money?"

Kate hung her head and remained silent.

"I am afraid Kate did not make a very good use of her money," replied her mother. "There was a very sick little girl here Saturday night. She had eaten something which did not agree with her, and she could not go to Sunday school the next morning."

"What! not go to Sunday school? Miss her dear class in Sunday school? And all from being too greedy! Ah! I'm afraid we shall have to call this little girl selfish, greedy Kate."

Grandpa looked grieved, and Kate in shame hid as far behind him as she could get.

Dear little Gussie felt so sorry for her sister's disgrace that she forgot it was her turn to speak until she heard her dear mother say,

"Your gift to Gussie did some good, for out of it I got a refreshing nap."

"A nap out of my money? That's funny! Gussie, how did you sell your mamma a nap?"

"Why, grandpa, I did not sell mamma a nap." And Gussie laughed at the very idea. "I bribed Freddy, though, into keeping quiet by tossing about the shiny silver."

"And so mamma had a chance to rest a while! That was good. But what became of the money afterward?"

Gussie blushed, looked sly, and could not reply.

"Come, pet, whisper in grandpapa's ear what you did with your money."

Gussie went behind his chair, and stooping over, whispered something in his ear.

"Well done, Gussie! Your money has indeed gone the farthest. It has flown across the ocean to the far-away heathen. Darling you have made a good use of your money: first, in unselfishly amusing the baby so poor mother could get some rest, and then in helping to send the word of God to the benighted heathen. I am sure, dear, you must feel far happier in thus having disposed of your money than if you had selfishly expended it upon yourself."

"Dear children," added grandfather, "I wish you would all remember that 'it is more blessed to give than to receive,' and that even as young as you are you may find many little ways for doing good. Not always, too, with money, but through kind, unselfish deeds and words such as Gussie often sets you an example in doing."

The children had listened attentively to their grandpa, and Kate on giving him a good-by kiss promised to try and be less selfish, while Will said he would not forget his tithe in the future, and he would sometimes be as generous as Gussie in giving his all, if he came across a real need for it.

"That's right, pets; each try to do the best you can, and you will soon learn to overcome your faults, to be less selfish, and to feel happy in doing 'whatsoever (good) your hands find to do.'"

nave just read S. B. Goodenow's critique an article by "a previous writer in The es." He begins by stating that "a thogh investigation has convinced him that n may and must and does exist when dead."
es not this appear a contradiction? Men t when they cease to exist! Now a rough investigation has taught me rently. Who then, shall decide? No
's ipse dixit is more than bare assertion.
ow, I believe that John 11:26 refers to nal death. Lazarus was not dead. Christ self said "he sleepeth," just as all the d in Christ do. Death in the sense rred to by Christ means eternal death; as he had said, "Whosoever liveth and eveth in me shall not die eternally." This he true meaning of the Greek eis ton aiona.
Vulgate reads, "Et omnis qui vivit, et it in me non morietur aeternum." This tes out Whitmore's understanding of er," that is, not forever. Murdock's slation of the Syriac reads, "and every that liveth and believeth in me will not orever." The word never, according to ster, means "not ever." Hence, Whit-
's "not forever" is right, and Mr. enow's criticism is wrong, and all the ges to which he refers, rightly under-
, are in entire harmony with this view.
John 8:51, "Verily, verily I say unto if a man keep my sayings he shall never eath." That is, he shall never experi-eternal death. The theoreo, means to o perceive, to experience; and eis ton means forever, or eternally; accord-
, the Vulgate reads, "Si quis sermonem servaverit mortem non videbit in aeter-
." and the Episcopal liturgy, in its burial ce, true to the original, reads (John 11:
thus, "And whoso liveth and believeth in hall never die eternally."
erefore, our Lord's assertion that the believer should not die, has no reference pirit life in an aerial heaven, but to the l life of the just after the resurrection.
do not see how any one, examining the al in all its bearings, can doubt this.
mere suspension of physical life is not rly death, but only what our Lord and postles so frequently call it, a sleep.
is the eternal separation of the man
God. Hence the Greek word rolchaios, rolazo, to cut off, as is done in pruning ting off the limbs of trees, by which is is extinguished in that which is cut s frequently made use of in the New ment to show the eternal extinction of fe of the wicked. Thus, in Mat. 25:46, verlasting punishment of the wicked is sented as eis kolasin aionion, or that is, rnal cutting off from God.
ave not seen it necessary to follow the of the critique through all the ile of his criticism. The true meaning hn 8:51 and 11:26, settles the whole r in dispute; and this meaning I think I given.

"Dear children," added grandfather, "I wish you would all remember that 'it is more blessed to give than to receive,' and that even as young as you are you may find many little ways for doing good. Not always, too, with money, but through kind, unselfish deeds and words such as Gussie often sets you an example in doing."

The children had listened attentively to their grandpa, and Kate on giving him a good-by kiss promised to try and be less selfish, while Will said he would not forget his tithe in the future, and he would sometimes be as generous as Gussie in giving his all, if he came across a real need for it.

"That's right, pets; each try to do the best you can, and you will soon learn to overcome your faults, to be less selfish, and to feel happy in doing 'whatsoever (good) your hands find to do.'"

Business Department.

NO PAPER NEXT WEEK.

THE DEBT of the Association has for a long time been a great embarrassment to those connected with the office, and the time has now come when our honor as a body of Christians demands immediate and decided action. I cannot myself consent to do business longer in this way and for this reason have taken the responsibility not to publish the next number until two weeks from the date of the present issue, hoping that in the mean time all the liabilities of the Association will be satisfactorily adjusted, and the new Society enter free from embarrassment upon a successful and prosperous future. The transfer of the property of the Association to the new Society will be completed in a few days, which will place the entire publishing interest in the hands of the Advent people then, as a people, becoming individually responsible for the manner in which it is conducted.

Faith without works is dead. The promotion of the truth in this world depends upon those who profess it. God has ordained that we must make sacrifices, to give what is convenient is not a sacrifice, neither is it charity to give of our abundance. God requires something more than what is convenient. We must not delude ourselves with the idea that Providence is going to help us out when we have the means in our own hands with which to advance the gospel of Christ. In short, brethren, we must come up bravely and do what is required and open our purses, aiding the truth in a practical way. As we hope for our reward at the last day, let us act immediately and in earnest.

A. W. TUCKER,
Business Agent.

Job Work.

We are now prepared to do all kinds of job work with despatch, and in a satisfactory manner. Envelopes, Letter-Heads, Note Heads, Bill-Heads, Cards of all kinds, Circulars, etc., etc. Friends at a distance from printing offices, and often close to them, will do well to get our figures before ordering work elsewhere.

THE first edition of "Modern Spiritism," by C. C. Marston, is exhausted, and the second edition is printed and ready for delivery. The better class of work and consequent increase of cost in its preparation has necessitated a slight increase of price—from 12 to 15 cents post paid.

Notices.

Notice.

W Lunsford St Marys, Mo., wishes to be informed of the whereabouts of one John Conner, who came to St. Marys and made no small stir among the people as a powerful preacher and sain ly man, but on the 6th of June he disappeared and has not been heard of since. He was about five feet nine inches in height, heavy built, high forehead, blue eyes, very intelligent. If any of the readers of THE TIMES know of such a person they will confer a favor by writing to the above address.

MADISON—ROGERS. In Nashville Mich., July 3, 1873, by Eld P Holler Mr Francis M. Madison to Miss May Rogers.

Obituary.

BISSELL.—Drowned in the Shellrock River, at Marble Rock, Iowa June 7, 1873 Elmer, youngest son of Sherman and Harriet Bissell. Aged 10 years 9 months and 22 days.

Thus the enemy of our race is doing his work, not content with cutting off the aged he thrusts his sickle into the unripe grain cutting down the buds and blossoms, and gathering to himself the blade, the stock, and the ear. But his work will soon end, and he will be compelled to give up all that he has garnered, for Christ will destroy death and him that hath the power of death which is the devil. "Then shall they come again from the enemy."

Sermon by the writer from Jer. 31:16.

C. C. RAMSAY.

CARTER.—Died in Floyd, Iowa, June 4, 1873, Sidney Carter. Aged 66 years, 1 month and 22 days.

Br Carter gave his heart to Jesus during our meeting last winter and during his short but painful illness his hope of a resurrection was a rod and a staff to him. He rests in peace. Sermon by

C. C. RAMSAY.

SHAUL.—Died in Jewell Co. Kansas, Elizabeth Shaul. Aged 73 years.

Br. Shaul and family moved to Kansas last fall, from Iowa, where they embraced the Advent faith under the labors of Eld. Cornell, thirteen years ago. It was our sister's delight to talk of her hope of soon seeing Jesus, and to administer to the wants of weary pilgrims. She rose as usual on the morning of the 22d, but was taken suddenly ill and in one short hour was calmly sleeping in Jesus.

Asleep in Jesus, blessed sleep,
From which none ever wake to weep;
A calm and undisturbed repose,
Unbroken by the last of foes.

She leaves, beside her husband, three children to mourn. Words of comfort were spoken by the writer from Ps. 17. 15

ALICE E. RATHBUN.

The Northern Illinois A. C. Conference will hold its annual session during the campmeeting at Wyanet. It is hoped that each church within the bounds of this Conference will send either by delegate or by letter, a full report of the past year. Each minister is expected to be present in person or else report by letter.

Come brethren in the ministry and laity, let us make a united and earnest effort to proclaim to a judgment-bound world the good news of our soon coming King.

Any letters for the Conference should be addressed to the Secretary, Wyanet, Bureau Co., Ill. N. W. SPENCER, Prest.
C. C. MARSTON, Sec'y.

The camp meeting of the Northern Illinois Conference will be held at Wyanet, Bureau Co., commencing August 20, and continuing over two Sabbaths.

Wyanet is on the C. B. and Q. R. R.; west from Mendota. Those coming on the I. C. R.R., will change cars at Mendota. Those coming on the C. and R. I. R. R., will change at Burlington Crossing.

The camp ground is a half a mile east from the depot.

It is earnestly hoped that each church will be represented in the tented grove at Wyanet this year. Lumber will be furnished on the ground for making tents, at cost if destroyed, and free if uninjured. Let there be a general rally from all parts of the conference, and we should rejoice to see tents on the ground from any of our sister conferences. Come one, come all, laymen and ministers, brother and sister, saint and sinner, from this or any other conference. Come praying, come in the spirit of Elijah's God, and come to labor for the salvation of perishing sinners. We hope to see the best camp meeting this year ever held in the State. So mote it be.

A cordial invitation is hereby extended to any minister from abroad who may be desirous of attending the meeting. There will be a hearty welcome accorded to all who come in the spirit of the Master to labor for his glory.

For those who may wish to board on the ground ample provision will be made.

In behalf of Committee,
N. W. SPENCER, Chairman.
C. C. MARSTON, Secretary.

WM. A. & M. L. DURAND.

The Lord willing, one of the series of Time Campmeetings, (as per arrangements at the recent Charlestown Council, and advertised in the "Watchman's Cry,") will be held at Fairport, in the same grove where we held our meeting last year, to commence Sunday, July 6, and continue over the following Sunday.

The evidences for the coming of the Lord Jesus Christ this present year 1873, will be thoroughly canvassed by Brn. Geo. W. Brown, C. C. Barker, S. W. Bishop, Caleb Thompson, J. F. Nickerson, Jones, Wendell, and others.

Come out once more to the woods, dear brethren and sisters, to our feast of tabernacles. We expect a general rally of "all those that love his appearing," and especially of those who believe and those who desire to hear or support the evidences of Jesus' coming this watch—'tis the morning watch!

Let everyone coming to the forest, come prepared for forest emergencies; bring umbrellas, overcoats, overshoes, bedding, and the like, all you need; don't expect to borrow in the woods. Those who desire will arrange to board themselves, but it is recommended to spread a common table thus avoiding confusion.

A large boarding tent will be put up and plain, substantial fare furnished at 50c. per day; transient boarders will be charged 25c. per meal; dinner on Sundays, 50c. Tents can be rented at the following prices per week, freight extra: 24x30, $13; 16x24, $8; 12x17 $4.50, 9x12, $3; 7 or 9x9, $2.50; 14x14, $4.50. Send orders promptly to Br. D. T. Cooper, 70 Mount Hope Avenue, Rochester, N. Y.

Fairport is 10 miles east of Rochester, on the N. Y. C. R. R., (direct), and the campground is 1½ miles north of the depot. Come early and stay through the meeting. Pray for good weather and a profitable time.

"That Angel Story."

"This same Jesus, which is taken up from you into heaven, shall so come in like manner as ye have seen him go into heaven."

I love to tell the story
  Once told by angels bright,
Who left the courts of glory
  To tell the story right
Why stand ye, anxious gazing,
  Ye men of Galilee?
For him, ye saw ascending,
  Ye yet again shall see.

CHORUS—I love to tell the story,
    It fills my soul with glory,
    That blessed "Angel Story,"
    The Lord will come again.

I love to tell the story,
  Although it may seem new
To those who give attention,
  To much that is untrue.
The blessed "Angel Story,"
  I know it must be so,
And that is just the reason
  I tell it now to you.

CHORUS—

I love to tell the story—
  To those who never heard—
Of Jesus' glorious coming,
  According to his Word.
I love to tell the story,
  For those who know it best
Seem happy when 'tis told them,
  He comes with mansions blest.

CHORUS—

I love to tell the story,
  For soon he will appear;
While all his holy angels
  Attend him through the air.
I love to tell the story,
  And, when he comes, we'll rise
With resurrected dear ones,
  To meet him in the skies.

CHORUS—

Evil—Its Origin, Progress and End.

GEO. W. HURD.

That evil exists is a fact, that no sane man will for a moment deny; but why it exists, who brought it into existence, and when it was created, are questions that are not so easily answered. What is evil? Webster gives this answer, among others, "The cause of sin and suffering." Not sin, itself; nor suffering, itself, but "the cause of sin and suffering."

There are various evils existing in our world, in which there is no sin. Famine and pestilence are great evils. Sickness, mortality and pain are also evils. Evil and sin are two different things. Sin is a transgression of a divine law; crime, the breaking of a human law, while evil is the cause of sin and its consequent suffering. In other words, it is that principle that exists in our world—that tries mankind, by which character is developed and tested. This thought will be kept before the mind in reading this article. "Its origin," from whence did it spring? "When did it come into existence?" Other beings, intelligent creatures, had an existence before the time of man's creation. We know absolutely nothing, certainly, of any of these except those that we call angels, from the fact that there has been no need of any knowledge of any other, they not having anything to do in our salvation. The angels, however, are not only interested in our salvation, but have very much to do in this great work, being "ministering spirits (Pneumata) sent forth to minister unto those who shall be heirs of salvation. (Heb. 1:14.) These intelligences have passed through (and are passing) a trial state, developing character. Of the angels it is said (2 Pet. 2:4), "If God spared not the angels that sinned, but cast them down to hell (Tartarosas), and delivered them into chains of darkness to be reserved unto judgment." In this passage we have three prominent facts:

1. A part of the angels did not obey God, but sinned.

2. They are now reserved in chains of darkness.

3. This is to continue till the judgment, when they will doubtless be judged and punished. (See also, Jude 6 v.)

The cause of sin, then, must have existed before the creation of the angels—was placed before them at the time of their creation—they were tried, tested by it. Some were led away, overcome, and sinned, while others glorified God in the trial, overcome; were faithful, trusting in God for help, and are called "Holy (or pure) Angels." Some tell us that the devil is the author of evil; that he created it and brought it into being. If this be so, then it follows that the devil possesses creative power. The devil is supposed to have been created an angel of light, and I think this view correct, as any other view would involve the character of God, making him the creator of a sinful being at the time of its creation; whereas, God's creatures were good, and very good, when created. But if this "angel of light" was pure, at the time of his creation, the testing principle—evil—must have existed prior to that time. I cannot believe that the devil was created a devil.

This leads us to inquire: "Who created evil?"

We will simply turn to the "Word" to obtain an answer: "I form the light and create darkness; I make peace and create evil; I, the Lord, do all these things. (Isa. 45:7; see also, Amos 3:6.) Here allusion is made to the work of creation, light and darkness: "I form them," says God; and, in the next breath, declares: "I create evil." We believe all that God has done has been conceived in wisdom, and accomplished for the good of his creatures; hence, we are forced to inquire into the motives that caused God to create, and the uses of evil. If we know anything at all of God's way of saving men, it is by developing character, by faith in God, and in his son Jesus Christ. In order to this development the two opposing principles—good and evil—must exist. In order that we may purify and refine the gold, we kindle up the fire in the furnace, place the gold in the midst and melt it; keeping it there until all the dross and other substances are removed, then we take it out, but not until our face is seen clearly in the melted mass. So it would seem that this principle is a kind of necessity in the economy of God. Man must be tried; character cannot be developed without a test. Without an opposing influence man could not transgress (voluntarily) God's law; he would do good, because there would be no desire, no inclination, to sin, and if there was no holy influence from God he would do wrong, and that continually, having no desire, no inclination to lead him from the wrong into the right; hence, we conclude that it must have existed since the time of the creation of the first intelligences. Existed as a principle by which, and through which, they were to develope a character for or against God. But we are met with this objection, "God tempteth no man with evil;" "but every man is tempted when he is drawn away of his own lust lust enticed." All Scripture, if rightly understood, will be found in perfect harmony with itself, but the Word declares that "God did tempt Abraham," and yet it says when we are tempted we are "drawn away of our lust." Lust is inordinate, sinful desire. Did Abraham lust after the life of his son? Did he desire, inordinately, to slay the child of promise, the son of his old age? No! How, then, are we to harmonize these two statements? Answer: When we are tempted, and yield to the tempter, then we are drawn away of our own lust; but every one that is tempted does not yield. Many resist the tempter and he flees from them. Our Saviour was tempted, and was led, not by his lust, but by the Spirit, to be tempted of the devil." Here, God had something to do in the work; his Son must needs be "tempted" in all points like we; he was thus tempted, but was not drawn away of lust, nor did he yield. But some tell us that God's Spirit did not lead Jesus to be tempted, but it was the devil's spirit. It follows, then, that he yielded to the devil and followed him; this, I should say, was wrong, as we are to resist him, with the promise that he will flee from us.

The great temptation with Abraham, when God demanded Jacob as a burnt offering, was to disobey God. He had no desire to slay his son, but rather to save him alive. But for our good, Abraham must be tempted and tried as by fire, and God himself kindles the fires of trial and temptation. Abraham is placed into it, but the fires burn only to melt and refine, not to burn and consume; faith brings Jehovah down and trust embraces him. So of Job and the other notable worthies that have lived, and who have stood as bright examples of faith, patience and trust in God.

Tribulation is one of the blessings. Strange as it may seem that is promised to the people of God, and it seems a necessary ingredient in their lives, and results in beautiful and glorious fruitage. "Tribulation worketh patience, patience experience, and experience hope, and hope maketh us not to be ashamed." "In this world ye shall have tribulation," says our Saviour; "but in me ye shall peace." But whence springs this tribulation? Evidently from "evil." In this tribulation the saint is thrust into the furnace and tried—it may be by false brethren, or seeming friends, or father, or mother, or wife, or husband, to draw him away from God, destroy his confidence and trust in him, but he leans on God for strength; calls upon him for grace and wisdom, and when the "thorn" pierces him and he calls to God, like Paul, to have it removed, the answer comes, "My grace shall be sufficient for thee."

IT is not worth while [illegible] much about doing good. [illegible] best we know, minute by minute, h[illegible] by hour, we insensibly grow to goodness, as fruit grows to ripeness. "Who hath despised the day of small things?"

WHEN we pray, we speak to God; when we read the Scriptures, God speaks to us.

The Lord Will Come.

S. K. GIBSON.

Much is said on the coming of Christ. Some look for him at death, or rather that death is the coming of the Lord, and also that he comes when one is converted, or sick, and in many "providential" ways. Now, to me, this kind of talk about the coming of our Lord is the worst kind of skepticism. They claim to believe in the advent of Christ, when, in fact, they do not. It is a faith that courts death as a friend and savior; whereas, the Bible clearly teaches us it is an enemy. And with this view, Christ is robbed of his glory and power in the great work of atonement for man, by his sufferings and death, his resurrection, his ascension and priesthood, and at last his coming personally back to earth as our life giver, to raise the dead, change the living, and give immortality and eternal life to those who have sought it by faith in him who is able to give it; and also to reign upon his throne in all that resplendent glory revealed to the disciples in the mount of transfiguration.

Said one minister (of that kind of faith) last winter, in Brooklyn, while warning his hearers against "This soul-sleeping doctrine," "These people believe that when a man is dead he is dead forever, or perhaps he may, if a good man, crawl out of his hole sometime." Does such language as this indicate any faith in the coming of Christ, or in the resurrection of the dead? Would he now dare stand before his congregation and tell them that Christ would come personally? Would he dare tell them "there would be a resurrection of the dead—both of the just and the unjust?" No, for he has robbed Christ of his glory and his crown, and placed it upon the head of an enemy. He has virtually said to death, "Thou art my friend and savior; by thee, and not by Christ, I enter the promised kingdom."

"O, shame! where is thy blush?"

Truly, "The prophets prophesy falsely; the priests bear rule by their means, and my people love to have it so, and what will ye do in the end thereof?" And does this condition of things indicate the coming of the Lord at hand? I think so. "Knowing this first, there shall come scoffers in the last days, saying, where is the promise of his coming." Men of itching ears "shall turn away from the truth and be turned unto fables," "and believe a lie;" "believe not the truth," "seeking honor one of another," "having men's persons in admiration because of advantage," "wellswithout water," "dead, twice dead, plucked up by the roots," "evil men and seducers shall wax worse and worse." Verily, the Lord is at hand. Glory! He comes to reign!

The Silent Savior.

C. C. M.

There is grandeur sometimes in silence. It sometimes occurs in the midst of heated controversy that silence on the part of an injured and assaulted [illegible] tant is his most powerful and effective reply. There are points in every man's life when he should be silent. Though the winds may blow furiously and there may be terrible storms all about, yet in the midst of the war of elements you may show your manhood by respectful silence.

Did you ever think of that great conflict of elements through which our Savior passed in silence? His life generally speaking, was not filled up with this element of silence. He was not quiet and still when he saw the gambling in the temple. He was not silent on the stormy sea when his disciples were crying for help. W[illegible] sick and the dying were [illegible] to him for assistance, he was [illegible] silent. Oh! no, he was always active and diligent; reproving sin, healing the oppressed, and doing good wherever he went.

But now he stands before Pilate's judgment seat, having been apprehended by a public mob, and he is silent. A large crowd of exasperated foes are assembled who have been meditating his death for long months, and while they exclaim, 'let him be crucified,' he is silent. His friends have all forsaken him, even those who swore they would not. Some have even denied him with bitter oaths. He makes no boisterous reply. A silent 'look' is sufficient to send deep conviction to Peter's heart. At proper intervals our Savior spoke a few brief words, and so witnessed a good confession; but during the greater part of that terrible ordeal Jesus was silent.

"Drowning Men will Catch at a Straw."

O. D. GIBSON.

How emphatically is the above truth illustrated almost daily in the many ways that are taken to evade the truth, to stave off if possible an easy and natural conclusion.

Not long since an immortal-soulist was arguing an immaterial nature in man on the ground that God had 'breathed the breath of life' into him after he made him. The idea was then advanced, that if the breath of life being in him, was evidence of immortality, then were the animals also immortal, for it is in them. This was met with the argument that theirs was not the same, for God 'breathed' man's into him, but he did not do so by the animals for the Word nowhere says so. Now if this is a valid reason, then Adam alone has an immortal nature, for when Eve was made the Record does not say that God breathed any breath of life into her nostrils, or gave her any in any other way. Shall we therefore conclude that she had none, or if she had, that it was any different from Adam's? So then, if silence as to how the beasts got their 'breath of life' proves it to be different from Adam's, then the same thing proves the same against Eve, hence the male head of the human family had an immortal nature while the female head was destitute. Therefore their decendants are mongrels, with only partial or mixed natures, providing that immortal, as well as material natures are communicated by human generation. And if not, then the immortality ceased with Adam, for God has not 'breathed the breath of life' into any ones nostrils since, as he did into his. Query: Does generating convey to the child from the parent any nature which is not inherent in the flesh? if not, though Adam were immortal, how came we by any?

WHEN carnal men talk of "hoping for the mercy of God," they mean by it, hoping to continue a little longer in the indulgence of sin.

"O, shame! where is thy blush?"

Truly, "The prophets prophesy falsely; the priests bear rule by their means, and my people love to have it so, and what will ye do in the end thereof?" And does this condition of things indicate the coming of the Lord at hand? I think so. "Knowing this first, there shall come scoffers in the last days, saying, where is the promise of his coming." Men of itching ears "shall turn away from the truth and be turned unto fables," "and believe a lie;" "believe not the truth," "seeking honor one of another," "having men's persons in admiration because of advantage," "wellswithout water," "dead, twice dead, plucked up by the roots," "evil men and seducers shall wax worse and worse." Verily, the Lord is at hand. Glory! He comes to reign!

The Silent Savior.

C. C. M.

There is grandeur sometimes in silence. It sometimes occurs in the midst of heated controversy that silence [illegible] the part of an injured and assaulted [illegible]tant is his most powerful and effective reply. There are points in every man's life when he should be silent. Though the winds may blow furiously and there may be terrible storms all about, yet in the midst of the war of elements you may show your manhood by respectful silence.

Did you ever think of that great conflict of elements through which our Savior passed in silence? His life generally speaking, was not filled up with this element of silence. He was not quiet and still when he saw the gambling in the temple. He was not silent on the stormy sea when his disciples were crying for help. W[illegible] sick and the dying were [illegible] to him for assistance, he was [illegible] silent. Oh! no, he was always active and diligent; reproving sin, healing the oppressed, and doing good wherever he went.

But now he stands before Pilate's judgment seat, having been apprehended by a public mob, and he is silent. A large crowd of exasperated foes are assembled who have been meditating his death for long months, and while they exclaim, 'let him be crucified,' he is silent. His friends have all forsaken him, even those who swore they would not. Some have even denied him with bitter oaths. He makes no boisterous reply. A silent 'look' is sufficient to send deep conviction to Peter's heart. At proper intervals our Savior spoke a few brief words, and so witnessed a good confession; but during the greater part of that terrible ordeal Jesus was silent.

"Drowning Men will Catch at a Straw."

O. D. GIBSON.

How emphatically is the above truth illustrated almost daily in the many ways that are taken to evade the truth, to stave off if possible an easy and natural conclusion.

Not long since an immortal-soulist was arguing an immaterial nature in man on the ground that God had 'breathed the breath of life' into him after he made him. The idea was then advanced, that if the breath of life being in him, was evidence of immortality, then were the animals also immortal, for it is in them. This was met with the argument that theirs was not the same, for God 'breathed' man's into him, but he did not do so by the animals for the Word nowhere says so. Now if this is a valid reason, then Adam alone has an immortal nature, for when Eve was made the Record does not say that God breathed any breath of life into her nostrils, or gave her any in any other way. Shall we therefore conclude that she had none, or if she had, that it was any different from Adam's? So then, if silence as to how the beasts got their 'breath of life' proves it to be different from Adam's, then the same thing proves the same against Eve, hence the male head of the human family had an immortal nature while the female head was destitute. Therefore their decendants are mongrels, with only partial or mixed natures, providing that immortal, as well as material natures are communicated by human generation. And if not, then the immortality ceased with Adam, for God has not 'breathed the breath of life' into any ones nostrils since, as he did into his. Query: Does generating convey to the child from the parent any nature which is not inherent in the flesh? if not, though Adam were immortal, how came we by any?

WHEN carnal men talk of "hoping for the mercy of God," they mean by it, hoping to continue a little longer in the indulgence of sin.

Age of the World.

CHARLES FOOKS.

It will be our endeavor to show from Scripture, that the age of this world, from man's fall to its destruction by fire, is clearly foretold by him who does nothing but what he first reveals his secret to his servants. (Amos 3:7.) Our desire is to draw the attention of all those who love the appearing of our adorable Redeemer to the fact, that if the reasoning followed here is correct—and we have every reason to believe it to be so—that we are close upon the time of satan's overthrow, and the inauguration of the Lord Jesus beneficial and glorious reign as King over the whole earth.

The first proof we shall present out of the numerous passages touching upon this subject, which abound in the Holy Record, is Gen. 2:4. We would ask our readers to attentively examine this clause—"These are the generations of the heavens and of the earth." (Chap. 2:4.) "These." Mark well this word. In Gen. 1:1, we find that "In the beginning God created the heaven and the earth." And in the second chapter we are told that in six days the heaven and the earth and all the host of them were created, and on the seventh day God rested from all his works. Moses then winds up with this significant expression: "These are the generations of the heavens and of the earth." What means this remarkable clause? Why, certainly, we think it has reference to the age of the world, typified by the seven days of the creation week. It is here necessary to show from Scripture the length of these days in their typical relation to the age of the world. We shall find that each of these days, in a typical sense, extends over a period of exactly one thousand years. In 2 Peter 3:8, we read; "But, beloved, be not ignorant of this one thing, that one day is with the Lord as a thousand years, and a thousand years as one day." (See Ps. 90:4.)

In the creation week, we have six days of labor, and as God has been pleased to use types to shadow forth his dealings with the children of men, shall we reject this as a type of the world's long and weary solitude under the galling yoke of Satan's blighting rule? With the testimony found in Gen. 2:4, we cannot reject it. We believe that God in mercy to our race, so that we might know the time of our deliverance, plainly teaches in this passage that the world will be subject to Satan for six thousand years, when, according to his promise, the seed of the woman should bruise the head of the serpent. (Gen. 3:15.)

Our second proof is found in the creation of man. (Gen. 1:27.) On the sixth day God made man, and in the latter part of the same day invested him with supreme authority over every living creature wherein was the breath of life. This authority, alas! was soon lost. Barely a day had passed before the great enemy of our race, through the mediumship of a serpent, seduced our first parents from their allegiance to the Most High. Thus it was that they lost universal dominion, being overcome by the father of lies, who became from that time the god and prince of this world. In the fact that man's creation was on the sixth day, and his investure with supreme authority in the latter part of it, and his fall immediately afterwards, we evidently have a type of his bondage for six thousand years under the accursed rule of Satan; during which time "the whole creation groaneth and travaileth in pain together until now; and not only they, but ourselves also, which have the first fruits of the Spirit, even we ourselves groan within ourselves, waiting for the adoption, to-wit, the redemption of the body." Even here, however, God has not left us to despair. He whose delights are with the children of men, and who has loved them with an everlasting love, seeing the ruin which would be wrought by man's fall, provided the seventh day, as the time in which that authority should be restored, and the yoke of the oppressor broken from off our necks. Part of the prophecy contained in Gen. 3:15 has already been fulfilled. The serpent has bruised the heel of the seed. The other half is still in abeyance; but the time is rapidly drawing near for its accomplishment. As we contemplate the wisdom of him whose understanding is past searching out, and who declared the end from the beginning, we are compelled to exclaim, "This is the Lord's doing; it is marvelous in our eyes."

Our third proof is found in Lev. 25:2-7. In this type we have the six thousand years of toil and pain represented by six years, in which the Israelites were allowed to cultivate their land. The seventh year was commanded to be observed as a Sabbath of rest unto the land. This year was emphatically the year of release. In it every Hebrew servant was made free, and to be plentifully supplied with the substance of his master. (See Deut. 15:1-18.) The land was also to rest, so that the poor might eat and be satisfied, and what they left was to be for the beasts of the field. How beautifully does this picture exhibit the tender love and watchful care of Him who is ever mindful of the wants of the meanest of his creatures. How significantly does this seventh year of rest and plenty—type and shadow—point to the seventh thousanth year of this world's history, as the time when the curse shall be removed from off the earth by the seed of the woman—our great Emancipator. For this purpose he wore the crown of thorns—the earth's curse—nailing it to his cross, and bearing it away into oblivion. By this act he purchased the freedom of the earth. And now the time draws near for its restoration to Edenic beauty. In that time, "the wilderness and the solitary place shall be glad,.. and the desert shall rejoice, and blossom as the rose. It shall blossom abundantly, and rejoice even with joy and singing; the glory of Lebanon shall be given unto it, the excellency of our God." "Then shall the mountains and the hills break forth into singing, and all the trees of the forest shall clap their hands." As in the type, so in the anti-type, the effect upon the poor of the people will be most blessed.

At present, oppression is the ruling spirit. What mean these numerous strikes? What mean these haggard and care worn frames, that crawl up and down the streets of our cities? Oppression, oppression! Yet, there is a time coming when the great Deliverer shall arise and plead the cause of the poor, breaking in pieces their oppressors. (Read Ps. 72.) The effect upon the animal creation is great. The beasts of prey have lost all their ferocity, and are become as the lamb. "They shall not hurt nor destroy in all my holy mountain, for the earth shall be full of the knowledge of the glory of the Lord, as the waters cover the sea." These are types, shadows, and promises of the good things to come, and "were written for our learning," and if we neglect them we do so at our loss.

Chronologically, we are very near the end of the six thousand years of Satan's rule, and in harmony with which, signs proclaim the speedy coming of the Lord Christ—to destroy those who destroy the earth; to raise his sleeping saints and change his living ones; when together, we shall be caught up in the clouds to meet him whom, not having seen, our souls love, and so we shall be ever with the Lord,—to claim the kingdoms of this world as his right, and to ascend the throne of his father David, and reign right gloriously before his people. Then "the redeemed of the Lord shall return and come with singing unto Zion; and everlasting joy shall be upon their head; they shall obtain gladness and joy, and sorrow and mourning shall flee away."

"Watchman! what of the night? The morning cometh," — yes, the "morning cometh" for the faithful watching ones—"and also the night." Yes, reader, it is no fiction. If you harden your heart against the grace of God, and the calls of his mercy, then know of a certainty that there is in store for you a night of awful blackness—a night of pain and anguish, tribulation and distress in the lake of fire, which is the second death.

Already we catch the faint rumbling sound of chariot wheels, as we cry, "Come, Lord Jesus, come quickly." As the hart panteth after the water brooks, so our soul panteth after our Beloved. We are weary with his long tarrying. As the bride longeth for the day of her nuptials, so our soul fainteth for the marriage ceremony with our long absent Bridegroom. We would fain see the King in his beauty, and be among the beautiful ones who will dwell forever in that land that is now near. And as we listen upon our watch tower, we catch on the silent breeze the accents of that voice which thrills our mortal frames with "joy unspeakable and full of glory," saying, "Rise up, my love, my fair one, and come away. For, lo, the winter is past, the rain is over and gone; the flowers appear on the earth; the time of singing of birds is come, and the voice of the turtle is heard in our land; the fig tree putteth forth her green figs, and the vines with tender grapes give a good smell. Arise, my love, my fair one, and come away."

Beloved, in view of our soon being caught up in the air, together with the risen saints, to meet the Lord of life and glory, we would sound in your ears the last commandment—"Love one another."

In Difficulties Still.

O. D. GIBSON.

Who will help me out of them? I am yet in perplexity to understand the subject of sanctification, as set forth by some. There are yet some very dark spots in it, or else there is an ailing in my eyesight; which is it? Either I am in the dark, and do not understand what conversion is, and what it takes to constitute a Christian, or else some who write on this subject do not. They make this matter a duality, as the immortal soulists do the being of man. Conversion, they say, brings us into a state of justification, in which state the heart is full, or partially full of inbred sin, hence is still corrupt and filthy. Yet it is in a state of justification before God. Now it must have another something, which is sanctification. This takes out all his inbred sin, cleanses and purifies him wholly. This is the second blessing, the second stage or step in Christian experience. This, I think, is a fair statement. If this is a correct position it causes the following thoughts to arise in my mind.

Probably ninety-nine out of every hundred Christians never profess sanctification. They live and die merely converted men and women. Now, what is their condition, will they be saved or lost? If lost, then what good has their conversion done them? surely none at all. And yet they died in a state of justification before God. But if on the other hand they are to be saved, then sanctification is not necessary to salvation, for only one is saved with it, while ninety-nine are saved without it. But this will not do, for Paul says, "It is the will of God, even your sanctification." Therefore only one in the hundred converted Christians can be saved.

Again another difficulty arises about this state of justification in sin. How can a man be justified with sin in his mind, or heart? Would not God thus make an allowance for sin? Will God hear such an one pray? "If I," says David, "regard iniquity in my heart, God will not hear me." If a man has inbred sin is he not a sinner? John says, "sin is the transgression of the law," and "whosoever sinneth hath not seen him, neither knoweth him," and "is of the devil." Can such have been converted, and are they Christians?

Again, can a man be justified short of doing the will of God? Paul says, "It is the will of God even your sanctification." How then get justified before you are sanctified? Will God justify us in disobedience? When he says, "be ye holy," will he justify us short of it?

Again, John says, "If we confess our sins he is faithful and just to forgive us our sins and to cleanse us from (one half? no! but) all unrighteousness." At what time do men confess their sins if not when they repent? And if forgiven and cleansed from all sin, how many inbred sins are there left to cleanse out afterward? Does not the blood of Christ cleanse from all sin? Does God do his work at the halves? Does he accept the heart when but half subdued, but half yielded to his will? Is conversion like taking a room full of filth and cleaning out one corner, or one half, and leaving the rest for an after job? If so, I have wofully misapprehended the matter, for I have always preached entire consecration, a giving all for Christ, that peace and pardon could be obtained on no other terms. If I have been wrong I would like to be set right, for if God will accept half of a heart at a time, I think I know of several whom I can enlist to start on those terms quite soon. I have no doubt I can get two where I now get but one. What an advantage then it will be. Will some one help me in understanding this matter.

To get at it more direct I will put forth a few queries:—

1. When do old things pass away?
2. When do all things become new? (2 Cor. 5:17.)
3. When does a man become a new creature?
4. When is "our old man crucified that the body of sin might be destroyed" at conversion, or years afterward? (Rom. 6:6.)
5. When do we put off the old man and put on the new? (Col. 3:10.)
6. If there is sin in our heart, is the old man off? Have all things become new?
7. At what point in the Christian's experience does the efficacy of Christ's blood take effect? Is it not when we believe?
8. Does it cleanse from all sin, or only a part?
9. If from all sin, is this not sanctification, and hence, justification?
10. Is not this the point where Rom. 5:1 comes in? "Therefore being justified by faith, we have peace with God through our Lord Jesus Christ"? Also Rom. 8:1.
11. How then does one need cleansing again unless he return to sin again, "like the sow that was washed to her wallowing in the mire?"

My Belief.

MRS. LIZZIE CLOSSMAN.

I believe that God "formed man of the dust of the ground and breathed into his nostrils the breath of life," (not that God put into him an immortal soul,) as he says this dust-man "became a living soul;" and I will here say that the words immortal soul are not found in God's Book; on the contrary, the first law given to man was addressed to a being capable of dying, saying, "In the day thou eatest thereof dying thou shalt die." Man disobeyed this law through the instigation of Satan, and became subject to the penalty; but having access to the tree of life, he had within his reach the means of perpetuating this mortal nature; so God, in mercy and love, turned him out of the garden, lest he eat and live forever in sin. Thus left to the laws of nature God's words are fulfilled, and if thus left without the redemption of Christ the race would have become extinct. God's plan for peopleing the world would have been thwarted and Satan triumphant; but God, knowing the end from the beginning, in wisdom provided the way whereby man might be redeemed from the power of death, and his law be honored in giving his only Son who willingly pays the purchase price, agreeing with the Father to take upon himself the nature of man, and keep God's law perfectly, thus having a right to this life, and then willingly giving that life in exchange for our race; thus, through this covenant of Father and Son, a second probation, on trial for eternal life is given through faith in Christ; and even before the guilty pair are driven from their forfeited Eden, we hear a gracious promise of a Saviour in the words "the seed of the woman shall bruise the serpent's head." Here, too, most likely, were sacrifices instituted by God himself, pointing to the Lamb of God that taketh away the sin of the world.

Having disobeyed God they are driven from their home; they are no longer fit to enjoy it, and in sorrow they see the gates closed against them; yet they were buoyed up by the precious promise of a coming Saviour. Soon children are born to them, and the fond parents look to one of these as their deliverer. They remember not in their joy that they have forfeited the dominion promised them by the Father, and that they must suffer long years in bondage to Satan, who had usurped the throne intended for them. They must, by bitter sorrow and tears be made to realize their loss and the greatness of their deliverance. Soon their hopes are well-nigh crushed. Abel, their son, is dead—murdered by his brother! What but the immutable promise of God could have sustained them in such a trial? Abel was dead, but from his lifeless body they were enabled to look in faith to him who would destroy Satan, who had the power of death. From this time there are two families on earth; those who by faith become the sons of God, and the other class, called the children of men, or Satan, who still continues to work in the hearts of all those who reject Christ to believe the lie that he told in Eden, "Ye shall not surely die, ye shall be as Gods." Here is the first intimation of immortality that we find in the Bible. But follow Satan's family on down to our time, and we will find that this is the great foundation on which Satan builds all the plans he has devised to lead men from Christ—pre-existence of souls, transmigration of souls, Mohammedism, saint-worship, purgatory, Swedenborgianism, Latter-Day Saints, spiritism, all these gigantic edifices fall to rise no more by just knocking out this stone. Meanwhile God has never been without a seed through faith. Follow them down through the flood to the calling of Abraham, who in faith offers his only son Isaac as a burnt offering, and receives him as from the dead, a figure of the resurrection. Thence on down to the giving of the law to the Israelites, and we find the penalty still the same, "the soul that sinneth it shall die."

Surely this should be the place to explain death if it meant that the body only should suffer the penalty, and the real sinner escape it altogether, living on as long as God, defying his power and increasing in sin. If it meant eternal life in misery, would God be just to thus leave them in ignorance? But you will say that the Bible says "the spirit goes to God who gave it." Yes, and it goes as God ve it, as "the breath of life," not as intelligent entity, if so, the wicked to God as well as the righteous.

We find moreover, that the words re rendered spirit is applied to the wer animals as well as to man. But o pass on still down the stream of ne until our Saviour makes his ap- arance. He has promised to take e sinner's place, and the justice of od demands that the full penalty of e law shall be met by him. Behold m in the garden agonizing as he be- mes sin for our race. Thence go th him to the hall of Pilate, for- ken, buffeted, despised, doomed to e most ignominious death! See m faint as he meekly bears the cross d upon him by those he came to ve! See him lifted up upon that oss that he might draw all men unto n. See his bleeding hands and feet erced by the cruel nails! Hear him agony crying "My Father, my ather, why hast thou forsaken me?" en crying with a loud voice he gave his spirit; but the law demands the t farthing. The spear must be nged into his side that blood may w for remission of sins. Now the w is satisfied. We have seen the l penalty descend upon our Re- emer. Now, was it everlasting isery? You will say he was infinite, erefore his sufferings were infinite. ue, therefore they were adequate to e demand of the law for many sin- rs. His sufferings were not eternal sery nor eternal banishment from d, but death. He gave his Adamic blood life as a ransom for our race, d never took it again, but was quick- ed at his resurrection by the spirit, d the same spirit that raised up rist from the dead shall also quicken ur mortal bodies.

It is not necessary for our spirit to before the body to heaven in order preserve our identity, for our life hid with Christ in God. As was rist, so shall we be also at the res- rection. How was this? As he ought life and immortality to light rough the gospel, here we will find t what it is. He says, "I am he at was dead, and behold I am alive evermore." He does not say that e real Christ never died but went out as usual, even preaching to ades confined in the interior of the rth, then, after three days, re-enter- g the clay house that never had life. , no; he tells us plainly that the me Jesus that died was alive.

We are told that eternal life is "the t of God," and that those only shall ve immortality who "through patient ntinuance in well doing" merit it. Christ bought the race from the damic death they will all be raised to e again. Those who are Christ's ll be raised immortal, those out of rist will, after the judgment, suffer e penalty of the law for actual nsgressions. Having died in their s they now die for their sins. Here the second death—this will be eter- l punishment. No awakening, but ckness of darkness forever.

There is no promise that the world ll ever be converted. The two milies still exist, and Christ says the heat and the tares will grow together til the end. As it was in the days Noah so shall it be when the Son Man cometh. Then the separating ne will have come. Then will the cked, together with Satan and his gels, be cast into the lake of fire epared for them. Thus will all evil ve an end; there being no escape r those who neglect so great salva n.

A forcible figure of the complete struction of the wicked is given us the Valley of Hinnom, where the fuse of the city was thrown to be stroyed. This accumulated filth as burned; if any remained after the e went out it was consumed by orms. If the fire did not go out or e worms die the destruction was sure. So Christ said in applying this figure to the punishment of the wicked "Their worm dieth not and the fire is not quenched." Thus complete destruction must follow. This Gehenna is the only hell of punishment mentioned in the Bible. Here Satan with his works will be destroyed and the earth be purified; the good that have been raised from the dead together with the righteous that are alive at Christ's coming, after being changed to immortality in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, will be caught up with Christ in the air, be gathered into the New Jerusalem, there to remain until this inidgnation be overpast, when this glorious city will descend to the renewed earth. Then man shall be restored to his purchased possession; then will the meek inherit the earth; then will the whole earth be filled with God's glory; then will paradise be restored and the redeemed shall enjoy it; then will the penitent thief, in answer to his prayer, be remembered. This is the glorious reality that Paul witnessed in vision; the third and everlasting heaven. The saints, ever since Christ's resurrection, have been waiting and praying for this glorious consummation; so Paul is heard to say that he is in a strait between two, not knowing which to choose, but he did chose his departure to Christ at his returning, as the original would literally read, and when his work was done he did not expect to receive his reward in a disembodied state, in a sky kingdom, but said his crown was laid up for him until that day, when he, together with all those that love his appearing would receive theirs from him who has said, "Behold I come quickly and my reward is with me." Even then Christ's coming was the hope of the church, yet they did not expect that day until certain events should come to pass by which they were to know that it was nigh, even at the door.

Most of these landmarks or signs are in the past. The last jots and tittles of prophecy are being fulfilled before our eyes; therefore I believe his coming is very nigh. I rejoice in the well-grounded hope of living to see my Lord come in his glory. I do not expect to see him until then, as there is not one promise given in God's Book to the effect that saints go to heaven at death. I believe death is an enemy, and the last one to be conquered by Christ. At the resurrection the saints will rejoice in victory; and at death, when they have to yield to his power, be taken captive and shut up in his dark prison house. "If the dead rise not, then they that have fallen asleep in Jesus have perished," which would not be true if the saints were in heaven rejoicing.

I pray God that our entire being, body, soul, and spirit, may be kept blameless until that day. Let us awake to diligence, and put on the spotless robe of Christ's righteousness that he has prepared for all that would go in to the marriage supper. Let us keep a constant supply of oil in the vessels with our lamps, so that when the last midnight cry is given our light will not have gone out.

"What do You Know?"

An aged saint grown gray in his Master's service, for he was a minister of Christ, was once in conversation with a young man who was very full of himself, and of what he had been acquiring at College. "Of course, Mr. ——, you are acquainted with such an author, and familiar with his works."

"No," replied the aged man, "I do not know them." Some other subject was started by his companion, and question after question was put, to each of which the answer was "I do not know." Teased at length, and forgetting the honor due to grey hairs, the young man asked, "And what, sir, do you know?"

"Young man," was the reply, "I know HIM, whom to know is life eternal!"

Dear reader, "what do you know?"

The Law and the Sabbath.

C. M. KEACH.

(Third Article.)

Think not that I am come to destroy the law or the prophets; I am not come to destroy, but to fulfill." (Mat. 5:17.)

We now come to an examination of the Jewish Sabbath. Sabbatarians consider it highly improper to call Saturday the Jewish Sabbath. The reason assigned for this objection is, that the name Jew is derived from Juda, who lived long after the institution of the Sabbath. These same people, however, do not hesitate to call circumcision a Jewish ordinance, although it existed long before Jewish times; and, until some better reason is assigned for the objection, we shall still continue to call Saturday the Jewish Sabbath. Sabbatarians contend that Saturday should be observed by Christians during the gospel dispensation. This we deny. We shall not stop to discuss the origin of the Sabbath, as that does not affect its present obligation. That it was binding during the old covenant dispensation we freely admit, but yet that does not affect its present obligation, nor does the claim that it will exist in the new earth affect the argument in the least.

It is urged that it is found in the bosom of an immutable law. The immutability of the law as the "law of righteousness" we are ready to concede, and if it will gratify our Sabbatarian friends we are ready to affirm that no righteousness will secure for us eternal life except that which is sanctioned by the law. We have shown in our previous articles that faith in Christ, perfected by obedience to the "law of faith," is accounted for, or in the stead of, personal obedience to the law; that is, Christ's obedience to the law is imputed to us by faith, and this new kind of obedience, which is called the "righteousness of faith" (Rom. 4:13), or "the obedience of faith (Rom. 16:26), is sanctioned or witnessed by the law. (Rom. 3:21.)

We will now consider the arguments usually presented to prove the Sabbath obligatory in the new covenant dispensation.

Argument 1st. The destruction of Jerusalem under Titus was a punishment for Sabbath-breaking. (Jer. 17:24, 25.)

Reply: The statement is simply wrong. Jer. 17:24, 25 was fulfilled in the destruction of Jerusalem by Nebuchadnezzar, recorded in 2 Chron. 36:19.

Argument 2d. "Our Saviour kept the Sabbath."

Reply: We maintain that he fulfilled the law in our stead, and that his obedience is imputed to those who believe.

Argument 3d. The disciples rested on the Sabbath after the circumcision. (Luke 23:56.)

Reply: Yes, but was it not before his resurrection, and hence while the old covenant was yet in force? One of the special promises of the new covenant was justification, and as Christ was raised for our justification (Rom. 4:25), the new covenant could not have been in force till then.

Argument 4th. "But pray that your flight be not in the winter, neither on the Sabbath day." (Matt. 24:20.) The Saviour thus recognized the sacredness of the Sabbath in the Christian dispensation.

Reply: We deny the statement that the Saviour thus recognized the sacredness of the Sabbath. The personal safety of the disciples was what the Saviour had in mind, and that for which he taught them to pray. This is unmistakable from the fact that he warned them to pray that their flight be not in the winter. To flee on the Sabbath would endanger them, and the Jews would stone them if they attempted it; and as the gates of Jerusalem would be closed, according to the custom of the Jews, their flight would have been impossible.

Argument 5th. The apostles made it a practice to preach and hold meetings on the Sabbath.

Reply: The statement of two facts will show that their practice is no argument in favor of Sunday-keeping. First, the synagogues were open on no other day; and secondly, in most of the cities where they preached, Saturday was observed by the wealthier class, who were Jews, and hence they (the apostles) could draw larger audiences upon that day than upon any other, for when the rich Jews observed that day, business of course, was suspended to a greater or less extent.

It will be urged that the Saviour said that whosoever should break one of these least commandments should be called the least in the kingdom of heaven, but these words were spoken while the old covenant was yet in full force. We must here close our subject, hoping that our few remarks may lead others to a careful investigation of this important subject.

Faith of the Albigenses.

C. C. M.

The Albigenses were a body of reformers that arose during the twelfth century. They instituted a vigorous opposition against many vagaries of the Romanists, and many of them suffered martyrdom at the hands of the mother church. The following brief compend of the main points of their faith will be read with interest by the student of ecclesiastical history:

1. They held the Holy Scriptures to be the rule of faith and source of religion, without regard to the traditions of the church or the authority of the fathers. Both the Scriptures of the Old and New Testaments were accepted as canonical, though they used the Gospels and Epistles chiefly. —Venema, as quoted by Sismondi in Hist. Albig.

2. They held the doctrine of the trinity, Christ's divinity, and the entire faith as expressed in the Apostles' Creed.—Venema in Perrin, b. 1. chap. xii.

3. They rejected all the external rites of the dominant (Roman Catholic) church, excepting baptism and the Lord's supper, but they had no regard to temples, vestures, images, crosses, pilgrimages, the religious worship of the holy relics. The Romish sacraments they regarded as superstitions. —Lampe, Hist. Eccles. 246–249.

4. They rejected the papal doctrine of purgatory, with masses or prayers for the dead, acknowledging only two terminations of the earthly state—heaven and hell.—Venema, Sis. His. Albig.

5. They admitted no indulgences or confessions of sin, with any of their consequences, excepting mutual confessions of the faithful for instruction and consolation.—Venema.

6. They held the sacraments of Baptism and the Eucharist to be only symbols, and denied the real presence of Christ in the bread and the wine. Ebrard de Bethunia complains of this in his book Antihaeresias (Noble Lessons;) also, Venema, in Sis.

7. They believed that Rome was the whore of Babylon, the mother of harlots, to whose rites and ceremonies it were a mortal sin to conform.

"I HAD more money on the suit," said a very mean individual who had just won a lawsuit over a poor neighbor, "and that's where I had the advantage of him. Then I had much better counsel than he, and there I had the advantage of him. And his family were sick while the suit was pending, and he couldn't attend it, and there I had the advantage of him again. But then, Brown is a very decent sort of a man, after all.' "Yes" said his listener, "and there he has the advantage of you."

The Christian Life.

"Lost for Want of a Word."

"Lost for want of a word!"
Fallen among thieves and dying,
  Priests and Levites passing
The place where he is lying.
  He is too faint to call,
Too far off to be heard!
  There are those beside life's highway
Lost for want of a word.

"Lost for want of a word!"
All in the black night straying
  Among the mazes of thought,
False light ever betraying!
  Oh! that a human voice
The murkey darkness had stirred!
  Lost and benighted forever!
Lost for want of a word!

"Lost for want of a word!"
Too high, it may be, and noble,
  To be checked in his sin,
Or led to Christ in his trouble.
  No one boldly and truly
To show him where he had erred—
  Poor handfull of dust and ashes!
Lost for want of a word!

"Lost for want of a word!"
A word that you might have spoken—
  Who knows what eyes may be dim,
Or what hearts may be aching and broken!
  Go scatter beside all waters,
Nor sicken at hope deferred;
  Let never a soul by thy dumbness
Be lost for want of a word.

—Exchange.

If I am a Christian, What Then?

A Christian. Rapturous thought! Inspiring fact! Let me consider what it involves.

In the way of blessings and privileges. Union with Christ—interest in the atonement—the protection, light and guidance of the Holy Spirit—heirship with Christ to an inheritance that is incorruptible, undefiled, and that fadeth not away, and a mansion prepared by Christ in waiting for me. Then I am permitted to so live that through me God may be glorified and my blessed Savior honored. I may unite with His people in maintaining His worship, setting forth His death, and sending forth His word to those who are destitute. I have the great and glorious privilege of being a co-worker with the blessed Master himself.

But there are obligations and responsibilities also involved in my being a Christian. I must not expect to receive all and return nothing. Besides, my own good, as well as the glory of God, requires that I regard my obligations. As the head of the family, I have hitherto been too much concerned about the temporal welfare of my family, often to the neglect of their spiritual interests. I feel that it is not necessary to neglect the real temporal good of my family in order to attend to their spiritual good. While I feed my children with bread I may remind them of the bread of life, essential to the health and growth of the soul. While I clothe them, I will not be unmindful of the robe of righteousness, necessary to protect them from the storms of sin and temptation.

My gravest and most important obligations arise from my relation to the church of Christ. I look back with amazement at my stolidness and indifference, in view of the obligations I entered into when I united with the church. In my baptism, I professed to be buried to the world and arise to newness of life. I entered into covenant with others to support the gospel, to attend upon the services of the sanctuary, and to promote, by all means at my command, the great objects of the church. Alas! how far short have I come of keeping my vows. I have run after the world, at times as if it were my chief good. I have not contributed to the support of the gospel, as the Lord has prospered me. I have often failed in attendance at the services of God's house, especially, the prayer-meeting—in a word, I now see that I am guilty of many shortcomings.

I must do better, and to this end, I will seek the aid of God's spirit; I will be more watchful, and I will "press toward the mark" in future.

God grant me influence, that I may induce others to unite with me in the work of reform.—F. Courtney Western Recorder.

CHICAGO, TUESDAY, July 23, 1872.

CIRCUMSTANCES beyond our control have delayed our present issue. Subscribers will please excuse our delay.

HAS HE A NAME?—A man in Parsons, Kansas, writes for general information concerning Sumner county, Kansas, but closes his letter without giving his name. Try again, sir. V. HUNT.

BR. BURR's recent essay, read before the clergy of Chicago, on the state of "Man in Death," is now printed in tract form, by H. A. King, 14 Murray street, New York city. Will fill orders at this office. It is a nice thing to circulate. Price, two copies, 15 cents.

BR. T. G. BAXTER, of Chicago, has a tract now in press on the subject of Sanctification, which will be ready for circulation in a few days,—16 pp., 5cts. single. Bro. Baxter advocates Sanctification as blessing superior to Justification, or conversion.

THE provision made in the A. C. P. Society that there shall be a business agent to attend to all financial business of the Society, leaving the editor to control only the matter pertaining to the paper—to decide what shall and what shall not be printed—is a wise arrangement. The editor is not, and ought not to be in possession of power to control financial matters. The editor has enough else to occupy his time, and has no desire to be troubled with it.

REV. MR. KINNAN, a Methodist minister, has been for several weeks holding a tent meeting on Ada and Lake streets, with good results. He strikes against the lifeless formality of the day, which passes current for religion in the churches, and advocates a religion that springs from the vitalizing power of the Holy Spirit. Whatever views may be entertained on the question of sanctification, we must not leave out the Holy Spirit. Let it so control the heart that carnality may be fully dethroned. "The pure in heart shall see God."

ELD. J. A. CARGILE, of Alabama, is still doing what he can to spread the truth in the south, as we learn from him in a note of June 26. He recently organized a church about twenty miles from home, and expects to organize another nearer home soon. He meets with opposition in some quarters, but the Lord opens his way before him, dispelling prejudice. Br. C. earnestly entreats us to visit his region and help proclaim the truth, and otherwise aid the cause. We cannot now say when we can go, but hope soon to be able to send a few publications to him and other earnest workers south.

WILL our friends who remove from the place where the paper is sent please notify us at once and not wait for the post master to inform us a few months afterward that the paper is not called for? If you do not want the paper after your removal, say so at once, and have it stopped, instead of allowing it to run the office in debt, with no one to pay up. These littles all combined amount to quite a sum. It must not be supposed that the publisher knows you have moved unless you tell him. If you wish your paper changed, which is better than to stop is, tell us where it has been sent, is well as where you wish it now sent.

THE recent French experiments reported in the New York World, and copied into other periodicals, of the transfer of the brains of one man into the head of another man while under the influence of chloroform, if true, is very suggestive; for it is claimed that the experiment proved that the man thus deprived of his own brains, and possessed of the brains of another man, when he had recovered from the effects of the cruel experiment, could remember nothing of his own history, but could remember events in the history of the other man—remember the relatives of the other man, etc. Does the brain think? or is the thinking done by an inside personality who operates through the brain as we are sometimes told? If the latter, is that personality so small that it lives in the brains, and can be transferred with the brains? Then is not this a case of compulsive transmigration of soul?

Nebraska.

This new country is missionary ground. Eld. G. G. Godfrey moved to that region from Wisconsin over a year ago, and is planting the truth in various localities, but needs help. In a private letter he remarks:

"I am having excellent success in preaching the Word. I want some help. Who can I get?....The people are starving for the Truth. They receive the Word gladly."

Br. Godfrey has more calls than he can possibly fill; has already organized several small churches, and the prospect is cheering in spite of ministerial opposition. We shall try to send him a fellow-laborer if the way opens, and hope to visit his field in person sometime.

Truth Spreading.

Two years ago we formed the acquaintance of a Brother Maxwell in Tennessee, then a Baptist. The following letter, from another brother, shows that he has carried the light to Arkansas, and more light is now called for:

BR. SHELDON.—I write to you at this time to forward to my address, if you please, your work on the "Kingdom." Not knowing your price, I will not forward you the money till I receive the work and your price for the same. I am here with Br. Maxwell, formerly of Ooltewah, Tenn., and I learned through him that you had such a book. We are here, as it were, among the heathen. I am searching after Truth, and I think your book will enable me to see more light on that subject. Most of the people here believe in the Kingdom of God being set up in their hearts, and that they have an immortal soul, and when they die they just go to heaven. The people have a form, but deny the power. I wish to do what I can for the Master, for I believe he is coming soon. Please forward the book, and if you have tracts to donate to the people here they will be very acceptable.

We send the book called for, and hope soon to get out some tracts to scatter there and elsewhere in the South, to open the eyes of the people to the truth of God in contrast with the dogmas of men.

Praying for Disembodied Souls.

Catholic commentators claim that the practice of praying for the souls of dead men existed under the Levitical economy; and in proof of this claim they refer to the practice of Judas Maccabees. But this reference furnishes no allusion either to disembodied souls or to a purgatory, but simply to corporeal men. "He (Judas) sent twelve thousand drachms of silver to Jerusalem for sacrifice, to be offered for the sins of the dead, thinking well and religiously concerning the resurrection. For, if he had not hoped that they that were slain should rise again, it would have seemed superfluous and vain to pray for the dead....It is, therefore, a holy and wholesome thought to pray for the dead, that they may be loosed from sins." (2 Mac. 12:43, 46.)

Here, Judas referred not to disembodied men, but to those who were dead; and prayers were made for them in view of a coming "resurrection," regarding it "vain" thus to pray, unless there were to be a resurrection. Praying for living souls is one thing, while praying for dead men is quite another thing; and there is more sense in the latter than in the former, for there are real dead men to pray for, while disembodied men are only creatures of imagination. But the Bible nowhere teaches that prayers will avail to change the character of the dead. This idea is purely apocryphal.

True Godliness.

While there is no scarcity of nominal godliness, the genuine article is rare. We are living in an hour of moral declension, when the love of many is waxing cold; not among lay members merely, but among ministers also. Where is the baptism of sacred love experienced in former days, and the inward glow of holy fire? Where is the insatiable hungering and thirsting after righteousness, and the non-conformity to the world, which once characterized the humble followers of Jesus? A few only live in sweet communion with Jesus, enjoying a fullness of his love. We need a reform in experience as well as in theology.

We again affirm: It is not only true in a general sense that the standard of Christianity is too low at the present time, but it is also true of ourselves as a people—we mean the standard of experimental godliness. We need a higher toned religion; a religion that fills the heart with the "comfort of the Holy Ghost," and lifts us above the fascinations of the earth. It is not enough to contrast ourselves with other professors of religion around us, and conclude that we are living as well as they are. This is "comparing ourselves among ourselves." Rather let us compare ourselves with the divine pattern.

If we would see the church living in a higher atmosphere of devotion, and enjoying the fulness of divine peace and love, our ministers must take the lead. They are commanded to be "ensamples to the flock." If they allow the spirit of theological wrangling to be the predominant element in their characters, they will infuse the same spirit into the hearts of others. But if their hearts are filled with the spirit of full consecration to God, while they use the truth as a means to augment the goodness of God, instead of making it a mere scourge to chastise opposers, they will impart the same desire for heavenly-mindedness, and the same hungering and thirsting after righteousness. We are so near the Master's return, we should keep the standard up where divine wisdom placed it.

A Spiritual Resurrection.

That the Bible teaches a resurrection of some kind is a truth so evident that all professed believers in the Bible concede the fact; but the claim that the resurrection is spiritual in its nature is becoming quite popular in many localities—that is, that the resurrection is affirmed of the spirit, and not of the body. In order to make this application, it has been found necessary to deny the literality of Christ's resurrection, as that is the "first-fruits," or sample.

It is assumed that it was Christ's spirit, and not his resurrected body that appeared to the disciples three days after the crucifixion, and that the term rendered "appeared" signifies a ghostly apparition. The last statement we deny, for the term is not once used in that sense, though occurring over fifty times, but is often used to indicate the actual presence of literal beings, as in the following text: "There appeared unto them Elias with Moses." (Mark 9: 4.) As Elijah had not died this could not have been a ghostly appearance, or the appearance of Elijah's soul; and Moses appeared in the same sense that Elijah did.

The assumption that it was Christ's spirit, without his body, that appeared to the disciples, will not pass even an ordinary inspection, in the light of facts.

1. If it was his disembodied spirit that appeared, why did it not appear before the "third day," seeing Jesus "gave up the ghost" or spirit at his crucifixion? As that part that was resurrected "appeared," and the resurrection took place on the third day, the resurrection could not have signified the raising of the spirit from the body, as Spiritualists tell us, seeing that separation took place three days before; therefore the body was "raised," and "appeared" on the third day, for said they "The Lord is risen indeed, and hath appeared to Simon." (Luke 24: 34.) This resurrection took place at the wrong time to be a resurrection of the spirit from the body; and the very thing that was raised on the third day appeared to the disciples, which could not have been the spirit which Jesus committed into the hands of his Father three days before.

2. That this appearance of Christ could not have meant the appearance of his resurrected spirit, but of the once lifeless form, is further evident from the fact that Paul affirms, "Now is Christ risen from the dead and become the first fruits of them that slept" (Cor. 15: 20), "the first-born from the dead." (Col. 1: 18.) So this resurrection was the "first" of its order that ever took place, and consequently if it refers to the resurrection of the spirit from the body, as spiritualists tell us, it follows that this was the "first" spirit ever released from a human body; and therefore all spirits for four thousand years previously, must have slept with their bodies, thus disproving the theory of spirit apparitions before that time, and also disproving the theory that devils are spirits of bad men, and angels the spirits of good men. But on the supposition that the body was raised, all is clear, for this was the "first" case of a resurrection to immortality.

3. When the women came to anoint him, bringing spices, "they found not the body of the Lord Jesus," but an angel was there to say to them—"He is risen; he is not here; behold the place where they laid him." Did they come to anoint a spirit or a body? The one they were seeking had left the sepulcher; and to refute the idea of his resurrection, as maintained by the disciples, the soldiers were hired to say that he was stolen away, instead of being raised. Now, as the effort was to refute the theory of the resurrection as held by the disciples, if they really held that it was a mere resurrection of his spirit, instead of his body, the ludicrous conclusion is involved that the soldiers were hired to say that the disciples stole away the spirit while they slept; for if the disciples did not believe in the resurrection of the body of Jesus, but simply in the resurrection of his spirit from the body, what force could there be in the statement that the body was stolen? How could that story militate against the claim that his spirit had been raised from the body, and had made a ghostly apparition to the disciples?

4. When Jesus appeared, he affirmed, "It is I myself: handle me, and see; for a spirit hath not flesh and bones, as ye see me have." (Luke 24: 30.) Could he truthfully have uttered these words if he had appeared to them merely as a disembodied spirit?

5. Thomas not being present when Jesus first appeared, and hearing the statement of those who had seen him, boldly affirmed: "Except I shall see in his hands the print of the nails, and put my finger into the print of the nails, and thrust my hand into his side, I will not believe." At a later date, Thomas being with the disciples, Jesus again stood in their midst, saying: "Peace be unto you;" and turning his attention to doubting Thomas, exclaimed, "Reach hither thy finger, and behold my hands; and reach hither thy hand, and thrust it into my side; and be not faithless, but believing." (John 20: 25–27.) What was it that Thomas would not believe? Simply the story of Jesus' resurrection as related to him by the other disciples; and if they had only been telling him about the resurrection of Jesus' spirit from his body, and its having appeared to them in its disembodied state, Thomas is made to talk very foolishly about desiring to see the print of nails in the hands of a disembodied spirit. And if Jesus really appeared in a disembodied state, his address to Thomas is equally foolish—inviting him to feel of the prints of nails and spear in a disembodied spirit. The nails had been driven through his fleshly hands, and the spear had pierced his fleshly side, but had the same wounds been inflicted on his spirit? Then how did that spirit extricate itself from the cross when Jesus "gave up the ghost," or spirit, if nailed there with literal nails?

It is argued that it could not have been the resurrected body of Jesus that appeared to the disciples, but must have been his spirit, from the fact (1) that while the doors were shut Jesus came into the room; and (2) because on another occasion he "vanished out of their sight." The first argument disappears when we remember that on another occasion, by an exhibition of miraculous power, "their eyes were holden that they should not know him;" so on this occasion their eyes might have been holden while he came in literally through the door, instead of making a spectral ingress through the key-hole. The second argument is obsolete when we consider that the original from which "vanished out of their sight" comes, simply signifies that he disappeared miraculously, not by evaporation, however; but, as the margin reads, "ceased to be seen of them." This sudden transportation of the Saviour from land into mid-ocean, and even across the sea to the other side, took place before the crucifixion; then why should it be deemed surprising after he was raised to immortality? He could appear and disappear at will; or be seen, or withheld from human sight, at pleasure.

When the effort to spiritualize Christ's resurrection proves a failure, it is useless to insist on a spiritual resurrection for the saints, as the two are identical in nature, Christ coming forth from the realm of death to immortal life as the "first fruits," or specimen. If his was a literal resurrection ours will be also.

Selected.

Will It Ever Be Better.

In the hurry and crush of every-day life does anyone who reads the papers and notes the record, week in and week out, and month after month, of the horrifying crimes that are daily and hourly committed, ever stop to ask, "Will it ever be better?"

The question comes home to every intelligent man and woman on the globe with a pointed, personal interest. On every hand the free school, the college and university confronts us. Education is limited only by the capacity and surroundings of the individual; every facility for business enterprise and social improvement and enjoyment is open to the masses, and yet it is palpable to every observant mind that neither education nor law is sufficient to stem the increasing tide of corruption and crime that is constantly flooding our streets and courts and prisons. Even the efforts of our religious institutions are feeble to turn the current and change its bitterness to sweetness and its turmoil to peace.

In view of these facts, which jostle us on every street corner, the moralist and the political economist may well ask, "Will it ever be better?"

The scope of one article will not admit of a discussion of the causes which have brought such great evil upon the country and the world. It is sufficient to know that it is here, and that some counteracting influence is required to suppress it. The advocates of education and the political economist can devise no plan to meet the exigency of a situation so perilous to all the best interests of human life and well being, and it seems as if even the powerful religious elements of the age were unable to check the stream of wickedness that surges past the very portals of our houses of worship.

Morality, education and law being at fault for a remedy, the devout followers of the lowly Savior attribute the present unhappy state of society to the almost total neglect of His teachings, the great want of faith in the revealed truths of the Bible, and the manifest lack of confidence in God that He cannot bring peace and holiness out of turmoil and sin, with a general indisposition to believe that He will not answer prayers for such a happy consummation. There are those, and their number is increasing, who believe that the same influence which the twelve Apostles had may be revived by the zealous exercise of the same faith and the use of all the means, under the promises of God, that are ready to be used on every hand for the reformation of the world. But this faith and zeal and power have nearly died out of the ordinary churches, and unless it is revived there first, or springs up in new organizations, they say, the work cannot be accomplished.

The suggestion is worth a thought, if nothing more: and it is understood that something must be done, or the earth will become a hell.—Evening Journal.

Anecdote of Bishop Hedding.

The following passage in the life of Bishop Hedding, was related by Rev. Dr. Armitage of the Baptist church in New York, during the delivery of his sermon at Sea Cliff, on Tuesday, May 28th.

"One of the most lovely beings on earth, a man enthroned in my memory as no other is—there is no man, living or dead, that has done so much for me, except my old father—was a poor Methodist bishop. As I see him now, O, how beautiful his face! how beautiful his life! I mean the venerable Elijah Hedding. What a marvelous power he exerted over the young men who were entering the ministry!

"When I was a young man, I was attending the Conference at Schenectady, and Bishop Hedding presided; he stayed with a friend of mine, next door to the church. It was very hot weather in Summer, a brother was preaching who spoke quite loud. The bishop could not go out, but remained in his room. After meeting we went to his room to see if he wanted anything and we found him sitting by the open window, where he had been listening to the sermon. And, as one of our number said to him:

"'Can we do anything for you?'

"He replied with a tremulous voice, 'Nothing, my son.'

"'Are you sick?'

"'No, dear child; no, no.'

"'Can we do anything for you?' Tears were falling, and his breast was heaving and shaking, and he seemed bowed down with agitation. We were alarmed, and anxiously inquired:

"'What is amiss, Bishop?'

"'O,' said he, 'I will tell you. I have been sitting here listening to that brother while he was preaching. I could hear every word, and I have been examining my poor old heart to see whether I loved the Lord Jesus as much now as I did when I was of your age, my boys.'

"As he spoke, his lips quivered, and tears ran. I said:

"'And what, Bishop, is the result of the hour's investigation?'

"'O, my child, the result is written in the Word; I can, with Peter, say, Thou knowest that I love thee!'

"I would rather have such wealth as that than all the wealth of the world."—Sel.

How a Horse Helped His Neighbor.

Not long since we visited a friend, who lives on a fine farm, in a pleasant town in Southern New Hampshire. While there one evening, we rode to the village to attend a meeting, and on our way back our friend told us the following anecdote about the noble horse he was driving: A few years ago this horse was kept, during autumn, in a field close by the farmhouse, and in an adjoining pasture a flock of sheep was also kept.

One day while my friend was talking to a gentleman by the roadside, the horse came running towards him from the lower part of the field, next to the sheep pasture, and putting his head over the wall near him, he whinnied, as if to attract attention.

He took, however, no special notice of this; and presently he turned and ran back to the lower side of the field.

But very soon he was again seen rapidly approaching, and on reaching his master, he again spoke to him, as horses usually speak.

It was observed that the horse was acting in a very unusual manner; but still no steps were taken yet to ascertain the cause of the strange running back and forth. So the pony again wheeled and galloped away once more toward the sheep pasture. And now, very soon, for the third time, he was seen swiftly returning.

It seems that the intelligent creature, having failed in two attempts to secure the help he was seeking, determined to try elsewhere this time; and so, instead of going again to his master, he went the farmhouse, that stood near by, and, putting his head through an open window in the kitchen, he again whinnied. Our friend's wife, who, it seems, had noticed the strange restlessness of the animal, now felt quite sure there must be something wrong in the field or pasture, and that the horse was trying to tell them of this, that they might go to the rescue.

So she went out, where the horse was. It seemed pleased that it had attracted attention at last, and, trotting on before the lady, it led down to the pasture, and putting his head over the fence, seemed to say, "Look, look!"

The lady did look, and there she discovered that a savage dog had caught a sheep, and was holding it by the throat, in spite of all the poor creature's efforts to escape.

On being discovered, the dog let go his hold, and springing over the fence into the field, fled, hotly pursued by the enraged, horse who would gladly have trampled him beneath his feet.

The poor sheep was not much injured, and so the horse had saved his neighbor's life.—Sel.

WE often lose our mercies by loving them too well, as the ball of snow is melted by the warmth of the hand that holds it; or a rose is spoiled by pressing it too tightly.

AN ingenious correspondent of the Central Presbyterian makes a curious computation, showing that, if all the members of our church gave a tithe to the Lord's cause, the amount received would be much larger than it is. He alleges men and women cannot live in the South on less sum than $200 or $250 per annum. Insane patients in the Western Lunatic Asylum at Staunton, Vr., cost $244 per annum, those in the Alabama Lunatic Asylum at Tuscaloosa cost $200. Our church members live at least as well as prisoners in county jails. They live, and they must have something to live upon. In other words, the average income of our 91,208 communicant must be least $200 per annum. They must have much more. That is, the "lowest conceivable income of the church-members" in the last year was $18,241,600. One-tenth of this is $1,824,160. But the total amount of the befactions of the Church, as recorded in our statistical tables, was $1,083,799. The entire collections of our churches fell short of the lowest possible computation of the tithes, three quarters of a million of dollars. If all "the tithes were brought into the store house" "to prove the Lord" whether he will not bless us, the work of the Church could be greatly extended and increased.

Encouraging.

A Bombay newspaper—The Indian Statesman—has recently reprinted entire, Constable's "Nature and Duration of Future Punishment." The issue containing the first of the series has an editorial, which we here give entire, thinking that many readers of THE TIMES will be greatly gratified by its perusal. It is almost surprisingly strange to find from this quarter of the globe such a bold denunciation of one of the main features of modern theology; only let us hope and that the stand for pure Bible doctrine as against heathen dogmas may soon stretch forth an influence in every land, that shall prepare a people able to stand in the final jugment day.

Below is the article in full: L. M.

"The horror with which the doctrine of eternal misery fills tens of thousands of reflective minds, and the scrupulous avoidance of it in our pulpits, constitute sufficient reason in our own minds for forcing the discussion of its truth, or otherwise, upon the Christian world in the secular press. Is the doctrine true or false? Is it taught in the Bible, or is it simply a human tradition?

We say that the doctrine is an impiety and blasphemy; a doctrine nowhere taught in the Bible, but imported into Christianity from the old pagan Greek philosophy, which taught—which the Bible does not teach—the inherent and necessary immortality of the soul. We must await the revelations of the last day, to know the mental sufferings which the grafting of this doctrine upon Christianity has produced in every age, and we can not but think there is something cowardly, when the issue has been once fairly raised, in the careful avoidance of it which the modern pulpit shows. If this doctrine is part of the truth which God has revealed to man, it is the business of the pulpit to make it clear that it is so. If, on the other hand, the doctrine is not to be found in Scripture, but its rise and origin in the Church are plainly to be traced to the influence of the Greek philosophy therein in the third, fourth, and subsequent centuries—what are we to say of a pulpit that is silent upon the subject? Will it be pretended for a moment, that it is a subject that ought not to be made part of the burden which the pulpit bears? The attitude of most preachers' minds upon the subject may be described as taking refuge in the conviction that 'it is safest to say nothing about it.' The tradition has been almost universally accepted as a part of Christian doctrine, and has grown hoary with the weight of sixteen hundred years upon it:—Who then are we, that we should be wiser than our fathers? Whether is it more likely that all these should be wrong, than we right? And so from age to age, the protests and misgivings of the thoughtful few are overborne by the weight of numbers, and the age has not yet come with the courage to demand,—Is there not a lie in our right hand: a generation that will take no answer but one that will satisfy the reason and the conscience, and appeals simply to the Bible itself.

The ablest essay we have seen upon the subject, is one by the Rev. H. Constable, Prebendary of Cork, that has passed through several editions within a very few years, and has received so far as we are aware, no reply, and that seems to ourselves to admit of none. We purpose republishing it in these columns, and reproduce its preface and opening chapter elsewhere. We confess that our object is to force the subject upon the Christian church in India; to compel our missionaries and chaplains to make up their minds, whether the doctrine of eternal misery belongs to Christianity or not. In no other field could the question be thus forced on the consideration of the church with so much advantage. We profess to believe that our great mission in India, under Divine Providence, is to spread the knowledge of the Christian church therein. What, if we find that the first fruits of attempting this, is the clearing up of our own conceptions as to what Christianity really is. If Calvanistic evangelism with the doctrine of eternal torment tacked on to it, is really Christianity, we absolutely refuse to tell the people the lie—that we are bringing 'glad tidings' to them. We say that we are bringing to them the most dreadful tidings the human ear can hear. Is it not awful that so mentally twisted are we all, so half true, or so false, that we refuse to see this? Lift this dreadful doctrine off our heart, and you unloose our stammering tongue to tell what are 'glad tidings' indeed.

A lady writes to us privately,—'Your articles on this awful doctrine have afforded me great comfort, and will have done the same to thousands. I have often felt as if I would go mad, when thinking over this doctrine, and all I could do was to put the thought from me as often as it presented itself in all its horrors' Let no one suppose this simple testimony comes from a heart that wishes the doctrine untrue, because the life is unholy. The doctrine does not bear to be thought about without begetting insanity: and we avow our conviction that it is an impiety and blasphemy throughout, countenanced no where in Holy Scripture, but directly opposed to its teaching in every part."

AT HOME.

—Two Modocs, the last of Captain Jack's band, surrendered July 16 and were taken into camp.

—One hundred and forty-one passengers of the wrecked steamship City of Washington have arrived in New York.

—A report from London gives an account of an unsuccessful conspiracy to rob the Shah of Persia of his diamonds while he was in England.

—The Minnesota Republican State Convention, which met at St. Paul, July 16, nominated Cushman K. Davis, of St. Paul, as their candidate for Governorship.

—The amount of grain "in sight" in the States and Canada, on the 5th instant, was 18,538,554 bushels, embracing 5,348,459 bushels of wheat, 9,048,507 bushels of corn, 4,032,359 bushels of oats, and 109,029 bushels of barley.

—A scheme is apparently on foot both at Chicago and Milwaukee to get a "corner" on wheat. The price on cash lots advanced two cents recently in Chicago. It is a time for holders of wheat in the country to watch their chances.

—The cholera in those places in which it has been reported on the European Continent is abating, and gradually disappearing. The same is also true of those localities in this country, where the disease is said to have been raging.

—Three hundred and fifty granges have been formed throughout the country since July 1. The whole number of these societies is now 4,700, and their membership is 350,000. The national headquarters are to be moved to Washington.

—The cholera is reported to be very bad in the northern part of Alexander county, Ill., and about fifty-five miles from Cairo. It is said that from the 10th to the 14th inst. there had been thirty cases, twenty proving fatal. The neighborhood is said to be almost without an inhabitant, every one having gone to the hills. The crops have been left to take care of themselves.

—Mormon circles in Utah are greatly scandalized by the desertion of Brigham Young by one of his wives. She is his seventeenth wife, and has left him, taking with her a large amount of furniture and personal property. She has retained eminent counsel, and intends to sue for a divorce and generous alimony. The suit may be expected to give glimpses never before revealed of the harem life of Salt Sake City.

—So quietly that few persons in the country were aware of the fact, the Indian murderers of General Canby have been tried by the military commission detailed for the purpose, the trial ending yesterday. Of course, the guilt of the savages was fully established, and there is no doubt about the finding of the court, though the verdict has not yet been rendered. The sentence relative to it must be submitted to the President for approval before being executed.

—Sunday, July 12, the Methodists held a quarterly conference at Shiloh Church, five miles west of Hopkinsville, Ky. A large concourse of people were present, and at the close of the sermon Christians were invited to come to the communion table and partake of the Lord's Supper. Mrs. Emily Owen, wife of T. A. Owen, being a communicant, walked forward, apparently in as good health as any person in the church, but when in the very act of kneeling at the altar dropped dead. A physician present came to her side immediately, but all efforts to restore her were in vain.

—Parts of Iowa and Wisconsin were visited by a tornado on Sunday night, 12th inst. At Cedar Capids, Iowa, it was accompanied by thunder and lightning and rain. The lightning was so continuous and vivid that a person could almost read without any other light. In parts of Fond du Lac county, Wis., all kinds of grain are so badly cut up that no attempt will be made to harvest it. The hail came in ragged chunks half as large as a man's hand. Windows on the south side of houses were all broken; many lambs and other young stock were killed, leaves stripped from trees and fences torn down.

—One of the most appalling facts about the fire at Grand Rapids, Mich., was the rapidity with which it spread. It seemed mad from the first. The smoke from the Bridge Street House barn, in which the fire commenced, rolled up in dark and frightful columns, and before the few who had gathered there had time to express their wonder the flames burst out, and seemed to leap across Kent street to the east, and seized the Grand Rapids City Mills on the west, and in an instant the mill and a half dozen houses were in flames. There was no power on earth that could stop its rapid progress. The engines were soon on the ground, but what water they threw had no more effect than if it had been thrown from a spring. The Fire King was abroad and seemed to laugh at the herculean efforts of the firemen. The fire rushed, leaped and drove on like mad, and stopped not until it had swept out of existence everything in its way. It stopped when its work of destruction was done, when there was no more buildings in its way.

—Either young Walworth, the parricide, has not yet come to a realizing sense of the enormity of his crime, or he is a fiend in human shape. On the way to Sing Sing he joked about the prison uniform; and, linked to Gillem, the brutal wife-murderer, was witty on the subject of handcuffs. Among men, this man Walworth, not yet arrived at his majority, appears to possess all the stolidity of length of years devoted to the sternest pursuits of life. Among murderers he seems to be, in quality of character and person al mien the chiefest criminal. In his intercourse with his fellows, visitors and the public, he carries himself with a brazen effrontery which leaves no room to doubt that murder has dwelt so long in his heart that he has become callous to all soft impressions. He seems to have taken into his inner life and nursed there in secret, such a towering passion of revenge and hate that every human emotion is burned and purged away. It is to be hoped, for the honor of mankind no less than for his own personal regeneration, that the labor and solitude of prison life may work a reformation in a character which is a marvel of depravity.

ABROAD.

—The preliminaries of the treaty of alliance between Germany and Italy are said to be concluded and ready for exchange.

—A dispatch from Amsterdam, July 14 says an extensive conflagration is raging among the coal stores in that city.

—Russia has the rinderpest so badly that Germany has prohibited the bringing of Russian cattle into that Empire.

—A heavy rain-storm, accompanied by lightning, swept over Yorkshire, England, July 14. The crops were greatly damaged and several persons were killed.

—The earthquake in Italy, on June 27, was extraordinary. The solid earth seemed for a time converted into a liquid one, and houses were tossed about like ships at sea. There were fourteen movements, seven forward and seven backward, each occupying a second, as regular as the beat of a clock. Many persons were killed at Bellimo, and many injured.

—The destruction of human lives in India by wild animals has become so appalling that at last the English Parliament is seriously debating different plans to remedy the evil. The statements made by Lord Ettrick, who has spent much of his time in India, almost transcend belief, and read like romances of the jungle and wilderness. In lower Bengal alone, no less than 13,400 persons are known to have been killed by wild beasts in the six years immediately preceding 1870, and for the entire peninsula it is estimated that 10,000 persons are killed annually. Captain Rogers, of the Bengal service, recently read a paper before the English Social Science Association, in which he stated that, in 1869, one tigress stopped the traffic on a public road for many weeks, and was known to have killed 127 people; and, in Naydunka, a tiger, in 1867, 1868 and 1869, killed, respectively, twenty-seven, thirty-four, and forty-seven people. It would attack a party and kill four or five at a time. Once it killed a father, mother and three children, and the week before it was shot it killed seven people. It is stated that there are shikarries, or hunters, whose business it is to kill these animals, and who receive rewards for doing so, but they have no desire to kill off all of them and thus cut off their source of living. They, therefore, only kill enough of them to show that they are not idle and to make a living. The English Government now proposes to enroll a body of men for this purpose, and to make a systematic slaughter of the tigers, wolves, panthers, leopards, and hyenas, until they are exterminated.

Quarterly Conference Report.

The Second Q. M. of the Winona district was held with the Canton church, Fillmore Co., commencing Friday evening, June 20th. Meetings were well attended by the friends, and a blessed spirit was manifested during the meeting. The church was very much refreshed and decided to start anew in the work of the Master and his vineyard. The conclusion was reached, that there is something for each and all to do, and not to depend wholly upon the preacher.

There were brethren from Iowa, who had but recently embraced the Advent views under the labors of Br. Mitson, and it was cheering to hear them speak of their joys and enjoyments since finding the blessed truths of the Bible to be so plain, and reasonable.

Preaching by Elds. Ramer, Allen, and Bursell. Our meeting closed by passing a resolution, that we would all try and meet at the state camp meeting at Utica, Sept. 10.

Geo. W. Miller, Evangelist.

Q. M. Report.

The third quarterly meeting, Manchester District, met as per appointment, with the Boylan's Grove Church, June 20th. This meeting was a decided success, for the blessed Lord of heaven was with us of a truth to own and bless his Word. Much prejudice was removed; stout hearts melted; and the brethren were greatly strengthened and encouraged, for they have made a covenant with the Lord by sacrifice, and God blessed them accordingly. Seven were added to the church; others will unite soon.

They have a house of worship fitted out this season, and a Sabbath school of about eighty in regular attendance—all workers—for every one takes a part. They have no pastor, but the Lord will lead them I am sure. After a vote of thanks we adjourned, expecting soon to meet in the Kingdom of our Lord. Surely, the Lord is blessing the united labors of his people in Iowa. Praise his name.

M. J. Janes, Secretary.

Q. M. Report.

Second Q. M. for the Hutchinson district, Minnesota, was held with the Swan Lake church, Meeker Co., June 27th.

Our meeting at this place was truly a heavenly one. I must say that I do not know of a church in our state that is so well united and so full of zeal as the Swan Lake church. All business matters were laid aside during the meetings, and the time devoted to religious worship. One baptised, several more I think will join with us in due time. We have no fears but they will be cared for by the church, whose hands are ever extended to help the anxious ones, by prayers and invitations to come and go with us, and we will do thee good. I would that some of our other churches, would learn from the example of this church, to labor more in connection with the preached word, in order to be successful in the work of the Lord.

This place was visited by Brs. Scott and Parsons about fifteen months ago for the first time. They found a few that had zeal without knowledge; but when the light of the true knowledge shone upon them they received it, and embraced it with their whole hearts, and are continuing so, growing in grace and in the knowledge of the truth. May the Lord bless them, and keep them from the temptations of these last times, is my prayer.

Geo. W. Miller, Evangelist.

Neponset District Q. M.

Met on July 4th, in the church at Ionia, as the weather was unfavorable for meeting in the grove as was appointed. Preaching by Br. W. McCulloch. On the 5th preaching by Br. N. Willet in the forenoon, and by Br. W. McCulloch in the afternoon, after which the most of the churches in the district were voluntarily reported, and the cause was thus seen to be rising, and great encouragement held out for future labor.

Toulon, has but few members, but they are in the best courage.

Milroy, preaching fortnightly; Sunday school of fifty members.

Mineral (by letter), fourteen members; in good running order; preaching once in two weeks.

Iona, over one hundred members; trying to live for God.

Sunday morning we met in the church and enjoyed a love-feast; thirty-six testimonies in a short time; a blessed meeting.

The weather then being favorable we adjourned to the grove, and listened to the closing address of the meeting by Br. W. McCulloch.

We think, taking all things into consideration, this has been the best Q. M. we have had within the year. A deep interest was manifested by the large and attentive congregations. We hope the friends of the cause may continue to use every effort that these God given, reasonable truths may yet reach many more hearts.

Jesus is soon coming, Amen.

Hoosick Valley Conference Report.

Pursuant to notice, the third quarterly meeting was held with the church in Pownell, Vt., July 3d, 1873. The first business session was on Saturday at 10 o'clock in the forenoon, A. W. Sibley in the chair. Prayer by C. W. Baker.

It was voted that the chair appoint a committee on credentials, and the chair appointed John B. White, who reported as follows: Preaching brethren present—A. W. Sibley, H. K. Flagg, C. W. Baker, G. Mayhew, Wm. J. Blanchard, Jacob Wilbur and W. O. Higley. By unanimous vote of this conference Sr. E. Tousley and Sr. Tower were received.

Delegates—J. B. White and Nelson Roberson, Hoosick, N. Y.; J. Myers, J. W. Wright, Pownell, Vt.; L. Wheelock, South Adams, Mass.; Mary Howard, Hebron, N.Y.; Sr. Starks, Savoy, Mass.; M. Brown, North Adams, Mass., and Geo. Townsend, Woodford, Vt. This report was accepted and adopted.

J. Wilbur was elected Secretary pro tem.

It was voted that the chair appoint a committee to arrange business to be brought before the conference. Brs. H. K. Flagg and W. J. Blanchard were chosen, and reported as follows:

1st. To hear the report of the tent committee in reference to the tent; its repairs, money needed for the same, and progress made for future tent meetings, etc.

2d. To hear reports of protracted meeting committee.

3d. Promiscuous business.

4th. Reports of preachers and delegates.

This report was also adopted.

A. W. Sibley, chairman of the tent committee, reported in substance as follows: The tent had been sent to Boston and repaired at a cost of only about eleven dollars, a sum much less than had been expected. Money was needed now to put it into the field, none having been sent as yet to the Treasurer. He had received a few calls to go and hold tent-meetings; and a request had been made by one of the National Campmeeting Committee to loan them the use of our tent during the coming meeting at Springfield, in August.

The conference received the report and voted that we acquiesce in such disposition of the tent, in regard to going to the Springfield campmeeting, as the committee shall think best.

Four of the six members of the protracted meeting committee reported their labors and prospects; a goodly number of meetings had been held, some were converted to God, and the ordinance of baptism had been administered, when it was voted to adjourn until after the afternoon services.

Second Session—4 o'clock p. m.

Cheering letters were read from Elds. R. Mosier, of Sandy Hill, and A. P. Bump, of Hartford, N. Y. A number of other of our ministering brethren were favorably reported by members present. The president called upon each of the ministers and delegates to give a brief statement of their labors, and report the condition of their respective churches, who responded with reports that were mostly of an encouraging nature. The church in Woodford had got seven hundred dollars subscribed towards building a chapel, and were preparing to build this season.

It was voted that we hold our next annual meeting in Hoosick, N. Y., if the church there invite us to do so (as some of the brethren think it will.) It was also voted that we extend our sincere and heartfelt thanks to the brethren and friends of Pownell, for their kind hospitality and Christian courtesy shown us during this meeting. Also, that these minutes be sent to the World's Crisis and Advent Christian Times for publication. The business session then adjourned as usual.

J. Wilbur,
Secretary pro tem.

P. S.—Connected with the conference was a series of devotional meetings, which were seasons of refreshing to the careworn pilgrim and others. Preaching by C. W. Baker, A. W. Sibley, J. Wilbur, H. K. Flagg and W. O. Higley. Sunday afternoon a large number of Jesus' friends met around the Lord's table; probably more, that were looking for the near coming of Christ, than ever met at a communion season in that town before. May they all live in such a way that it will please our blessed Redeemer to give them a seat at his table at the marriage supper of the Lamb.

District Camp Meeting No. 1.

This meeting was appointed to commence June 17, and we got there by 9 o'clock that day, but was alone until 12, when we were joined by Eld. Brown, and at 4 o'clock by Doctor Webster. It was decided not to put tent up; so we went three miles to Dr. Webster's for the night, where we received every attention their ample means afforded. The doctor is a Scotchman from what is called the Lowlands, and well represents that family; well educated, and withal, instructed by his mother that man is mortal, and if he ever obtains immortality he must seek it through Christ and the resurrection. This early training led him to read the Bible with pleasure until he saw the whole reasons of our hope, and loves to talk about the blessed hope soon to be consummated in the return of the Master. His wife is from New England, well calculated by education and Christian faith to be a helpmate; untiring in her efforts to make the strangers at home while sharing their hospitality.

Wednesday, we had the first meeting at 2; Br. Kendle preached; but if there had not come a wagon load from the Springville church there would have hardly been enough to have said "us," and this may be said until Saturday.

The congregation was very small until Saturday afternoon, then it looked something like a congregation to the end. The exercises were in the main spiritual, sometimes joyful. The best of order prevailed and good attention was paid to the Word preached. One minister of the Baptist order preached three times to good acceptance, and was with us from the commencement. Four Methodist ministers were with us on the Sabbath, and took part in the exercises.

Something unpleasant occurred during the meeting, but was overcome by Christian charity and forbearance. Rule or ruin is the doctrine of some, but I am glad that spirit is in the minority.

Some gave as a reason why so few attended before Saturday that there was a Sunday School picnic on Friday, as some had been put on the staff of officers, and they could not come until that service was discharged, and thus most that came on Saturday left Sunday afternoon, as soon a preaching was ended. (True, it rained Sunday evening, but this was after they had gone home.)

How long will it be before we shall understand that God has made us the custodians of this truth? If we do not make sacrifices to maintain it and proclaim it to others, how can the Master say "well done" when he comes?

Daniel was once chosen by a royal decree to worship no being but the king, the risk of his life was the forfeiture. But what did he do? He took the risk of losing his life rather than disobey God, and what was the result? He was saved; and by that act of obedient faith he converted the king and nation.

The three Hebrew children were chosen by the king of Babylon to bow down at the dedication of the golden image; but they, like good children, refused and were cast into the furnace, but like Daniel, were honored with life and moral power over the king and the nation. How long will it be before we shall see, and feel, and act in that direction that will convince the world that we believe we are chosen out of the world, and therefore do not intend to let his cause flag for the want of our presence and aid, feeling that Jesus has chosen us to be a soldier.

The ground was level and convenient to water, well shaded by lofty maples, basswood, and elms, but the equipage was poor; not a cotton tent on the ground, nor any other that was made for the occasion. A camp meeting had been held there last year by the United Brethren, and they had built three slab posts and a stand of the same material, and some logs with slabs for seats constituted the arrangement. All very good, but not enough of it.

We met old and tried friends and felt refreshed, and formed some new acquaintances that I may never see again until Jesus comes. May I see them all then clothed with immortality.

P. W. Hough.

From J. C. Smith, Jacksonville, Kansas.

The Lord is blessing abundantly, and to him be all the praise. We stand in need of tracts to further on the gospel, and to help stir up the people. We have no money to send for any at present. We may have in autumn if the Lord prospers us. The people here are poor, yet their crops are coming in well, and in time of harvest we may be able to do something. I shall do what I can to have them subscribe for The Times, and to help scatter the seed. Now will the publishing association please forward me the works to scatter? The Lord bless you in your work and all connected. Peace be with you all till Jesus comes.

From M. A. Newcomb, Tama Co., Iowa.

I am still at work for the Lord, and trying to do my Master's bidding. The Lord is at work with us in this part of the world and has blessed us much. We have just held our state camp meeting, at New Hartford, of which I send you a short sketch of proceedings for publication. We had a blessed time and as I am looking for the soon coming of the King in his beauty, I must say it is good to be found in the service of the Lord. The religion of Jesus is most precious to me and holiness of heart is my great desire.

It does me good to read letters from my dear brothers and sisters. Let us take courage and look up, for our redemption draweth nigh. Let us walk in th[illegible], that when our King shall appear, we [illegible] appear with him also in glory.

To the Advent Brethren [illegible] in Christ greeting:

Br. Frank Burr havin[illegible] presiding preacher for the society [illegible] worshiping on Green stre[illegible] Madison and Monroe, for upw[illegible] years, and believing him [illegible] in the past, to be a dev[illegible] eminently fit to declare the whol[illegible] given in the Sacred Record; we ca[illegible] we have been richly fed from the pure [illegible] larations which have fallen from his lips, not alone in the congregations, but in social meetings among the brethren. It is with sorrow and regret that circumstances intervening prevent his remaining with us longer. May the good Lord bless and prosper him in the field he may be called to occupy, is the sincere prayer of yours in the true faith,

H. P. Wright, First Elder, L. C. Rice, Second Elder, M. P. McLellan, First Steward, R. P. Rice, Second Steward.

Chicago, July 7, 1873.

From Amos Sanford, Columbus, Kas.

Permit me to say to the brethren and sisters in Kansas and others scattered abroad, that those remitting funds to the secretary of the Advent Christian Conference of Kansas, to aid it in its missionary work, will find acknowledgements of the same in The Times for the reason that it is the acknowledged organ of the conference; i. e. it is more generally circulated in Kansas than any other paper of our faith, and it will save me the trouble of sending receipts to each one of the contributors. Our evangelist is at work with the mission tent, trusting in God for his support. Contributions come in slowly, yet we are not discouraged, but thankful for the following favors: E. Rice, 25c; E. A. Snyder, $1; A. M. Sidwell, $3.75; W. F. and M. L. Hunt, $5; total receipts to date, $10.00. Br. Smith will report the result of his labors from time to time, through the columns of The Times, and in order that the "good news" may be spread as much as possible, let us all work to extend the circulation of our western paper.

From J. Palmer.

I wish to say through the paper that our camp meeting closed Sabbath evening. We feel that great good was done notwithstanding we were disappointed in not having more ministerial help. The preaching was mostly done by Eld. Hough, who presented the truth so plain from the Word of God that many were astonished. Doctor Stanley was with us one day, and preached to good acceptance. The doctor has but recently commenced proclaiming the gospel of the kingdom. He is a strong man of age and experience, and capable of doing much good. He resides at Salem, Wis.

The congregations most of the time were large. The best of order and attention prevailed, and I trust seed was sown that will bear fruit to the glory of God. Ten or twelve arose for prayers, and most of them found peace in believing. Three were baptized, the brethren and sisters encouraged and revived. At the close we came around the table of the Lord with about fifty, and took the parting hand with the blessed hope of soon meeting in the kingdom, never more to part.

May the Lord help us all so to live that we may share in that meeting, is the prayer of your brother.

From L. Mann, Chicago.

I have looked with much anxiety since the recent annual meeting and its satisfactory results, to see the movement inaugurated which should place the new society on a basis at once untrammeled by financial obligations or want of money; that its power might be greatly increased for the dissemination of the Bible truths we all love so dearly. Oh, we surely do not realize fully the responsibility resting upon us, of more freely and earnestly working and praying and giving—doing all in our power to feed the hungry minds yet ready to grasp the good news of great joy! for should the Advent people wake up to a realization of these matters, the power of the society would be increased five-fold. I often think our people are certainly not well grounded in the faith they profess, else why such a lack of zeal and determined work. "The Lord giveth and the Lord taketh away, blessed be the Lord." But how apt are we to say what we have we obtained by and through our own good management. Were we to take a part of the Savior's advice to the lawyer to ourselves the cause of truth might not suffer so much for want of finances. I fear we are all too much given over to the affairs of this world, forgetting that "where the treasure is," etc.

I send my mite—small, but I am a laboring man, with a family depending on me for support; but the joys of the better age will not be lessened by a little sacrifice in this for the sake of our Master's cause. Let us wake up!

From C. W. Stephenson, Kas.

Dear brethren and sisters:—For a long time I have felt deeply concerned about the indebtedness of our Publishing Society, and as from time to time I have seen how very slowly that debt is being canceled, I could not help wondering how it is possible for those who are doing so nobly for our welfare as a body of Christians, to keep up so cheerful an appearance. Now I have thought of a plan by which we may easily "lift the burden" and hardly feel it, that is, if all will work just a little.

The plan is as follows: Let every reader of The Times, whether he be a subscriber or not, make the resolve and stick to it, that they will lay aside from their earnings ten cents every month for ten months to be given for the relief of the association. We will make it in two payments, so that it may seem easier. July is here now, therefore our mite must be laid aside, so that by the first day of January, '74, each may send in his five times ten cents; and Oh, what a great relief it will be; a fine new year's present for the faithful ones.

Then when five more months have rolled around we shall again send in our mites, and the three thousand dollars will have been paid.

We must work while the day lasts; for Christ may soon come and end our labors. I feel anxious to know how many of those who are cheered by "that blessed hope" are willing to fall in with my plan. I am sure all would if they were situated as I am—with no preaching but The Times, and very few of like precious faith. Let us hear the hearty responses from each and all immediately through The Times. I hereby send my pledge for fifty cents by the first of January. Who follows?

From Theo. L. Rogers, Edorado, Wis.

I thought I would write a line that my brethren might know how I am getting along in the good way, though I sometimes feel unworthy to be called a servant of my blessed Master. I am young in the faith, having been brought up a Methodist and been a member of that society for over six years, I bless the Lord for bringing me out into the light of the truth as it is in Jesus.

I never heard an Adventist preach until last winter, when it was my privilege to be in the midst of a revival held by Br. S. C. Wellcome, at Eagle Lake, Minn., where I was led to believe in the soon coming of our blessed Savior. This spring I moved to Wisconsin, where I am alone in the hope of immortality through the resurrection.

Oh, what a field there is opened here for the labors of a good faithful brother. Oh, brothers and sisters, let us put on the whole armor and fight manfully for the cause,

> "For Jesus our leader is,
> Soon we shall rest."

What a hope that he who bore our infirmities suffered that we might be pardoned, died that we might live, is soon to come and reign forever. O, let us have this blessed hope in our hearts and be governed by it in our daily walk and conversation.

It has not been long since I subscribed for The Times, and this is my first attempt to contribute to its columns. I am so little gifted in the way of writing that I was tempted not to ask for room in your valuable paper for my poor production, but I have resolved that I will do my duty in the fear of God, and leave the rest with him. O, that I might see his work revive in this place. We are truly living in perilous times. The church is asleep and the last great day is rapidly approaching. O, let us have our lamps trimmed and burning, so that we may enter into the marriage supper of the Lamb.

From J. C. Smith, Jacksonville.

Dear brethren and sisters of the one blessed hope, peace be with you all. Our last communication was from this place. But since we last wrote the Lord has been doing a good work. We are still at Br. Nickols; find him and wife to be of the right stamp, and holding fast to the doctrine of Christ's death, resurrection, ascension, mediation, and of his coming again the second time without a sin offering unto salvation, to set up his everlasting kingdom. They love the truth, and it makes them free. Praise the Lord for fathers and mothers in Israel.

The Lord has blessed abundantly the past week. Had good meeting last Sunday, and on Wednesday eve. a goodly number was present, and the "word of the kingdom" preached. The speaker was a setter forth of strange doctrine, and the people wondered. The next day, July 3d, on returning from the post office a doctor hailed me, and a number of others gathered around, then came the Methodist preacher, who has been so prejudiced that he would not come to the meetings, and has reported that this people do not believe in living religion. This is the way he takes to poison people's minds. But all will not believe what he says, so they come to hear for themselves, and last night, July 3d, we had a rich feast. The Lord gave us utterance to speak the truth in soberness, and one man who has been a Roman Catholic, after meeting confessed the truth, and said he could "see light through." We spoke from Jesus' words, (Mat. 5:5,) "Blessed are the meek, for they shall inherit the earth." O, how blessed and plain. "To reign on the earth"; "to dwell forevermore"; "when the wicked are cut off," then "the heirs of promise," the "seed of Abraham" "shall see it," (i. e., the land.) This message takes away the foundation of the sky kingdom, and immortal subjects, and gives instead substance for those that love God to inherit. These truths stir the people, and thousands are anxious to read and hear. O, that we might have tracts to scatter. Who will interest themselves for the cause's sake, and send to "bleeding Kansas" works for us to scatter. Come, brethren and sisters, let us awake and arise, and do all to the glory of God. Soon the pearly gates of the New Jerusalem will be opened for the saints of all ages, and those that have been faithful over a few things, will then be made rulers over many. The Lord raise up helpers is the prayer of your brother in hope.

From B. J. Goodwin, Nashua, Chickasaw Co., Iowa.

When I first became acquainted with THE TIMES, (then Voice of the West,) I was in doubt in regard to the nature of man. I eagerly read all I found on that subject until became convinced that the promise which God had given was eternal life and that this life was in his Son and not in ourselves, that we could only obtain it by patient continuance in well doing, and more than that, it would not be conferred on us until Christ, who is our life, should appear. (1 John 2:25; 5:11; Rom. 2:7; Col. 3:4.)

Now, the great question with me is, When will our Life-giver appear? While I read with pleasure and profit the letters and articles on other topics, none are as interesting to me as those on the time question. The time question has, in my eye, a strong sanctifying influence, much more so than the articles on sanctification, of which we have had a liberal supply for the past few months.

I long to see the King in his glory appear; to see sin and death destroyed, and all things pure in his sight. But when will this change be wrought? I have no argument for any particular year, but hope the arguments for 1873 are correct. I think, however, that it will be in the fall of the year in which his coming will gladden the hearts of his servants. In Hebrew 8:45 I read, "For if he were on earth he should not be a priest, seeing that there are priests that offer gifts according to the law, who serve unto the example and shadow of heavenly things." Again I read, "It was therefore necessary that the pattern of things in the heavens should be purified with these,....for Christ is not entered into the holy places made with hands, which are a figure of the true, but into heaven itself now to appear in the presence of God for us,....and unto them who look for him shall he appear the second time without sin unto salvation." (Heb. 9:23, 24. 29.)

By reading the twenty-third chapter of Leviticus in connection with other portions of the Word, I conclude that Christ was crucified on the 14th day of the Jewish first month, at the feast of the passover; that he was waved or wafted on high as the first-fruits of them that slept when the feast of the first-fruits of the field was held and the offering waved before the Lord. That on the first day of the seventh month, on which day the memorial of blowing of trumpets was held, "the trumpet shall sound and the dead shall be raised." That on the 10th day of this seventh month the atonement will be made, and whosoever will not afflict his soul i. e., sincerely repent of his sin and sanctify himself wholly to the Lord, will have no part in the blessing which the high priest will bring on the 15th day of this seventh month, but he will be cut off from among his people.

Oh! that I may so live that when the feast of the ingathering at the end of earth's year shall come I may be among those who will take "boughs of goodly trees, branches of palm trees, and boughs of thick trees, and willows of the brook, and rejoice before the Lord."

As the Jewish seventh months answers to our September and October, I shall expect to see the King in his beauty very soon if the 1873 argument is correct, which I sincerely hope is the case.

Even if 1873 is not the time, "this generation" is almost gone, so we may feel safe in saying the Lord is near; very soon we shall see him for ourselves and not for another. Let us gird on the whole armor of God and fight manfully the battle of the Lord, remembering that the weapons of our warfare are not carnal, that when he comes we may be found of him in peace and receive the welcome plaudit "Well done; enter thou into the joy of thy Lord!"

"WORDS, like water, may float an idea into a mind, or, if in too great abundance, may wash the idea completely out of it."

A Good Retort.

"If you had avoided rum, said a wealthy though not an intelligent, grocer to his neighbor, "you[illegible]y habits, industry, and intellectual abilities would now have permitted you to ride in your carriage." "And if you had never sold rum for me to buy," replied the bacchanal, "you would have been my driver."

"Saved."

In the counting-room of a mercantile firm, a member of which was a rescued passenger from the "Atlantic," hangs in a frame the telegram he sent over the electric wire after the terrible night of suffering and death, "Saved!" In memory of the great deliverance, and the thrilling joy the announcement gave the single word is placed where every eye that comes within the room may read it. We thought of the message that flies to the heavenly world from ours, and which sends over it a tide of joy and melody, and is written in the Lamb's book of life forever," Saved." Oh, when will the church of Christ, appointed by him to rescue in his name and "power from on high" the perishing millions, emulate those who toiled to save from death through the long, sad hours of the steamer's tragedy, in the rescue of mortals on a sin-wrecked sphere?

Happy they who by faith put all burdens of sin and care in the hands of Christ, rejoicing now in the assurance that in letters of light "under their name above is written "Saved."—Christian Weekly.

A Year Without a Summer.

Almost every one has heard of the terrible dark year in the earlier part of the present century, which old New England farmers refer to as "eighteen hundred and starved to death." A contributor gives the following information.

While every one is speaking of the present season as being remarkable in its characteristics, I have gathered for your readers some reliable facts of the year 1816, known as the "year without a Summer;" Few persons now living can recollect it; but it was the coldest ever known throughout Europe and America. The following is a brief abstract of the weather during the year. January was mild, so much so as to render fires almost needless in parlors. December previous was very cold. February was not very cold; with the exception of a few days it was like its predecessor. March was cold and boisterous during the first part of it; the remainder was mild. A great freshet on the Ohio and Kentucky rivers caused great loss of property. April began warm but grew colder as the month advanced, and ended in snow and ice, with a temperature more like Winter than Spring. May was more remarkable for frowns than smiles. Buds and flowers were frozen, ice formed half an inch thick; corn was killed and the fields were again and again planted until deemed too late. June was the coldest ever known in this latitude. Frost, ice and snow were common. Almost every green thing was killed. Fruit was nearly all destroyed. Snow fell to the depth of ten inches in Vermont, several in Maine and three in Central New York, and also in Massachusetts. Considerable damage was done at New Orleans in consequence of the rapid rise in the river; the suburbs were covered with water, and the roads were only passible in boats. July was accompanied by frost and ice; on the fifth ice was formed of the thickness of window glass, throughout New England, New York, and some parts of Pennsylvania. Indian corn was nearly all destroyed; some favorably situated fields escaped. [illegible] was true of some of the hill farms [illegible]chusetts. August was more [illegible] if possible than the Summer months already passed. Ice was formed half an inch thick. Indian corn was so frozen that the greater part was cut down and dried for fodder. Almost every green thing was destroyed both in this country and Europe. Papers received from England stated that it would be remembered by the present generation, that the year 1816 was a year in which there was no Summer. Very little corn ripened in New England and the Middle States. Farmers supplied themselves from the corn produced in 1815 for the seed of the Spring of 1817. It sold for from four to five dollars per bushel. September furnished about two weeks of the mildest weather of the season. Soon after the middle it became very cold and frosty, and ice formed a quarter of an inch thick. October produced more than its share of cold weather, frost and ice particularly. November was cold and blustering. Enough snow fell to make good sleighing. December was quite mild and comfortable. The above is a brief summary of "the cold Summer of 1816," as it was called in order to distinguish it from the cold season. The winter was mild. Frost and ice were common in every month of the year. Very little vegetation matured in the Eastern and Middle States. The sun's rays seemed to be destitute of heat through the Summer; all nature seemed to be clad in a sable hue, and men exhibited no little anxiety concerning the future of this life. The average wholesale price of flour during that year, in the Philadelphia market, was thirteen dollars per barrel. The average price of wheat in England was ninety-seven shillings per quarter.—Farmer's Cabin[illegible] mhurst, N. H.

Our Young Folks.

Unfinished Still.

A baby's boot, and a skein of wool,
  Faded, and soiled and soft;
Odd things, you say, and I doubt you're right,
Round a seaman's neck this stormy night,
  Up in the yards aloft.

Most like it's folly; but, mate, look here:
  When first I went to sea,
A woman stood on yon far-off strand,
With a wedding-ring on the small soft hand
  Which clung so close to me.

My wife—God bless her! The day before,
  She sat beside my foot;
And the sunlight kissed her yellow hair,
And the dainty fingers, deft and fair,
  Knitting a baby's boot.

The voyage was over; I came ashore:
  What, think you, found I there?
A grave the daisies had sprinkled white,
A cottage empty and dark as night,
  And this beside the chair.

The little boot, 'twas unfinished still;
  The tangled skein lay near;
But the knitter had gone away to rest,
With the babe asleep on her quiet breast,
  Down in the churchyard drear.

Caring for Sparrows.

A little girl, seeing the servant throw the crumbs into the fire, said, "Dont you know that God takes care of the sparrows?"

"If God takes care of them," was the careless reply, "we need not trouble ourselves about them."

"But," said the little girl, "I had rather be like God, and help him take care of the little birds, than scatter or waste the food that he gives us."

So she carefully collected what was left of the crumbs and threw them out of the window. In a short time several little birds flew eagerly to the spot, and picked up the crumbs she had scattered. After this she every day collected, in a little basket, the crumbs and bits of bread that had fallen around the table, and threw them under the window for the little birds; and during all the winter these little creatures came regularly after each meal to partake of the food thus provided for their support. How beautiful it was to see this little girl trying "to help God," as she said, and thus early learning to be kind to the helpless of God's creatures!—Well-Spring.

Little Mary's Thoughts.

Little Mary had just come from the window, with evident pleasure, and sat down on her little stool at papa's feet.

It was just at sunset; and a most glorious sunset it was. The western sky was mantled with clouds of the most gorgeous hues, upon which the little girl gazed with thoughtful pleasure.

"Papa," she said at length, "do you know what I think when I see those pretty clouds?"

"No. What do you think of them, Mary?"

"I always think they are God's veils. Does n't he have beautiful veils, papa, to hide him from us?"

"True enough, little one," thought I, "the clouds which hide him from our sight now are beautiful. There is a rainbow on them if we will see it; they shine with mercy and truth."

Was not that a pretty thought of little Mary's? And does it not remind you of the time when the veils shall be parted, and he shall come with clouds, and every eye shall see him?

The Little Mesmerist.

Grave Uncle Nathan was respected as one of the most dignified and decorous men in town. Neat to primness, not a strand of his long straight hair was ever displaced, nor a speck of dust on his glossy black coat.

But five-year-old Gay, one Sunday evening, half an hour before church, climbed up on his knees, and wove her soft fingers in and out among his whiskers, until the good man bowed his head on his breast and went to sleep, dreaming of angels.

On the corner of the mantle near which they sat, and within reaching distance, stood her "dolly's clothes," full of ribbon sashes, two or three inches in length, of every color of the rainbow.

A brilliant idea visited her. Reaching for the basket, she took out the sashes, forthwith she began to separate bunches of her uncle's smooth hair into queer little twists or tails, tying the end of each one with a bit of ribbon, until his head looked as gorgeous and as variegated as a Hollander's tulip-bed. The church bells rang out their last warning just as she had finished her labors, and consecrated it with a kiss of purest love on his eyelids.

"The bell is ringin' for church, uncle, and you look so sweet!" said the admiring Gay.

"Bless me! I'll be late," said the punctual deacon, seizing his hat and clapping it on his head. "You mesmerized me, you little witch. Now run off to Aunt Tracy," and, kissing her tenderly, he was in another instant in the street.

"I dess I did mesmri uncle, and he looks splendid," soliloquized Gay, as she sought her aunt, who was in bed with a headache.

The organ was sending out the soft strains of voluntary, as Uncle Nathan, hat in hand, walked slowly and solemnly up the long aisle. The light ends of the ribbons fluttered gently with every motion of his body, and his head looked like a pyramid of butterflies. Those who saw him passing by stared after him amazed. Handkerchiefs were pressed to lips which would laugh because "they had to."

Why, Brother Barker, what does ail your head?" said his pew chum, in a low whisper.

"Nothing, thank you, but my wife has a severe headache."

"He's gone crazy," thought Mr. Wells "what shall I do? My dear friend who fixed your hair?" For by this time the attention of that half side of the church had been attracted.

"My hair? Nobody. What does this mean?" as rubbing his pate hurriedly, bit after bit of ribbon descended like snowflakes. Snatching his hat he vanished through the side door like a shadow, and next morning the innocent little mesmerist was sent home.—Sel.

Job Work.

We are now prepared to do all kinds of job work with despatch, and in a satisfactory manner. Envelopes, Letter-Heads, Note Heads, Bill-Heads, Cards of all kinds, Circulars, etc., etc. Friends at a distance from printing offices, and often close to them, will do well to get our figures before ordering work elsewhere.

Book Notices, Etc.

THE SCIENCE OF HEALTH for August is an excellent number; opening with an illustrated article on the Care of the Feet; The Confessions of Sir Edward Lytton Bulwer is given, Sins against the Body; an excellent article on Green Corn, giving a dozen or more modes of preparing this universally used article of food; Causes and Cure of Summer Complaints; Health Resorts in America; Signs of Madness in Dogs; and a variety of other rich reading, including Answers to Correspondents. Terms $2.00 a year. A new Vol began with July. Sent on trial six months, for $1. S. R. Wells, Publisher, 389 Broadway, N. Y.

Bret Harte's has An Episode of Fiddletown in the August number of SCRIBNER'S. The strong bits of characterization, and quick, masterly touches of pathos which we find in these opening pages, show that the hand of the poet-romancer has not forgot his cunning. Dr. Holland's Arthur Bonnicastle is continued, an accompanying picture, by Miss Hallock, illustrating the scene of the destruction of the will. There is in the same number a bright sketch entitled Fred Trover's Little Iron clad, by J. T. Trowbridge. The illustrated papers are on Nantucket, Normandy Picturesque, Mount Shasta, and The Canopus Stone. John Burroughs, a good authority on birds, writes about The Blue Bird; Fitz-Edward Hall contributes an interesting article on Pandits; H. H. tells about My Day in the Wilderness; Mrs. Plunket gossips of Modern Hotels and J. Esten Cook about My Knee-Buckles. Mr. Blauvelt's leading essay on Modern Skepticism will doubtless attract the attention of the religious press. Among the poetic contributors are E. C. Stedman, John Hay and George MacDonald.

Dr. Holland's Topics of the Times are entitled, The Morals of Journalism, A reply to many Letters, and The Liquor Interest. In The Old Cabinet we find The Flaw in the Jewel, I met a Traveler on the Road, and A Sower went forth to Sow. Home and Society treats of Dinner Giving, The Abuse of the Appetite, The Habit of Reading, Ready Made Garments, and The Fashion in Jewelry. The other departments are as varied as usual.

Obituary.

HIMES.—Died, in Buchanan, Mich., July 9, 1873, very suddenly of diptheria, Charles Hugh Himes only son of Walter I. and Emma E. Himes. Aged 4 years 6 months and 18 days.

HULETT—Died in Hinton, Mich., June 31, 1873, of inflamation, after three weeks of severe suffering, Edith Valeria, daughter of L. S. and J. Hulett, and granddaughter of Eld. J. Bower. Aged 8 years.

Words of comfort were spoken from 1 Thes. 2: 19. Lovely and affectionate Eda was beloved by all.

She sleeps a dreamless sleep
And waits a brighter day;
Just yonder where we cannot weep,
When death has passed away.

Jesus will raise the dead,
Oh, calm the troubled breast;
Come unto me, he kindly said,
And I will give you rest.

M. A. K.

TOMLINSON.—Died, in Mineral, Bureau Co., Ill., on Wednesday, July 2, 1873, Br. William Tomlinson. Aged 75 years and 25 days.

The tyrant issued a sudden summons for him to enter the dark domain, yet he went down with a bright hope and a full assurance of faith, all ready to welcome the morn of deliverance, which he believed would soon dawn.

The large circle of his acquaintances will miss him, until these dark shades give place to eternal glory.

Words of consolation from 2 Cor. 1: 3, 4.

L. F. COLE.

Such are my arrangements until further notice.
ALSON E. RATHBUN.

The Northern Illinois A. C. Conference will hold its annual session during the camp meeting at Wyanet. It is hoped that each church within the bounds of this Conference will send either by delegate, or by letter, a full report of the past year. Each minister is expected to be present in person or else report by letter.

Come, brethren in the ministry and laity, let us make a united and earnest effort to proclaim to a judgment-bound world the good news of our soon-coming King.

Any letters for the Conference should be addressed to the Secretary, Wyanet, Bureau county, Illinois. N. W. SPENCER, President.
C. C. MARSTON, Secretary.

The camp meeting of the Northern Illinois Conference will be held at Wyanet, Bureau county, commencing August 30, and continuing over two Sabbaths.

Wyanet is on the C. B. and Q. R. R.; west from Mendota. Those coming on the I. C. R. R., will change cars at Mendota. Those coming on the C. and R. I. R. R., will change at Burlington Crossing.

The camp ground is a half a mile east from the depot.

It is earnestly hoped that each church will be represented in the tented grove at Wyanet this year. Lumber will be furnished on the ground for making tents, at cost if destroyed, and free if uninjured. Let there be a general rally from all parts of the conference, and we should rejoice to see tents on the ground from any of our sister conferences. Come one, come all, laymen and ministers, brother and sister, saint and sinner, from this or any other conference. Come praying, come in the spirit of Elijah's God, and come to labor for the salvation of perishing sinners. We hope to see the best camp meeting this year ever held in the State. So mote it be.

A cordial invitation is hereby extended to any minister from abroad who may be desirous of attending the meeting. There will be a hearty welcome accorded to all who come in the spirit of the Master to labor for his glory.

For those who may wish to board on the ground ample provision will be made.

In behalf of Committee,
N. W. SPENCER, Chairman.
C. C. MARSTON, Secretary.

Poetry.

The Coming Day.

E. A. MARSH.

Bright is the morning, fair is the day,
When the darkness shall flee away;
And as it's near we ever will pray,
Now let thy kingdom come.

CHORUS—
Fair and bright that glorious day will be,
When from sin we are forever free,
And all the ransomed we then shall see,
In our eternal home.

When that bright day in splendor shall rise,
Visions of glory will gladden our eyes;
Then will the saints ascend to the skies,
To greet our coming King.

CHORUS—Fair and bright, etc.

Oh, how the heavenly arches will ring,
When all the ransomed nations shall sing
Hosannas to Jesus, Israel's king,
When he appears to reign.

CHORUS—Fair and bright, etc.

Then all our friends in glory shall meet,
The praises of Jesus to ever repeat;
And our enjoyment will then be complete,
When we arrive at home.

CHORUS—Fair and bright, etc.

Evil—Its Origin, Progress and End.

GEO. W. HURD.

The Apostle Paul speaks of the workings of this same principle, in the Hebrew letter, and calls it chastisement. He tells us that, at the time of its infliction, it is "grievous" and bitter, but after we have yielded, and have been "exercised thereby," it results in the "peaceable fruits of righteousness." When God cast down the angels that "sinned," into our world, and permitted them—under their great leader, Diabolos—to tempt and try, and, if possible, to accomplish our ruin and destroy us, he at the same time sent the Holy Angels to help, to cheer, to strengthen and to bless us; and, in order that everything necessary to our salvation should be placed within our reach, he caused a revelation of himself to be made, with all the information needed to guide mankind amid all its trials, temptations, suffering and joy. To this he adds the Holy Spirit, thus providing weapons and armor that will enable all that will use them to come off victorious. By the use of these means the "evil" of life may be turned into good, the "curse" into a blessing. Thousands upon thousands have yielded in the time of trial and have fallen, while multitudes have overcome by the faith of Jesus. By yielding to the tempter we have anger, jealousies, malice, hatred, murders and all the awful roots of sin to penetrate down deep into the human heart, but, by refusing to yield, we sap these roots, take away their life, and by God's grace assisting, exterminate them, and in their stead plant in our hearts the roots of peace, which, if watered and nourished by God's grace and spirit, will produce the Christian graces—love, joy, peace—resulting in and crowned by a glorious harvest of blessing in this world, and in life eternal in the world to come. By yielding to the tempter, while in the ordeal, wars, murders, rapine and a general devastation has come upon mankind. By it armies are marshaled one against another; friend raises the murderous hand against friend; father against son; brother against brother. The battle-fields of earth by it are moistened with the blood and enriched by the decomposing carcasses of its millions of votaries. Widowhood and orphanage, with all its desolation, suffering and terrors, find in it a fruitful soil. The mother's burning tears and awful, heart-rending agony for son or daughter. The deserted, heart-broken wife, pining away day by day for unrequited love, belong to it. By it our insane asylums are filled, our almshouses, and our prisons. By it our joys are blasted, our fair prospects blighted, and our hearts filled with unutterable sadness, woe and grief. By it comes all the suffering, woe and sorrows; all the bitter anguish and despair known to our world. By it Eden became a desolation, paradise a waste, and earth one universal charnel house. This is indeed a sad picture, but man has chosen this rather than its opposite—the joy and the anguish, the blessing and the curse; life and death are set before us and God, after giving all necessary helps to enable us to see and grasp the good, has said: "Choose ye, which ye will serve." Some choose wisely; lay hold upon the helps that God has provided; meet boldly the great testing principle "evil;" pass through the ordeal unscathed, and, as a result, the widow's heart is made to sing for joy, the orphan finds father, mother, home, food and blessing; the pauper is made rich, the mad man sane, the prisons emptied, the mother's heart is no longer filled with grief and sad forebodings, the son and daughter are reclaimed, the broken-hearted wife no longer languishes and pines, the love of other years is restored, the fickle husband has returned, grieved and repentant of his former wanderings. The battle-field has now become a fruitful garden, the sword a plowshare, and the warrior a man of peace. Churches and colleges arise, where once were dens of infamy; the arts now flourish, the sciences — with rapid strides — advance, the house of God is filled with earnest, zealous worshipers. The charnel house is emptied, the Eden paradise blooms again, the saints with immortality are clothed, the universal peace restored, and the earth made vocal with our Father's praise.

Man's probation having closed, his character developed, for or against God, and the judgment come, there will exist no longer a need for this developing, testing principle—"evil;" and hence, it will pass away forever, and during the ceaseless ages, the saved, the redeemed will, without "evil" to annoy, or temptation to distract or draw them away from God, serve him with pure hearts ever. And it can be said to them, "Come ye, blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom." "Thou good and faithful servant, enter into the joy of the Lord." Let us then, dear reader, when we are tried, and tempted, and chastened, trust in the promise of Jehovah. He has said, "I will never leave thee, nor forsake thee; my grace shall be sufficient for thee; when thou passest through the waters I will be with thee, and through the rivers they shall not overflow thee; when thou walkest through the fire thou shalt not be burned; neither shall the flame kindle upon thee, for I am the Lord thy God, the holy one of Israel thy Saviour." Oh, can we not trust in him and "hold still" if God does take our heart and heat it, laying it on the great anvil of trial and drawing it out, blow by blow, forming, developing, fashioning it after his own will, into his own image. Can we not be patient, and with Jesus say, "not my will, but Thine, be done." Amen.

Future Recognition.

MRS. H. V. REED.

In the days when men used to announce from the pulpit that there were infants in hell that were only a span long, they preached as a suitable accompaniment to that theory that there would be no future recognition among the saints.

The few who were 'elected' to be saved were described as cold shadowy ghosts and transported to some indefinite world to spend the years of eternity with other ghosts all of whom were perfect strangers. These important 'doctrinal points' were generally discussed in connection with each other, and perhaps the second proposition was the logical result of the first, for any man who had advocated the first theory would naturally hope that nobody would know him in the next world, and he could hardly be blamed if he prefered to remain incog even in this. While these items come in naturally enough among the 'decrees' and 'sacred wills' and big box pulpits of Calvin's day they have a strange sound to our ears from a modern pulpit. We wonder greatly where any Bible reading man can pick up such a ghostly relic of the dark ages as the theory that in the world to come we shall all be strangers in a strange place.

Not only are we to be utter strangers to each other but to ourselves, for it is argued that memory will be gone, we can recall nothing that has ever occurred in our life history. If this be true we might as well be anybody else as ourselves, and the same mode of reasoning would prove the transmigration of souls, for we may have been cats or oxen instead of men and women for ought that we should be able to remember to the contrary.

Can we picture to ourselves anything more desolate than waking from the death state in a land of perfect strangers. Not one familiar face or loving voice to bid us welcome. Not one clasp from the dear hands that have ministered to our wants during the years of our pilgrimage. It may be argued that our Savior will be there to welcome us to his kingdom and that no one can be lonely in his presence. But if memory is gone he too is a stranger to us, we have no knowledge of his redeeming blood, no faith in the atonement, no memory of what he has suffered for us. We can have no love for him, because we know nothing of the dark hours wherein his sympathy has strengthened us, have no memory of the bitter trials wherein he has been both friend and shield, and we might walk the golden streets in perfect indifference to inquire "Who is the man Christ Jesus?"

If the grave is to hold our loves and hopes, our joys and sorrows, our memories and all knowledge of friends, surely it must remain forever the victor, for without these we should be in God's kingdom no better than idiots. We should care nothing for the crown, having no memory of the cross; care nothing for the glory, knowing nothing of the shame; care nothing for life, being ignorant of death; care nothing for happiness, having no knowledge of suffering; care nothing for Christ, having no memories of his dying love.

We hear a great deal about the unsatisfactory condition of the orthodox ghost, which can neither have a body or clothes, but with all deference to everybody, we would rather be a respectable ghost with a good memory, than to have a literal body with memory, friends, and consciousness lost. There may be those who have become so obnoxious to themselves that oblivion would be hailed as a luxury, and it is very likely there are some who would not want to be recognized in the other world, else this theory would never be preached, for the wish must be father to the thought. But to the most of us the kingdom itself would be lonely without the love of God that has been born in these years of trial; without the memory of a dying Savior, and the joy of his well earned crown; without the grand reunion of the army of the dead, who are sleeping on their armor, awaiting the roll call that shall lead them on to victory over death.

We are assured that we shall sit down with Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob in the kingdom of God; but if we are never to know who they are, the promise as far as we are concerned, might as well never be fulfilled.

Of what avail would it be to us to be told that this man was Abraham, if all memory of his history was obliterated? We could have no interest in him if we knew nothing of his place in the promises—if we were ignorant of God's oath and covenant with him.

The Holy City itself is to bare the names of the twelve tribes of Israel, and the twelve apostles of the Lamb, but how is the significance of this lost upon a race of creatures, who so far as they know never heard of either the twelve tribes or twelve apostles. Let us not go back even behind the shades of orthodoxy into the ghastly halls of the dark ages. "Now we only know in part, then we shall know even as also we are known."

The future holds for us a kingdom and a crown. God's own word is pledged that our loved ones shall "come again from the land of the enemy," and reign triumphant over death; and we if faithful shall know and love them there for God himself is love.

We shall look into their eyes all radiant with undying glory. We shall clasp their hands warm with the pulse of eternal life. We shall see their cheeks blooming with unfailing health, and kiss their rosy lips all fresh with the dews of immortality. We shall sit with them under the tree of life, and talk of the years of sunshine and of shade, of joy and sorrow wherein our hearts were drawn together.

We shall see our risen Lord and know his loving face. We shall clasp the pierced hand and feel the wounded side, and know that it was done for us; we shall remember the story of the cross, and contrast it with the crown; and thus, beyond the trial and the suffering, beyond the cross and bitter cup, we shall be prepared to appreciate the life and happiness, the glory and the crowns that God will give to those that love him.

What I Heard, Again.

O. D. GIBSON.

I attended meeting not long ago to hear a "Dr." preach, who is a Millinarian, and had much to say about the "millennial age," the "one thousand year reign of Christ on earth"; during which be said God had declared "that nation should not lift up sword against nation, but they shall beat their swords into plowshares, and spears into pruning hooks, and should learn war no more." And this must be before the personal coming of the Lord. Thus "my Lord delayeth his coming" for one thousand years or more. Now this D. D., as well as all others ought to know that God has declared no such thing. It is a false statement of the sayings of God's word. It is taking the sayings of the second party spoken of, as the saying of the person speaking. To illustrate: I will say David has declared that "There is no God." Has David said so? yes; but have I not after all falsified his statement? (See Ps. 14: 1.) He says it, but says it is the saying of fools. So likewise God by his prophet Isaiah makes use of the above language concerning the nations in the last days, but instead of saying the nations shall do thus, he says that "in the last days" "many people shall go and say,. . . .the nations shall beat their swords into plowshares etc." And this D. D. is one of the "many people" who is fulfilling the very prophecy of what should be said in the last days. The cause of this saying is shown to be an exalted or proud condition of the professed church. "The mountain [government] of the Lord's house shall be established in the top of the mountains [or governments]. Thus because she is favored and protected by the civil arm, she has become proud, its members become soothsayers like the Philistines. The above is one of her "soothsayings." (See Is. 2: 1–9.)

Never was a Scripture more completely fulfilled than this in the preaching of the world's conversion for one thousand years before the Lord can come. "They say, The Lord saith, Albeit the Lord hath not spoken."

Again, this D. D. told us how Christ would reign on earth during this one thousand years, and his saints with him. He said it would be in the same way Queen Victoria reigns in Canada, through and by her faithful subjects. Christ was in heaven, but his saints would reign with him, and he through them at the ballot box. The whole world would "become one grand democratic republic, etc." Will that not be a glorious time when the saints reign over the whole earth through a political ballot box? Inasmuch as women are saints as well as man, they get their suffrage, then, and of course reign too. When will all such soothsayings cease, and men learn from the mouth of the Lord alone? The word answers, it will be "worse and worse" till Jesus comes.

A STORY is told by a certain Deacon Giles, who proposed to change his residence so as to avoid the constant trouble in which he was involved with his neighbors. His daughter suggested to her father, that she was afraid Deacon Giles would go with him. The denizens of a man's heart are often his most troublesome neighbors, and are the hardest to get away from.

The Four Kingdoms and the Fifth.

HENRY DANA WARD,

Of the Protestant Episcopal Church, Philadelphia.

"In the first year of Belshazzar, king of Babylon, Daniel had a dream, and visions of his head upon his bed. Then he wrote the dream and told the sum of the matters." Dan. 7:1.

The word of the prophet is the word of God. By prophecy the Lord demonstrates his sway over all the world. He challenges pretenders, saying, "Let them bring forth, and show us what shall happen; things that are to come hereafter, that we may know that ye are gods." (Is. 41:22, 23.) That which he demands of others in proof of their deity, the Lord manifests for himself by the words of his prophets, and especially in the Book of Daniel.

When former things have come to pass, we know the prophecy is from God, and that the latter things will spring forth in their season. (Is. 42:9.)

The successive empires of this world from the days of Daniel to the end of time, are symbolized by four wild beasts of ferocious character, the lion, the bear, the leopard, and the fourth beast nameless, yet most terrible in teeth of iron, in stamping feet, and head with ten horns. These four came up in the vision successively; and ruled temporally, until the fifth came, which is the promised kingdom of God to come. For, in the end of the fourth kingdom which now is, "the judgment was set, and the books were opened; and the beast was slain, and his body destroyed and given to the burning flame." (Dan. 7:10, 11.)

Difficulties are encountered on every hand in the interpretation of so grand a vision of the course of empire on this earth from the reign of the Assyrian, to the everlasting kingdom of Christ and of the saints. But from Irenæus in the second century to this day, the learned, with extraordinary unanimity, have agreed that the four kings of the vision are the Assyrian, the Persian, the Greek, and the Latin Empires, all which continue to possess the earth, and the fourth, the Latin, must rule in one form or another, with great power, "till the judgment shall sit, and they shall take away his dominion [of the last horn], to consume and destroy it, unto the end. And the kingdom and dominion and the greatness of the kingdom, under the whole heaven shall be given to the people of the saints of the Most High, whose kingdom is an everlasting kingdom, and all dominions shall serve and obey him." (Dan. 7:26, 27.) Thus the prophecy unfolds the links in the chain of this world's empire from Babylon to the everlasting kingdom of the Son of man and of the saints, (Dan. 7:13, 14.) The former things are come to pass, and the latter things spring forth in their season.

The same course of empire is foreshadowed in Daniel's interpretation of Nebuchadnezzar's dream. The four kingdoms, of gold, silver, brass, and iron, constitute the image, down to the feet and toes, which are iron mixed with potter's clay. The prophet said: "Thou, O king, art this head of gold. And after thee shall arise another kingdom inferior to thee, and another, a third kingdom of brass, which shall bear rule over all the earth. And the fourth kingdom shall be strong as iron. And in the days of these kings shall the God of heaven set up a kingdom which shall never be destroyed. It shall break in pieces and consume all these kingdoms; and it shall stand forever." (Dan. 2:37–44.) The first three dynasties ruled, each one about three hundred years. The fourth has ruled about two thousand years, and accordingly, the fifth kingdom is next expected, which shall stand forever. The former things are come to pass into the fourth kingdom. The latter will come to pass in the fifth and eternal kingdom.

Our lot being cast in the fourth kingdom, and our hope being in the fifth, we prepare for its coming. For the prophecy having been fulfilled in the preceding kingdoms, it will be also in the everlasting to come.

The symbol of the fourth empire comes in the vision to have ten horns, and in the image ten toes. These were understood in the Church of the first four centuries, to signify the division of the Latin empire into ten kingdoms; and in the fifth century the Latin empire was so divided, and the kingdoms remain unto this day. Not ten remain, neither ought they, according to the prophecy. For the original division was in the vision broken by the rise of a small and singular kingdom among the ten, which uprooted three. So the present number is eight: a number easily counted on the head and face of the Latin empire to-day. Britain, Spain, Portugal, France, Austria, Germany, Italy, and Papacy last of all.

The prophet in the vision asks an explanation of the ten horns, "and of the other which came up last and before whom all fell; even of that horn that had eyes, and a mouth that spake very great things, whose look was more stout than his fellows. I beheld and the same horn made war with the saints, and prevailed against them, until the ancient of days came, and judgment was given to the saints of the Most High, and the time came that the saints possessed the kingdom." Thus he said: "The ten horns out of this kingdom are ten kings that shall arise, and another shall arise after them, diverse from the first, and he shall subdue three kings. And he shall speak words against the Most High, and think to change times and laws. But the judgment shall sit, and they shall take away his dominion, to consume and to destroy it unto the end. And the kingdom under the whole heaven shall be given to the people of the saints of the Most High." (Dan. 7:20–27.)*

These former things foretold by Daniel the prophet have come to pass before all eyes, whereby we may know that the God of the prophet Daniel is the living God, whose word does not return unto him void. He accomplishes what he has spoken, and will accomplish it to the very end in the fifth and final kingdom, "when all dominions shall serve and obey him." The prophecy contains nothing to define the length of the periods of either of the four kingdoms; but whatever may be their times, they follow each other in consecutive order. And the fifth, which is the kingdom of God, succeeds the fourth, and itself has no successor. As it is written of the end of the four kingdoms: "Behold, one like the Son of man came with the clouds of heaven. And there was given him a kingdom that all people, nations, and languages should serve him. His dominion is an everlasting dominion, which shall not pass away, and his kingdom that which shall not be destroyed." (Dan. 7:13, 14.) So the prophet himself interprets his prophecy.

Not two everlasting kingdoms are foretold and promised to come on the earth, but one, the same which John Baptist and our Lord preached at hand. The kingdom foretold by the prophets is the same preached and prayed for in the gospel, and revealed in the Apocalypse, where the manner of its coming with the King of kings at the head of the armies of heaven, is set forth, as also in Jude 14, and Mat. 25:31. This great event, followed by the new heavens and new earth, is preceded by the overthrow of "Babylon the Great," the woman whose name written on her forehead is "Mystery, the mother of harlots, and abominations of earth." The Scripture saith, "The woman which thou sawest is that great city which reigneth over the kings of the earth." (Rev. 17:5, 18.) The Latin city alone reigned then, and has for many centuries since reigned over the kings of earth—the self-styled "eternal city," the capital of the fourth kingdom of prophecy. The type of the fourth kingdom, "the beast was slain and his body destroyed and given to the burning flame." (Dan. 7:44.) Also the harlot city, which reigneth over the kings of the earth, "she shall be utterly burned with fire, for strong is the Lord God who judgeth her." (Rev. 18:8; 17:15–18.)

The fourth kingdom and the seat of its power are the Latin polity, remarkable in its career, noted in history, and fearful in its end, as noted by the prophet. And the everlasting kingdom foretold by the prophets, for the inheritance of the Son of David, follows alike on the fourth kingdom of Daniel, "destroyed and given to the burning flame," and on the overthrow of "that great city which reigneth over the kings of the earth." The burning occurs also according to Paul, the Apostle, "when the Lord Jesus Christ shall be revealed from heaven with his mighty angels in flaming fire, taking vengeance on them that know not God, and that obey not the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ," especially on "that wicked, whom the Lord shall consume with the brightness of his coming," "to be glorified in his saints and to be admired in all them that believe in that day." (2 Thes. 1:7–10; 2:8.) Also according to Peter, this burning shall occur "in the day of judgment and perdition of ungodly men, wherein the heavens being on fire shall be dissolved, and the elements shall melt with fervent heat, the earth also, and the works that are therein shall be burned up." (2 Pet. 3:7, 10, 12.) What the Lord has spoken by Daniel the prophet, and by the apostles Peter, Paul, and John he will do, terrible to humanity though it be.

Both Peter and the Apocalypse agree with Isaiah 65:17; 66:7–9, in testimony to the coming of the new creation, with the resurrection from the dead unto new heavens and a new earth upon the dissolution of the present creation; Peter saying, "We according to his promise, look for new heavens and a new earth, wherein dwelleth righteousness" (2 Pet. 3:13), and the Apocalypse saying, "I saw a new heaven and a new earth, for the first heaven, and the first earth were passed away." (Rev. 21:1.) "They shall perish, saith the apostle to the Hebrews, but thou remainest; and they shall wax old as doth a garment, and as a vesture shalt thou fold them up, and they shall be changed." (Heb. 1:11, 12.) The flames which burn the body of the fourth beast and its capital, with the heavens and earth, are accompanied by the coming of the Son of man "the second time without sin unto salvation" (Heb. 9:28), and are followed by his everlasting kingdom and throne over all nations and languages "under the whole heaven." As there is but one Son of man whose kingdom is to come on the earth, it can be none other than that we preach and pray for to come, as Jesus taught and commanded his apostles. Objections can be raised to this interpretation, but they are feeble compared to those which rise up against every other. It is not only in harmony with the Scriptures already quoted, but with the whole economy of God in this creation, as noted in the Scripture of truth.

In the first epistle to the Thessalonians, fourth chapter, and in the first chapter of the second epistle, the apostles Paul, Silvanus, and Timothy foretell the coming of the Lord from heaven, together with the resurrection from the dead, and the righteous judgment of God on the wicked in their "everlasting destruction from the presence of the Lord," while the saints shall be glorified with him. The language is the most earnest and solemn, and so impressive that some among the Thessalonians were led to suppose the day of the Lord had already come, while they were not of the number to inherit the kingdom. The apostle in the second chapter reassures them, saying, "For the day of Christ shall not come," except there first come an apostasy, and that man of sin be revealed the son of perdition. "Remember ye not that when I was yet with you I told you these things? And now ye know what withholdeth that he might be revealed in his time. For the mystery of the iniquity doth already work: only he who now letteth will let, and then shall that wicked be revealed whom the Lord shall consume." (2 Thes. 2:2–8.) These things belong to the Roman empire. Church history demonstrates that the Christians of the second and third centuries, and so down to this day, regarded "that wicked," as the same called by John, "the Antichrist," and by Daniel foretold as the little and last horn coming out of the head of the fourth kingdom among the ten and overthrowing three, and dominating over the remaining seven. And they were in the third, fourth and fifth centuries, looking for him to come up in the Latin kingdom and to overthrow the church. Tertullian in the third century acknowledged that the Latin throne was that "which now letteth," to whom the apostle refers, saying: "Remember ye not that I told you these things," which throne "was taken out of the way" in the latter part of the fifth century, A.D. 476. Considering these prophecies, historic parts, and testimonies, it is not to be doubted that the wicked horn of the prophet, the man of sin of the apostle, and the harlot of the apocalypse are the one bold Antichrist,* having horns like a lamb, and the voice of a dragon, whom the primitive church were, and the Catholic church are, this day expecting to rise and to reign till the Lord Jesus Christ coming with clouds shall destroy him and his kingdom and this earth together.

The history of the Latin kingdom shows the accurate fulfillment of these prophecies respecting the fourth kingdom of the prophet Daniel in their principal features, and adds force to the gospel, saying: "For the kingdom of heaven is at hand." Hence we learn important lessons. First, to be looking for his coming "that will come and will not tarry." Second, that our Father in heaven who has prolonged the times many centuries knows how to prolong them many more. And third, that the former things of the prophecy having come to pass, the latter things will spring forth in their season.

This view of the holy prophecies of Daniel, Paul, Peter, and John harmonize with the whole economy of God, as revealed in the Bible, the two dispensations, one of time the other of eternity. The seed of the woman was promised to bruise or to crush the serpent's head. (Gen. 3:15.) To Abraham it was said: "In thy seed shall all the nations of the earth be blessed." (Gen. 22:18.) To David it was said: "I will set up thy seed after thee, and I will establish the throne of his kingdom forever." (2 Sam. 7:12, 13.) Unto his anointed, God said: "Thou art my son, I will give thee the nations for thine inheritance and the uttermost parts of the earth for thy possession." (Ps. 2:6.) And to the blessed virgin it was said: "Thou shalt bring forth a son, and the Lord God shall give unto him the throne of his father David, and he shall reign over the house of Jacob forever, and of his kingdom there shall be no end." (Luke 1:32.) These and many similar promises a child can understand of Jesus, and a man must know that they remain to be fulfilled, and will yet be fulfilled, in their approopriate time. And also that "The Son of God was manifested that he might destroy the works of the devil," (1 John 3:8.) "that through death he might destroy him that had the power of death, that is the devil." (Heb. 2:14.) A child can see that death, a work of the devil, is still active, and a man may see that the devil is not destroyed, although it is written, that "the God of peace shall bruise Satan under your feet shortly." (Rom. 16:20.) All the nations of the earth have never yet been blessed as promised to Abraham, nor has Christ received the uttermost parts of the earth for his possession; neither does the Son of the virgin sit upon the throne of his father David, nor does all flesh see the salvation of God. Far from it; three-fourths of the earth's population are to this day heathen, and not one-eighth pretend to obey his laws. But surely our God is able to keep his promises. These prophecies will be fulfilled, heaping measure and running over, in the day of the Lord Jesus, when the stone out of the mountain shall break the image of the nations to dust, "and the kingdom and dominion and the greatness of the kingdom under the whole heaven shall be given to the people of the saints of the Most High, whose kingdom is an everlasting kingdom, and dominions shall serve and obey Jesus." (Dan. 7:18, 27.)

Thus the ever blessed God shows from the beginning what shall come to pass hereafter, that the believer may prepare for it. And he brings to pass before the eyes of all nations in the current history of the world enough of the prophecies already fulfilled in the four kingdoms to demonstrate, that he rules and will in his time fully accomplish all he has spoken of the fifth. He will make restitution of all things better than before. He will, indeed, make all things new, rescued from Satan, from the curse and from death. "And having made peace by the blood of his cross" (Col. 1:20) he will "put all things in subjection under his feet." (Heb. 2:8; 1 Cor. 15:27.) "That at the name of Jesus every knee should bow, of thing in heaven, of things in earth, and things under the earth, and that every tongue should confess that Jesus Christ is Lord, to the glory of God the Father." (Phil. 2:10.) Such is the fifth kingdom of Daniel the prophet, and such is the grand consummation of the first promise, of all the promises. Daniel is a true prophet. The fourth kingdom of his vision and of the king's dream will end with the times of the Gentiles, and "in the dispensation of the fullness of times" will come the fifth or the kingdom of the saints, when the last "trumpet shall sound, and the dead shall be raised incorruptible, and we shall be changed" (1 Cor. 15:52) with great voices in heaven saying, "The kingdom of this world is become the kingdom of our Lord and of his Christ, and he shall reign forever and ever." (Rev. 11:15.)

This is the fifth kingdom of the prophet Daniel, preached in the gospel and prayed for to come in all the churches, "Thy kingdom come, that God in all things may be glorified through Jesus Christ, to whom be praise and dominion forever. Amen."
—Prophetic Times.

A GOOD PRAYER.—A little Quaker boy, about six years old, after sitting like the rest of the congregation in silence, all being afraid to speak first, he thought, he got up on the seat, and folding his arms over his breast, murmured in a sweet, clear voice, just loud enough to be heard on the fore seat, "I do wish the Lord would make us all gooder; and gooder, and gooder, till there is no bad left."

Would a longer prayer have been better?

CHRIST and his cross is better than the world and its crown.

* History records the names and acts of the four dominions which have succeeded each other since the prophet Daniel, in the government of the civilized world, the last of which is the Latin, of which in the fifth century, the fragments were generally called the ten kingdoms. Some three hundred years after the disruption of the Latin empire, another power arose diverse from the first ten, having a small territory, a great voice, and a stout look. The small power exalted itself, and still prevails, and according to the apostles and prophets, must endure until the ancient of days in the judgment shall give the kingdom of the regenerate earth to the saints of the Most High, which shall stand forever.

*Anti means "instead of, place of, for," before it means "against." Vicar of Christ is literally instead of Christ, and for Christ, and officially is the Antichrist.

Women and the Gospel.

MARY A. SEYMOUR.

This has become almost an hackneyed question, and is likely to be a burdensome stone before the matter is satisfactorily settled. I have not felt called upon to speak on this subject except through woman's papers, since debating the question through Eld. J. Marsh's paper, some twenty-two years ago, and had concluded that younger and stronger pens than mine must now do the work; but my mind has been stirred mightily of late, by reading a work published in THE TIMES' office, and eulogized by its former editor. I have wished for strength to review this essay, which was approved by the N. Y. Advent Christian Conference of 1872, but I have neither leisure nor strength to answer at length through THE TIMES, but must be permitted to say a few things. If this essayist had taken the position that the Scriptures forbid public speaking at all, then the argument might have had a show of relevancy; but to admit that they may preach the gospel, but must not help their converts to obey its first commands upon them after repentance, is very unreasonable. But Paul in 1 Cor. 14:34, 35, says: "Let your women keep silence in the churches; for it is not permitted unto them to speak, but they are commanded to be under obedience, as also saith the law. And if they will learn anything, let them ask their husbands at home: for it is a shame for women to speak in church." It is always quoted and supposed to apply to all places, conditions, times, and to all women. But did Paul so teach? He wrote fourteen epistles to different churches, widely scattered throughout Asia. The art of printing not invented, traveling very slow and wearisome, yet in writing twelve epistles to other churches, comprising seventy-six chapters, he never mentions this important rule in any of them. If it was designed for general application, and if we harmonize the Scriptures, or make Paul consistent with himself, then this silence was limited to place and time. See 1 Cor. 11:5, 13: "But every woman that prayeth or prophesieth with her head uncovered dishonoreth her head: for that is even all one, as if she were shaven. For if the woman be not covered, let her be shorn also: but if it be a shame for a woman to be shorn or shaven, let her be covered. For ye may all prophesy one by one, that all may learn, and all may be comforted." All the church can prophesy now, one at a time; but for reasons existing at a certain time, which are explained in the following extract, written by H. L. H., women were to keep silence:

"The Corinthians were a church of heathens, just converted, some of them having been fornicators, idolaters, adulterers, thieves, covetous, revilers, drunkards, extortioners and such like. (1 Cor. 6:9, 10, 11.) And though they were washed, and justified, and saved, they were yet very faulty. 1. They were not spiritual, but carnal—mere babes in Christ. (1 Cor. 3:1–3.) 2. They were divided into sects, some for Paul, Apollos, Cephas, Luther, Calvin, Wesley, etc. 3. They quarrelled, and brother went to law with brother, and that before the unjust. (1 Cor. 6:1–7.) 4. They were guilty of immorality in its most scandalous forms. (1 Cor. 5:1, 2.) 5. They fell into gross errors, and denied the resurrection of the dead. (1 Cor. 15:12.) 7. They even questioned Paul's apostleship, and wanted proof that Christ spoke in him. (2 Cor. 13:3; 2 Cor. 3:1–7.) 7. They were disorderly in their meetings, so that at the Lord's supper one was hungry and another drunken; some partaking unworthily and being judged and chastened of the Lord for their faults. (1 Cor. 11:21–30.)

In this state of general confusion, when some were talking in unknown tongues, while every one had a psalm, an exhortation, or a doctrine; with men disputing and women asking questions, and no apostle nor leader to adjust matters, there being danger that unbelievers coming in would say that they were mad or insane (1 Cor. 15:23.), Paul began to give rules for preserving order.

1. He ordered the men some of them to "keep silence." If any man speak in an unknown tongue....if there be no interpreter, let him keep silence in the church. (1 Cor. 14:27, 28.)

2. If anything be revealed to another that sitteth by, let the first hold his peace." (1 Cor. 14:30.)

If this limited view of woman's prohibition be correct, then there is not a gospel text against her doing anything in the gospel vineyard that she has ability to perform; and that, too, without any restriction. But some one says if there is no gospel, there is law, for Paul refers to the law; so he does, and that law is contained in Lev. chap. 30 entire, and has reference to virgins in their father's house, or women living with husbands, but had no reference to any other women, of which there is a large class. (See v. 9.) This husband or father-authority was to be put in force within one day from the time the woman's vow was heard, or else not at all; a rather limited law that. 1 Tim. 2:12–14: But I suffer not a woman to teach, nor to usurp authority over the man, but to be in silence. For Adam was first formed, then Eve. And Adam was not deceived, but the woman being deceived was in the transgression; is often referred to as bearing directly against women in the ministry, or their being admitted to all its duties; but it has direct reference to the duties of a wife in the domestic relation, and her husband is the man over whom she must not "usurp (take unlawful) authority." Are there no conditions in the matter of the wife's obedience to the man, her husband? Must all wives obey the man even in besotted filth, and tobacco worm drippings? Yea, more; must she positively disobey the higher law for the sake of obeying the man if he commands her to steal? Shall the God fearing wife violate the fourth command? Paul is very explicit in Eph. 5:22–24, as regards the subordination of the wife. Hear him: "Wives submit yourselves unto your own husbands, as unto the Lord; for the husband is the head of the wife, even as Christ is the head of the church: and he is the savior of the body. Therefore as the church is subject unto Christ, so let the wives be to their husbands in everything." In all things she must bow to the head. But has the man any particular duties toward the wife? Let us read a little further in Eph. 5:25–33: "Husbands, love your wives, even as Christ also loved the church and gave himself for it; that he might sanctify and cleanse it with the washing of water by the word; that he might present it to himself a glorious church, not having spot, or wrinkle, or any such thing; but that it should be holy and without blemish. So ought men to love their wives as their own bodies. He that loveth his wife loveth himself. For no man ever yet hated his own flesh, but nourisheth and cherisheth it, even as the Lord the church; for we are members of his body, of his flesh, and of his bones. For this cause shall a man leave his father and mother, and shall be joined unto his wife, and they two shall be one flesh. This is a great mystery, but I speak concerning Christ and the church. Nevertheless, let every one of you in particular so love his wife even as himself; and the wife see that she reverence her husband." This reading, all the apostle said, makes the whole subject plain; the Christian man who loves his Christian wife as himself, so as to give his life for hers, is to be obeyed as the head of the wife; but this domestic obligation has little to do with the gospel ministry question, unless these loving husbands urge their God-fearing wives to preach Jesus the Christ, and such is certainly the case, for there are some nine couple or more among the waiters for the coming One, who go out two by two, to sound "the hour of his judgment is come." These wives obey their husbands who urge them to preach, and they obey both God and man in so doing; but are these not prophetic Abigails who cannot obey or reverence a Nabal? Please read the 25th chap. of 1 Sam. to learn what a noble woman did, whose husband was a son of Belial; then turn and read the description of a virtuous woman given by the mother of King Lemuel, in Prov. 31. Thank God, the Bible is woman's friend and guide. Its grace puts her in every good place, to do or receive good, and that good Book declares with prophetic certainty, that in the last days the spirit of God shall be poured upon the handmaids, and they shall work.

Joel 3:28–31: "And it shall come to pass afterward, that I will pour out my spirit upon all flesh; and your sons and your daughters shall prophesy, your old men shall dream dreams, your young men shall see visions. And also upon the servants and upon the handmaids in those days will I pour out my Spirit; and I will shew wonders in the heavens and in the earth, blood, and fire, and pillars of smoke. The sun shall be turned into darkness, and the moon into blood, before the great and the terrible day of the Lord come."

Dr. Thomas, in his Elpis Israel, says: "The reason why women want to go into the pulpit is, because they want to be like men." But Joel and Peter say the Spirit of God shall make woman prophesy in the last day, and Peter says, in Acts 2, that these days began then, but the last one has not yet dawned, but the unusual bestirring of the maidens in connection with the wonders in the heavens, are sure omens of the morning's dawn, when all who sow in tears shall reap in joy. Let the weary night of toil pass, and the weary rest; until then, work, wait and pray that God will bless our efforts to save the perishing.

"The End of the World."

C. C. M.

This is the title of a work of 300 pp. recently given to the reading public by Rev. Eggleston, D. D., of Brooklyn, L. I. It is certainly amusing to see passengers on the train take this book from the newsboy and look at the title, and then squint at the boy with an inquisitiveness that seems to say, "Are you an Adventist?" and "has it come to this, that Advent literature is being circulated among travelers passing through the country?" But what a change in the countenance when the next sentence is read—"A LOVE STORY," or "A NOVEL." There are no more fears of the book containing "Advent doctrine." And the only feeling readable in the expression of the passenger's countenance now is: "That's a curious subject to make a story out of."

Yes, reader, it has come to this, that a Doctor of Divinity has written a love story entitled "The End of the World." And, I may add, as to the quality of the story (for I've had the privilege of carefully reading it) that a more inapt, sickening and uninstructive compilation of nonsense I never saw put together in the shape of a book. It is intended as a burlesque on Millerism. Take an extract or two as a sample, and see if you don't pronounce it nonsense simmered down to its very essence. In the ch. "Figgers wont lie," this passage occurs: Eld. Hawkins is a Millerite preacher, and is lecturing on the chart; Jonas is a listener: "My feller citizen," said Jonas, "My feller citizen, look thar, wont you? He'll cypher the world into nothing in no time. He's like the feller that tried to find out the valoo of a fat shoat when wood was two dollars a cord: 'Ef I can't do it by substraction I'll do it by long division,' says he. And ef this 'rithmetic preacher can't make a finishment of this sublunary speer by addition, he'll do it by multiplication. They's only one answer in his book. Gin him any sum you please, and it all comes out 1843." On page 168 we read: "In Clark Township the Millerite excitement was at white heat. Some of the preachers in other parts of the country had set one day, some another, I believe Mr. Miller, the founder, never had the temerity to set a day. But his followers figured the thing more closely, and Eld. Hawkins had put a fine point on the matter. He was certain, for his part, that the time was at midnight on the 11th of August. His followers became very zealous, and such is the nature of an infection that scarcely anybody was able to resist it. Mrs. Anderson (she was the mother of the heroine of the story), true to her excitable nature, became fanatic—dreaming dreams, seeing visions, praying twenty times a day, wearing a sourly pious face, and making all around her more unhappy than ever. Jonas declared that "ef the noo airth and the noo heaven was to be chockful of sech as she, most any other place in the universe would be better, akordin' to his way of thinkin'." Of course they got married, i. e., Julia and August, and lived happily together, notwithstanding all the obstacles thrown in their way, not the least of which was the Millerite excitement about the "End of the World."

This book is having a large sale, and is being puffed and applauded by the religious press of the country. The Christian Union says of it: "Its description of the Millerite excitement of 1843, one of the most intense of the Second Advent movements in the history of Christianity, is singularly forcible and fascinating." The Central Baptist says: "It presents a perfect idea of the Millerite Advent excitement of thirty-five years ago." I am astonished that such a book should come from a Christian minister like Eggleston, and more astonished that such papers as the above should lend their influence to help its circulation.

The book, in short, is simple blasphemy. And the man who wrote it, and the men who so cheerfully give it their influence will, ere long, find out that the end of this world and the coming and Kingdom of our Lord Jesus Christ is not a novel, but a grand and glorious reality, full of terror to the "scoffer," but full of joy and gladness to those who "wait for their Lord." Heaven help us to be among the latter class.

"If a Man Die Shall He Live Again?"

VIRGIL HUNT.

Perhaps there is no question of more vital importance than the above, and especially to the children of God. How important that we should know that we shall live beyond the dark grave. Truly has the good Apostle Paul said: "If in this life only we have hope of all men, we are most miserable." Of course, Paul was a "Soul Sleeper," or, in other words, he did not expect to soar to heaven when his body died, because there would have been no sense in saying, "In this life only," for if this life is an immortal life it is an eternal one. Hence there could be no end of the present life. And, consequently, no other life but the one we now live. Again says Paul: "If there be no resurrection, then all they which have fallen asleep (died) in Christ are perished." But, says Paul, "for since by man came death, by man came also the resurrection of the dead. For as in Adam all die, even so in Christ shall all be made alive. (See 1 Cor. 15.) Yes, we have blessed hope of living again in the future. Let us be faithful "unto death."

The Christian Life.

BY MRS. MARY PAYNE.

Who bids, who bids, for this little white soul,
  The soul of my darling child?
The World, the Flesh and the Devil uprise;
  Their eyes are eager and wild.

I bid," said the World, "riches and show;
  For these man toils like a slave;
In the end a white marble shaft shall uprise,
  And gleam in the sun o'er the grave."

I," said the Flesh, "bid every delight
  That gratified Passion can give.
The present is thine; take thine ease, O soul!
  I bid thee right merrily live."

The Devil cried out: "I bid these—yea more,
  Ambition and marvelous power.
We three are one firm, and I am the head;
  Soul, thou art mine from this hour."

A low voice rose on the poisoned air,
  From one with a thorn scarred brow:
"I give my life for this little soul,
  And bid for it even now.

"I give pardon from sin and peace within—
  A gem-wreathed cross and a crown;
Love for hate, and strength to the end,
  My smile for the cold world's frown.

"A glorified form and unknown joys,
  Eternal life and victor's song;
Heaven shall ring with anthems of praise,
Sung by the blood-washed throng.

The Lord Jesus Christ shall have my dove;
  Here, take and make it thine own;
Bought with a price God only can pay,
  Made heir to a crown and throne.

The Beautiful.

Place a young girl under the care of a kind-hearted, graceful woman, and she unconciously to herself grows into a graceful lady. Place a boy in the establishment of a thorough-going, forward business man and the boy becomes a self-reliant, practical, business man. Children are susceptible creatures, and circumstances, and scenes, and actions always impress. Teach your children to love the beautiful. If you are able, give them a corner in the garden for flowers; allow them to have their favorite trees; teach them to wander in the prettiest woodlets; show them where they can best view the sunset; rouse them in the morning, not with the stern "Time to work," but with the enthusiastic "See the beautiful sunrise!" Buy for them beautiful pictures, and encourage them to decorate their room in his or her childish way. Give them an inch and they will go a mile. Allow them the privilege and they will make your home pleasant and beautiful.

Casting All Your Cares On Him.

Rev. Mr. T—— felt deeply the necessity of consultation with a man residing in another State. So urgent was the case, that after committing his need to his Heavenly Father, he took the train for Boston, praying still, while journeying, for success in his mission.

He could not spend more than three or four hours' time in his effort to see Mr. D——, who, he knew, usually spent his summer months in the country.

On reaching Boston he immediately went to the store of a friend, for the purpose of securing advice in regard to the steps to pursue to secure the interview desired.

While these friends were consulting, Mr. D—— entered the store, and the object of the journey of more than one hundred miles was secured.

In reply to inquiry, Mr. D——stated, "I have not been in this store before for a year; but I felt constrained to come just at this time, though I cannot give a definite reason for it." When the facts were told, the three friends saw clearly the interest which the Lord feels in his children's work for Him, and His readiness to bless them in their supplications and their labors.—Christian Banner.

HE who rejoices in God shall never be confounded or ashamed world without end. It is an abiding joy. If I rejoice in the sun, it sets; if in the earth, it shall be burnt; if in myself, I shall die; but to triumph in One who never fails and never changes, but lasts forever—this is a lasting joy.—Spurgeon.

MEN may judge us by the success of our efforts; God looks at the efforts themselves.

NEW SOCIETY.

The requirements of the Association having been complied with, and the Lease signed by seven out of the nine Trustees, THE WESTERN ADVENT CHRISTIAN PUBLISHING SOCIETY enters now into possession of the property belonging to the W. A. C. P. Association, and will—with this number—enter upon its mission of continuing the publication of Bible Truth.

Whether its work will be long or short—successful or unsuccessful—depends entirely upon the interest taken by the Advent people, into whose hands the entire publishing interest of the West has been consigned. A careful perusal of the Lease will enable you to understand the obligations you have assumed, and what is required at your hands. A. W. T.

THIS INDENTURE, made the eleventh day of June, A. D. 1873, by and between D. Mathewson, Daniel R. Mansfield, John M. Snook, A. W. Tucker, S. C. Raymond, L. C. Collins, A. S. Calkins and L. H. Davis, as Trustees of the Western Advent Christian Publishing Association, and for and on behalf of said Association, party of the first part, and D. Mathewson, L. C. Collins, F. Burr, A. W. Tucker, S. C. Raymond, George Howard, A. S. Calkins and John M. Snook, Trustees of the Western Advent Christian Publishing Society, and for and on behalf of said Society, party of the second part, WITNESSETH, that the said party of the first part, for and in considerations hereinafter mentioned, to be done and performed by the party of the second part, and in further consideration of the sum of one dollar, the receipt of which is hereby acknowledged, hath granted, demised and leased unto the said party of the second part, all and singular the goods and chattels, property of every description, belonging or in any wise appertaining to said party of the first part. Consisting of printing presses, type and printing material, stereotyped plates, engine and boiler, books, paper, pamphlets, tracts, etc., etc., together with the leasehold interest of the party of the first part in and to the premises now occupied by said first party; situate and being in the Town of Norwood Park, County of Cook and State of Illinois; to have and to hold the same unto the said Western Advent Christian Publishing Society and its assigns, for and during, and until the full end and term of ninety-nine (99) years from and after the date hereof.

It is expressly understood and agreed, by and between the parties hereto, that this lease is made on the following conditions, viz: That, whereas, the said party of the first part is now, and has for a considerable time past, been engaged in carrying on a printing and publishing business at Norwood Park aforesaid, in conformity with the objects for which it was organized; and, whereas, the said party of the second part has been organized the more fully and perfectly to carry out the same objects, and this lease is made to enable it to take the place of the said party of the first part in carrying on said printing and publishing business at Norwood Park aforesaid. And the said party of the first part, in the prosecution of its said business, has contracted certain indebtedness which is still unpaid; said party of the second part therefore assumes and agrees to pay and discharge all the legal liabilities of the party of the first part, and to hold the property herein leased, subject to said liabilities as fully and completely as the same would have been had this lease never been made; and that during the continuance of this lease the said property may be taken in execution to satisfy any judgment or decree of any court, which may be obtained against the said party of the first part, by any of its creditors, on account of any indebtedness incurred prior to the date hereof, anything herein contained to the contrary notwithstanding. And the said party of the second part covenants and agrees that the said property shall be used by it and its assigns for the purpose of carrying out the objects for which it has been organized, according to its constitution and by laws.

In witness whereof, we have hereunto set our hands and seals, the day and year first above written.

NOTE.—George Howard and E. McCulloch, will sign the lease as soon as it is forwarded to them.

Ho! To The Rescue.

We speak to all. Do not fail to give attention. Our debt ought to be paid at once. We mean more than this—it MUST be paid, and paid soon. And still more, it can be paid with ease when every one wakes up to the idea that it is our business indiv[illegible]y. We mean you—don't think this means only that brother who, you think, might help just as well as not; but we mean you, and YOU. We ask not your overplus, but ask you to make a sacrifice—one that you will feel, and one that will make the Society feel too—feel that you are Christians in reality.

At our recent Chicago meeting a plan was devised for general and immediate action. Please read the statement given by the secretary of the meeting in this page. Also read the following note from Br. Mann, and then prepare for action at once:

WHAT IS YOUR EXCUSE?

Of course there is not a reader of THE TIMES but would greatly rejoice to see the debt of the association counted "among the things that were"; yet how, when, and by whom shall it be done? Certainly there are enough who are abundantly able to lift a much greater burden and scarcely feel the effort. But here we find ourselves at the very start making excuses. And that is just the trouble with us as a people to-day. We all understand our duty and how to perform it; but we "all with one accord begin to make excuses."

Now the debt must be paid, and not only that, but there must be a fund on hand to put publications into new fields. The calls are numerous and constant, and must be heeded; our laborers are few, and they rely greatly on books and tracts to assist them in introducing the truth. My dear reader, just look over the letters published from week to week—they alone should stir us into immediate and united action. But we are daily becoming more vain and worldly—our love for the gospel of salvation in all its purity is waxing cold—some almost leasing their time, energies, money and affections—their all—to mammon!

We are all too apt to underrate our duty and responsibilities, especially when called upon to aid in a practical way the spread of the gospel of life, the plan by and through which we expect to be saved in that great and terrible day. We try hard to see how cheaply we can get into the New Jerusalem, some even trying to dead head the entire journey; but I fear many will hardly get a glimpse of the beauty and grandeur of the pearly gates even.

The meeting of the officers and friends of society called in the last issue will doubtless devise some feasible plan by which this desirable end may be reached, and then—immediately—let us ALL take hold and DO something. As we love the truth which made us free, and let light shine across our path of darkness, let us for once do our whole sacrificial duty. In the service of the Lord a duty which requires no effort or sacrifice has but little weight.

If we are what we profess—the Lord's servants—all that we have is the Lord's, and all that we do must be done to the glory of the Father. His cause is not only needy, but suffering, many thirsting and hungering, many groping their way through utter darkness, trying to find the light, and we will not—but we must.

As we hope to meet in the renewed earth, which shall be filled with the glory of the Lord, let every one come manfully up to the demands of the hour, remembering the Lord loveth a cheerful giver, and God will bless us.

Yours in hope. L. MANN.

Well, so much for talk, and now for action—prompt action, strong action, and general action. Br. Mann has acted as well as spoken. Send in what money you can at once, with a pledge to help so many dollars on or before Jan. 1, 1874, on conditions others sign enough to blot out the entire debt by that time. Many will nobly lift when it can be understood that by so doing the entire debt shall surely be all wiped out by their help, or that their pledges shall not be paid. We now move to make an entire end of this matter, and must have your assurance that you will help us if others will do the same. Let us hear from you by the next mail if possible. Direct to the business agent.

In sending in your pledge to be paid at the designated time, remember that before that time arrives, we need something to meet a few immediate demands.

Chicago Meeting.

A meeting convened in Chicago, July 17, in pursuance to a call issued in THE TIMES, to take into consideration the matter of the indebtedness of our Publishing Association, at which D. Mathewson was chosen president, and L. C. Collins, secretary. After much deliberation the following resolutions were unanimously passed.

1. Resolved: That A. W. Tucker be authorized to obtain funds by loan or otherwise, sufficient to meet the present pressing demands of the Association.

2. Resolved: That a call be made by the Board to the friends of the Association for pledges donating funds to meet the entire indebtedness of the Association, these pledges being made payable Jan. 1, 1874; but not to be binding unless the sums pledged be sufficient to meet the entire indebtedness of the Association.

BRO. L. C. MCKINSTRY's recent poem, entitled "The Burning," can be obtained at 35 cents per copy, or four copies for $1.00, by addressing the author at Lake Village, N. H.

LET it be distinctly understood by all our subscribers that it is no part of the Editor's work to look after the mailing of THE TIMES, changing the papers of subscribers, stopping or renewing subscriptions. Such matter should be sent to the Business Agent; but all articles and letters for THE TIMES should be sent directly to the editor. If in some cases it is more convenient to send to the Editor and Business Agent in the same envelope, be sure to have the matter on two separate pieces of paper.

AN exchange so nearly expresses our mind on news from the churches that we insert it, hoping that we shall often hear from our readers. Give us your thoughts without needless preliminaries:

"We always welcome news from the Churches. Nothing of this character is ever rejected. We sometimes abridge, in order to make room for more. We do not use such introductions as 'Permit me to say through your excellent paper,' 'Thinking that something from our beloved Zion,' etc., and other such unnecessary and uninteresting sentences. Just where a writer begins with news, facts, suggestions, or any helpful writing, he gets into type. The people have not time for tedious preliminaries. No correspondent should introduce an article by an apology. He has a right to speak in the Church paper, and it is his duty to get rid of useless verbiage, and retain only essential and edifying facts. Brethren, help us to compact as much solid thought into these columns as they can hold. We sometimes erase sentences and even paragraphs which are directly or indirectly fault-finding, or fulsome of compliment, or expressive of thanks, which should be local and private. And we do this for our readers' sake, and for general good will among the Churches.

Torment.

In Prof. Murdoch's Peshito translation of the Syriac Testament, Matt. 25:46, is rendered, "These shall go into everlasting torment," instead of "punishment," which is the rendering in King James' Bible. Will you be so kind as to explain through THE TIMES which is most in harmony with the original. Yours in that blessed hope,

C. C. MARSTON.

Murdoch's translation may be an accurate rendering of the original Syriac, which was translated from the Greek after the dogma of endless torment was introduced into the church. But this idea of torment is not found in the Greek text, but just the reverse—a cutting off from the eternal life to be given to the righteous. One class only will have eternal life, while the other class will be eternally cut off from it.

Pre-existence.

Please explain, through THE TIMES, the 5th verse of the 17th chapter of John, "And now, O Father, glorify thou me with thine own self, with the glory which I had with thee before the world was." What does this mean if not the pre existence of Christ, or that he was before he came in the flesh?

We think the statement is clear without an explanation. We see but one way to evade the conclusion that Christ had a real existence with the Father before the creation of our globe, for the "Kosmos was made by him." (John 1:10.) We have carefully looked at the arguments adduced in opposition to the doctrine of the pre-existence of Christ, but they fail to convince us.

Queries.

Information is wanted on Matt. 12: 31, 32. What do you understand to be sinning againt the Holy Ghost?

Again, (Matt. 16: 27) Man is rewarded according to his works. Will there be different degrees of happiness to be enjoyed in the promised Land?

J. W. BURRITT.

1. It is evident from the connection that wilfully attributing the miracles wrought through the agency of the Holy Spirit to the spirit of the devil, as the Jews had just been doing, was recognized as an unpardonable sin—a sin against the Holy Spirit, not to be forgiven either in the Mosaic age, or in the age to succeed it, in which we are now living.

2. No doubt there will be different degrees in future happiness, corresponding with the different capacities for enjoyment; but every [illegible] be full, whether small or large. The joy of some is set forth under the parabolic figure of having authority over five cities—that is, some will have greater honor conferred upon them than others, for greater faithfulness here.

Sleep.

How are we to harmonize Jeremiah 51:39-57, with Daniel 12:2, and John 5:28, 29? Please answer through THE TIMES. A. A. DAVIS.

The texts referred to read thus: "In their heart I will make their feasts, and I will make them drunken, that they may rejoice, and sleep a perpetual sleep, and not wake, saith the Lord. ....And I will make drunk her princes, and her wise men, her captains, and her rulers, and her mighty men; and they shall sleep a perpetual sleep and not wake."

"And many of them that sleep in the dust of the earth shall awake, some to everlasting life, and some to shame and everlasting contempt."

"For the hour is coming in the which all that are in the graves shall hear his voice, and shall come forth; they that have done good unto the resurrection of life; and they that have done evil, unto the resurrection of damnation."

When properly understood, these texts cannot conflict with each other. Jeremiah doubtless alludes to the drunken scene attending their feasts, when many slept never to awake, being put to death while in this state; but Daniel and Jesus refer, not to ordinary sleep, but to the sleep of death, from which all men shall awaken to receive judgment, whether good or bad.

Two Extremes.

While it is apparent to one class that there is a great scarcity of experimental godliness in the land, the conclusion is that we ought to cease preaching doctrine entirely, and simply contend for the vitalizing power of God.

While it is apparent to another class that the land is submerged with God-dishonoring errors, the conclusion is reached that our work is simply that of a theological warfare.

Acting on these two principles, we hear one class persistently denouncing doctrinal preaching, as though it were a detriment to Christianity; and the other class, in retaliation, cry out against the proclamation of holiness as being subversive of the dispensational truth committed to our trust. And thus truth and holiness are made to face each other in hostile attitude—not because they are really out of harmony with each other, but because they are made respectively to monopolize the entire ground. Experimental religion cannot be over estimated, nor can the truth of God be belittled; but both can be possessed by the same class at the same time; and the truth will more easily win its way if accompanied with experimental religion; and true religion will flourish better if enlightened by the truth. Let both go together in our lives, and in our preaching.

National Camp Meeting.

Our National Camp Meeting will be held at Springfield, Mass., beginning August 22, bids fair to be a meeting of more than ordinary interest, provided all who attend will consent to move in the current of the meeting, instead of making new a channel. Order should characterize every camp meeting. As "two many cooks spoil the broth," so too many heads to a camp meeting distract the body and work ruin. It sometimes happens that a class of restless spirits who have "an ax to grind" attempt to run a camp meeting in their own interest, and thus diminish the general interest. Such fault-finders, and egotistic persons better learn a lesson in humility and self-abasement before coming to camp. Come to work in harmony with the meeting, without any detracting side show—come to help and not hinder—or stay at home till cured of your thirst for notoriety or novelty.

Others simply come on a visit, to have a good social chat with numerous old friends; and if this visiting mania predominates, the meeting proves a comparative failure. Often the two evils named operate against the same meeting. May all who go to Springfield shun these two distracting elements, and as one man, enter the work of the Lord.

The Judgment.

"It is appointed unto man once to die, but after this the judgment." (Heb. 9: 27.) "And I saw the dead, small and great, stand before God; and the books were opened; and another book was opened, which is the Book of Life; and the dead were judged out of those which were written in the books.... And whosoever was not found written in the Book of Life was cast into the lake of fire." (Rev. 20: 12, 15.)

The statements clearly indicate, first, that the reign of death must end before the execution of judgment is due, thus negating the assumption that men may be judged in an intermediate state; and second, that damnation, or a condemnation to the lake of fire is the result of the judgment for all who are not found registered in the Book of Life; and as this judgment is not to be revoked, there can be no chance for a new probation after the resurrection. "At that time thy people shall be delivered, every one that shall be found written in the book." (Dan. 12: 1.) Those who are found written in the book will not need a probation, for "every one" of them will be "delivered;" and "whosoever" is not found written there will be consigned to the lake of fire, so there will be no class left to enjoy a new probation. All of the written ones will be delivered and all of the unwritten ones will experience the second death in the lake of fire.

How to Rebuke.

Said Paul: "Reprove, rebuke, exhort with all long suffering." It is possible to do a right thing in a wrong spirit; and this is often the case in dealing with the erring. Then we repel them, instead of winning them. The Rev.

MacDuff, of Scotland, thus speaks is matter:

'low many have an unholy pleasure ding a brother in the wrong—ng abroad his failings, adminis g rebuke not in gentle forbearance kindly expostulation, but with and impatient severity? How tifully did Jesus unite intense sen ty to sin along with tenderest com on for the sinner! showing in this "He knoweth our frame." Experimental Religion.

ile it is true that practical reli s a prerequisite to salvation, it is e that practical religion alone ve men; for often practical reli xists independent of experimental n, being only a result of the ple of morality, which leads men in from crime, simply because rohibited, and to do good deeds because they are required; and s can be done by unregenerated While this principle is not to be valued, there is another principle, greater value, which produces cal religion, or leads to a system d works; we mean experimental n, or a heart full of perfect love, peace, and heavenly joy, shed l by the Holy Spirit. This kind of religion will fill the heart with a relish to perform all that God requires at our hand; not on the principle of action to please one whom we ardently love; and no person can knowingly displease one for whom they have deep affection. Good works arising from this principle will commend us to God, just as in the case of Abraham, who was led by it to offer up his darling son. "Was not Abraham our father justified by works, when he had offered Isaac his son upon the altar?" (James 2: 21.) Here works, resulting from the principle of love, are said to justify; while elsewhere, in alluding to works which are merely the fruit of morality, we are told that we cannot be justified be works; that is, by works alone. Abraham was drawn by the cords of divine love to obey God, mingled with a trusting faith; and works springing from this principle commend us to God; but when men are simply driven by the legal whip to obey, they are doing works that can never bring justification. Divine love, which involves faith that trusts God, must be the mainspring of practical religion, or that religion is worthless; in other words, practical religion must be the fruit of experimental religion, instead of being the fruit of morality, in order to be the genuine article.

And there are different stages of experimental religion. While it is possible for us to "grow in grace;" to advance from the stage where we are recognized as "babes," to men and women in Christ; we leave "the first principles," and "go on unto perfection," as the scholar leaves the lower branches for higher attainments; and this advance can be made in an experimental as well as the theological department of religion. Let us not be content with the shallow waters, but plunge into the deep ocean of perfect love.

Reason in Religion.

J. H. P.

Man has always been of an investigating turn of mind, and many men of great reasoning faculties have advanced far in the knowledge of the various sciences, and are still moving onward, but yet there always have been and probable always will be many subjects far above human comprehension, so much so that man's highest attainments, compared with the truth of God, are but foolishness. This is equally true of what we call nature and revelation; yet we find a class of men who accepting nature, reject revelation, assuming that reason is a sufficient guide. There are however many ideas in the Bible which are almost universally admitted to be true which it would be impossible for reason to suggest, as no man can reason from nothing to something. Reason must have facts from which to work. We might remark that even if these Bible ideas were suggested by the human mind, and if it be true that reason is a sufficient guide, that would prove the Bible true. If the Bible account is untrue, the existence of God, the existence of man and all other dependent beings, why they exist, involving the question of future life and immortality are all wrapt in the most impenetrable and gloomy darkness. And yet even infidels generally admit the futurity of man, while they reject the only light they have or can have on the subject.

Another and large class who exalt reason to a supreme place, and yet have a habit of [illegible] well of the Bible, calli[illegible] believers, and even flattering themselves that they are Christians, are found denying some of the main truths of the Christian's faith and hope, under the plea that they are not reasonable, as much as to say: Because I cannot understand how God can do these things, therefore he cannot do them.

1. They will deny the forgiveness of sin assuming that all sin must be punished, though God has said that on certain expressed conditions he will forgive, remove, cover, pardon, justify, and has said, Come now and let us reason together; though your sins be as scarlet they shall be as white as snow; though they be red like crimson, they shall be as wool. (Is. 1: 18.)

Sin which is pardoned cannot be punished, and if sin is punished it cannot be pardoned, and yet the class of teachers above referred to talk glibly about salvation and a Savior, as if they had not actually taken a position which if true, destroys the possibility of salvation; for when a man pays his own debt, it cannot be said that he has been saved by another. We understand that there is a sense in which Christ saves the believer aside from that of pardon, and that is by purifying him and setting him apart to new service. Saving thus from sin in the sense of preventing him from doing wrong, but if this were the only element of salvation the terms 'condemnation' and 'pardon' would not be needed in the Word.

This skepticism, we think, arises from a misapprehension of the government of God, of the nature of the penalty of sin, and of the nature of the atonememt of Christ; and it virtually ignores the entire work of Christ as a Savior in the various offices of Priest, Sacrifice and Advocate.

It ignores, too, what we think is a well sustained fact, that sin, while it has or may have ten thousand consequences, none of which are necessarily averted by pardon, it has but one penalty, death, the second death, so far as pertains to the penalty of our sins if we remain unpardoned, and this penalty is invariably removed by pardon, and from the very nature of the case the result to each person so forgiven will be eternal life.

2. They deny the possibility of the resurrection of the dead, or living again, not realizing that such a reviving stands internally related to and dependent on the atonement of Jesus by his resurrection from the dead; and seeming to forget that Christ has emphatically declared that, "The hour is coming in the which all that are in their graves shall hear his voice and shall come forth," etc. "Unreasonable," is the plea, but we venture to suggest that they all believe what is far more out of harmony with the facts, viz: that a man may be alive and dead at the same time. "But why should it be thought a thing incredible that God should raise the dead," (Acts 26: 8,) when Christ has risen, and has the keys of death and hades, living in his own person, "abolished death and brought life and immortality to light through the gospel." (2 Tim. 1: 10.)

This doubt, too, evidently arises from the same misapprehension of the penalty of sin and of a coextensive mistake about man having dual personality, not satisfied with a compound nature, or nature with various elements, which is quite admissible. Because of such ideas men lose sight of the importance of the resurrection in order to reward or punishment, and for the same reason do not see that as redemption recovers the sinner, the sinner—the responsible person—must be in the dominion of death else he could not be redeemed.

If we would allow our reason free use with the revealed facts before us, there would be less difficulty, but if men will give supremacy to reason, while ignoring the facts underlying the Christian's hope of a future life by the resurrection, it is with them as Christ said to the Sadducees, "Ye do greatly err, because ye know not the Scriptures, neither the power of God," and consequently they must continue in darkness in reference to the way by which God will restore his people to their home.

We think it is perfectly reasonable that he who could create could raise the dead. And though we cannot know how God can preserve and raise them to life again, it seems reasonable that he who has preserved personal identity through the many and great changes during the present life, can and will accomplish the promised deliverance from the grave.

There are other subjects which man in his ignorance and pride has declared unanswerable. Among these are the deluge by water in the past, the deluge by fire in future, the second coming of Christ at the end of this age to take the throne of David. The restitution and the inheritance of the saints in the earth renewed.

All sorts of flimsy objections are brought agains these revealed facts. But the great trouble, in short with man's reasoning, is that he does not and cannot know all the facts in the [illegible].

We give it as our conviction, that the province of reason in the subject of religion is not to suggest what is or is not possible for God to do or what God should or should not reveal, but to weigh or prove whatever man may suggest or teach, by the law and the testimony to see whether or not such teaching is in harmony with the Word of God.

A Good Hit.

C. C. M.

In many cases no argument is so effectual as sarcasm. The following on fashion, it appears to me is without parallel:

This is Edward Hale's story: A man had sold himself to the Devil, who was to possess him at a certain time unless he could propound a question to his satanic majesty which he could not answer, he being allowed to put three queries to him. The time came for the Devil to claim his own, and he consequently appeared. The first question the man asked was concerning theology, to which it caused the Devil no trouble to reply. The second he also answered without hesitation. The man's fate depended on the third. What should it be?

He hesitated and turned pale, and the cold dew stood on his forehead, while he shivered with anxiety, nervousness, and terror, while the Devil triumphantly sneered. At this juncture the man's wife appeared in the room with a bonnet on her head. Alarmed at her husband's condition, she laughed and said, "I can propound a question which the Devil himself cannot answer. Ask him which is the front of this bonnet?" The Devil gave it up and retired in disgust, and the man was free.

A word to the wise is sufficient.

"WHERE do you find a place to pray in?" was asked of a pious sailor on board a whaling ship. "Oh," he said, "I can always find a quiet spot at the mast head."

"Sam, do you find a spot for secret prayer?" asked a minister of a stable boy. "Oh yes, sir; that old coach is my closet, and it is the best spot on earth." Where there is a heart to pray, it is easy enough to find a place.

Miscellaneous.

AT HOME.

—The cholera seems to be on the decrease.

—Baltimore has suffered from a disasterous conflagration. About one hundred buildings were destroyed mostly dwellings. An unusually large number of fires have occurred in different parts of the country during the past week.

—The Rock Island railway train was thrown from the track this week by a band of desperadoes, the engineer killed and the express car robbed of money to the amount of $2,337. The ruffians have not yet been captured, but reports from those in pursuit of them say that the robbers were near Pattenburg, Mo., on Wednesday, going south. A dispatch from St. Joseph, Mo., July 25th, says that the five men were seen in Worth county, Mo., on yesterday morning. Their horses were tired out, and they tried to trade them off for fresh ones, but could not. A posse of officers left St. Joseph this morning to get below them. Men are following them up from the north and west. They have got demoralized having been defeated in their efforts to reach Mercer county. It is now positively known that one of the horses rode by them was here at the races last summer, that he came from Missouri and was ruled off the course as a professional racer. A full and complete description of all the men and horses has been obtained from the farm house where they have stopped on their way.

NORWOOD PARK.

But few, if any, of our suburbs have made more substantial improvements of late than Norwood Park. This place, although only laid out some three years ago, has already taken a front rank among our most attractive and flourishing suburbs. Its location is admirable in every respect. Not only is it within easy reach of the city, but the village, which embraces 800 acres, is located on, it is claimed, the highest ground between Lake Michigan and the Mississippi river, anywhere on the line of the Wisconsin Division of the North[illegible] Railway. The village was laid out in w[illegible] called the "park style," and there are several public parks within its limits, with an artesian well near by, besides numerous beautiful private grounds, with shade trees, shrubbery, ponds, fountains, rustic bridges and other attractions. The streets are 100 feet wide, the lots ranging in depth from 165 to 200 feet. The place has already several churches, and more in prospect. The American Reform Church, Rev. Mr. Gulick, pastor, is a hadsome, substantial edifice, which cost $5,000. The Baptist Church is also a creditable structure, as yet not entirely completed, and will cost $7,000. The Methodists have purchased a lot and contracted for the erection of a suitable house of worship. Near the depot is a large printing office, and with steam power for running the presses. The establishment is owned by a stock company, and a weekly newspaper, THE ADVENT CHRISTIAN TIMES, is issued from this office. The dwellings at Norwood Park are neat and substantial; some of them truly elegant, and nearly all, whether large or small, are surrounded with trees, walks, shrubbery, and all the essentials of a cheerful country home. During the year property at this place has nearly doubled in value, and many of the substantial business men of Chicago have established their permanent residences at this favored spot. The residents of the village now number about 700, nearly the entire adult population doing business in the city. There is one store in the village, and it is expected that another will be opened soon. The facilities for getting to and from the city are good, the trains running so as to fully accommodate parties who reside at the Park and do business in the city. The fare is $68 a year, giving ticket holders the privilege of riding on any and all trains as they may see fit. Commutation tickets, for families or individuals, can also be had, reducing the regular fare to thirteen cents a ride. With all these natural and acquired advantages—and many others that our space does not permit us to notice at present—it is not strange that Norwood Park is growing so rapidly as it is, nor is there any risk in predicting for it a prosperous and brilliant future. Thus far it has been settled by an excellent class of citizens, and before the close of the present season many others will "pitch their tent" within the limits of this delightful suburb. —Chicago Journal.

ABROAD.

—A correspondent writing about the recent earthquake in the north of Italy, says: "The effects of the earthquake at the village of St. Pi do Felloto were terrible. It was the fete of St. Peter, the patron saint of the place. The church was gaily decorated and was crowded with worshipers, when, without a moment's warning, an undulation swept beneath the village and down came the roof and the walls of the church, burying its living contents. Those nearest to the door were able to escape, but of the remainder thirty-eight were killed on the spot—eighteen men and twenty women—and a great many were seriously hurt. The priest officiating had his arm broken. Two others, assisting, escaped. The entire village was one scene of fallen and falling houses.

—A correspondent of the WORLD, under date of Berlin, June 29, makes public a most remarkable conversation with Prince Bismarck, in which the prince, after giving expression to his weariness of spirit, is made to say: "The truth is, there are not half a dozen men in Germany on our side. I mean those who clearly comprehend the real meaning of the conflict in which we are engaged, and in which, notwithstanding our success thus far, I now believe we shall be beaten. The Emperor does not understand it, and if he did he would change sides in a moment. The Crown Prince, perhaps, does understand it, but he will put himself on the other side, if, indeed, he is not already there. The fight is the Empire against the Church. It is a fight of the State, Empire, Monarchy or Republic against God, and in this fight the State will get the worst of it, unless it succeeds in destroying the idea of a God and placing itself in his place. Men say that they must have something to worship. Well, then, let them worship the State; let it be all in all; let it take the place of the family as well as of the Deity; let it be the Deity. In two generations, if we had the field wholly to ourselves, we could so obliterate the idea of God, and of imaginary rights bestowed on men by him as their Creator, that the substitution of the State in his place would be effected, and the State, as in Pagan Rome, be all in all."

The correspondent, giving, in his own language, the spirit of the continued conversation with Bismarck, says that the seminal idea of the whole was that the aspiration for liberty grew out of a belief in God; that it would be impossible to make a perfectly subservient people out of men imbued with dogmas of Christianity, and that, while all forms of Christianity were alike fallacious, he cared to war against none but the Roman Catholic Church, for the reason that it alone was formidable. He said: "Nothing has amused me more than the praises which I have received from the Protestant Christians of England and America. I have wished to crush Rome that I might crush Christianity. They praise me for my services in the cause of what they call 'reformed Christianity.' If anything could console me for the chagrin which I foresee I am to endure for some time to come it would be to witness the amazement of those good friends of mine when they understand the truth. But understand it they never will.

District Camp Meeting No. 2.

This meeting was held at Sparta, in a beautiful grove about half a mile north of the town, and one mile and a quarter from the depot, commencing on the evening of June 24, and I would say that the brethren and sisters in Sparta are worthy of commendation for their promptness in getting all things ready the first day. It was 4 o'clock before I reached the place with the tent, yet all being in readiness the tent was hoisted, seated and lighted, ready for use the same evening. All the straw and hay needed was on the ground, and more lumber than was used. Three tents were up, and a drive well was provided only sixteen feet from the curtains of the big tent. The congregation was good from the beginning, and increased to its close. Eleven confessed Christ (mostly cold ones), three were baptized, and a cloud of prejudice was removed. Those present, and a good number of others, voted to have another camp meeting on the same ground, to commence September 2, and hold over Sunday. God grant that it may be crowned with far richer blessings.

Br. John Palmer remarked that he had seen more tears shed, both from joy or godly sorrow than he had seen in two years before. To God be all the glory. Amen.

Never, in all my Christian experience, did I enjoy or was so much benefitted by Christian sympathy (true Christian sympathy), as at this meeting. We had expected help from some of our able ministers, but we were disappointed; those we expected did not come, and with the exception of one discourse from Br. Stanley, of West Salem, and one from Eld. Wilcox, we had to do all the preaching, except what our brethren and sisters did, and they did their part nobly. The reasons for the non attendance of our preaching brethren were satisfactory, but why it should so happen was only known to God, perhaps to teach us to cease from man and trust in the great head of the church, who has said: "Not by might nor by power, but by my Spirit saith the Lord."

I fear we sometimes err in not being willing to make an effort to save the perishing ones around us, because we cannot have the silver trumpet. If we can get better, well; but, if not, let us wake out of sleep and put side and shoulder to the wheel, trusting in God and believing in the promised help. Faith in God has stopped the mouth of lions, quenched the violence of fire, and wrought out righteousness. Let us, then, labor worthy this noble cause, and we shall yet pull some out of the fire. No one at that meeting felt the disappointment more than myself. I knew the public expected some new gift, and we all feared the meeting would run down, but God ordered it otherwise and to him be all the glory.

I will here state a fact for the benefit of others. I am now sixty eight years of age. At that meeting I had to talk some to all my friends, preach twice a day, and on Sunday three times, baptized three, wrote four letters, attended the supper, and then formed a Christian circle to give the parting hand, and yet on Monday I felt fresh. I cannot but believe my two meals a day, and what I eat, has helped me some. P. W. HOUGH.

A. C. Conference Report

OF NORTHERN INDIANA AND WESTERN MICH.

The Northern Indiana and Western Michigan Conference met June 12, pursuant to call advertised in the A. C. TIMES. After several discourses, preached by Brs. Jas. Ferris, A. N. Seymour and D. Mathewson, the conference was called to order, D. Mathewson in the chair.

On motion of Br. Jas. Ferris, a committee of three, composed of Brs. Doolittle, of Marsellus, Mich.; Tillman Linard, of Union Mills, Ind., and Cordry, of Lakeville, Ind., were chosen to nominate officers for the ensuing year. The committee reported Eld. James Ferris for Chairman, and the writer for Secretary. On motion of Br. Doolittle they were unanimously chosen by the conference.

Eld. James Ferris in the chair. Number of preaching brethren present, three—Brs. D. Mathewson and Jas. Ferris, of Buchanan, Mich., and A. N. Seymour, of Reading, Mich. A request was made by Br. Henry Lewis, deacon of the Porter Centre Church, that that church be admitted to the conference.

On motion of Br. Doolittle, said church was accepted by the conference.

Number of Churches represented, five: Porter Centre, 2; Marcellus, 5; Buchanan, 4; Berrien, 2; Union Mills, 10. The churches were reported in good condition, spiritually.

On motion of Eld. Mathewson the conference adjourned, to meet at the call of the chairman.

On Sabbath morning, at nine o'clock, the brethren and sisters met in a love feast. Twenty-six spoke of their precious faith. We were much cheered by their united testimonies; some spoke of their long pilgrimage journeyings in the ways of the Lord, of the many trials they had to endure, and how their hearts were made to rejoice at the thought of the soon coming of their King to deliver them. How precious were the promises of Our Heavenly father to his obedient children; whilst others, that were of more recent conversion, spoke of their love of the truth. Indeed, all felt that it was good to be there; that it was a precious season, long to be remembered by those that were present. At 10 A. M. we listened to a very interesting discourse from Eld. A. N. Seymour, the text being "Go ye into all the world and preach the gospel," etc., showing that it was a definite gospel, and that a person must have faith in it, and must obey its requirements in order to be saved. In the afternoon we assembled to listen to a stirring discourse delivered by Eld. Mathewson, after which we partook of the emblems of our Lord's broken body and shed blood, which was participated in by fifty followers of our Lord, who did it in remembrance of his death, and to show by their actions their belief that he would soon come a second time, "without sin unto salvation," to "all those that love his appearing," at the close of which we took the parting hand, feeling sad to part with each other, but cheered with the hope of soon meeting around our Father's table in his kingdom, where there would be no more parting forever.

Brethren, let us watch unto prayer that that day may not come upon us unawares but watch like unto those who wait for their Lord. D. S. NAFE, Secretary.

JAS. FERRIS, Chairman.

Conference Report.

The Conference met at Jeffersonville and enjoyed a series of precious meetings from Thursday until the following Tuesday evening, when it closed mid the warm Christian greetings of brethren and sisters in Christ of like precious faith. The attendance was not quite so large as usual, owing to the warm weather, and the rumor abroad that the cholera had made its appearance there, and thus detering many from leaving their homes who had previously expected to be present. It was, however, a mistake, as the report of the city said "it was never in better health," Dr. C. H. Cass was present and exhibited his usual interest in the cause of truth, instructing the brethren from the sacred page with much acceptance. The necessary business was attended to, and two good brethren of Dr. Field's Church received license to preach the everlasting gospel to a perishing world. Brs. Davis and Chambers, who I trust will in the end come home to their Father's house with "many sheaves of rejoicing." The social meetings were truly interesting, many dear ones bearing testimony of their desire to work for Jesus, and of his love shed abroad in their hearts. Our venerable brother the pastor of the Church with the noble wife and daughter, are doing a great work not only in holding up the hands of the husband and the father but in their own individual labors put forth so heartily in the cause of the Master. And their comfortable pleasant home, is made the place of cordial welcome to the pilgrims of like precious faith in their labors and journey to the Celestial City. It was again my privilege to visit the prison on Lord's Day, and speak to hundreds of erring ones who are congregated there because of their violation of the laws of the land. The coming of our blessed Lord was presented before them as the antidote and perfect cure of all the sorrows and afflictions which sin has brought upon the human family. They listened with attention, and I trust with profit and remembrance of the many portions of God's holy word made to bear upon the subject. I cannot close this brief notice of my humble work among the prisoners without alluding, as I have already done in the past, to Col. F. S. Shuller, the noble and benevolent Warden in charge of the prison, I have not space here to present the tribute of merit which his Christian conduct deserves in his ministrations to the unhappy and fallen men and women under his care, suffice it to say that no case of sorrow and suffering is too small to escape his notice and kind attention. I should love to particularize that others might know as I do that the Southern Prison, of Indiana, has a manager that does not require the use of firearms in its offices, but the rule is one of love. The chaplain, also, is a worthy man, greatly beloved by the prisoners and looked up to by them with almost patriarchal reverence. May they long be continued in their noble work of usefulness and compassion. But the time came when Mr. Tibbets and myself must bid adieu to all the dear friends of Jeffersonville, and find our way home to again resume our humble labors in the Volga Church among the brethren and sisters we love so well. May all the Saints be gathered in one general conference in the New Jerusalem City of our God at the glorious coming of our Lord and Saviour Jesus, is the prayer of your sister in "the blessed hope."

MARY A. TIBBETS.

Volga, Ind., July 10, 1878.

From E. S. Burrill, Ashland, Mich.

We are having good meetings out here, and the cause is fast advancing. It makes me rejoice to see these blessed truths, that have been so long hidden, begin to shine so brightly all through the land. Let us take courage and so let our light shine that others may see our good works, and say there is a follower of Christ. If we take the Bible for our creed, Jesus for our example, and follow closely his footsteps, we shall have part in the first resurrection.

From Mrs. M. Brown, Berville, St. Clair Co., Mich.

I have often thought I would like to write a few lines for THE TIMES, but feeling my weakness I have neglected it. O, how my heart has been cheered while reading the many testimonials from the brothers and sisters, and when at times I feel almost discouraged, and then I take up my paper and read the good letters I am encouraged, and I thank God that my life has been spared; and my determinations are strong to see the inside of the city. I thank God my eyes were opened to see the truth, and had a heart to obey. I desire to gird on the whole armour and fight manfully the battle of the Lord. I know that we must fight if we are saved when Jesus comes.

My prayer is that God will bless and sustain those at the head of this great work. Brothers and sisters, may the Lord help us to realize this obligation more and more as we see the day approaching. May we be ready for that event and have on the robe of righteousness, and stand entire, wanting nothing.

From John Steel, New Britain, Conn.

Dear Brother Collins: It is with a sad heart I write you. I have had your blessed paper ever since it was started, and no one knows how I prize it. It is next to the Bible. In my affliction it has been a great comfort. I have lost my companion, but she was ready, thank God. I have been afflicted with rheumatism for over three years, some of the time almost helpless, unable to dress or undress myself, sometimes cannot even hold a pen. I cannot bear the thought of losing the paper, but am unable to pay for it. Have been months trying to save four dollars, which I will send you. Have lost my place and am dependent on my poor daughter for support. She has myself, herself, and a boy five years old to support by washing; therefore she cannot spare anything for the paper. Please say through the paper whether you receive this, and oblige your brother in Christ.

We received the money all safe, and hope our dear brother will pardon the liberty we have taken to publish this letter. We do it to show to others what some of God's children, poor in this world, but rich in faith, are willing to sacrifice for the truth. The reward will soon come. [ED. TIMES.

From Charlotte S. L, Sickendick, Iberia, Mo.

Friends of THE TIMES, coming in the vineyard to work at a late hour, I also hope to yet be able to receive the penny. Nearly forty years of my life is spent, but knowing that the doors of mercy are yet open, I have now resolved to lay hold on eternal life, my husband with me were both instructed in the Bible while young, but never could we make the Bible harmonize until we got hold of the Advent doctrine, now we can see the way clear. Christ being the way our leader and our life giver, we hope that he will lead us safely through this world of temptation and affliction into that better world, the New Jerusalem, the city from Heaven, where temptation and sorrow shall be unknown. There are, as yet, but few of us here that believe in the Advent doctrine, and we have great opposition, this neighborhood is all astir, but knowledge is increasing and the work is going on. Br. Elliott preaches to us, and labors with great energy, but his field of labor is very large, and he cannot supply all. We have no Church established yet, but think we will have next August, when we look for more laborers to come to work with us. I think that we live in very perilous times. May God stir up the heart of every true believer to be up and doing while it is yet called to-day, and to be ready to meet the Lord at his coming; may we ever be led by him and be found watching and waiting for him is my prayer.

From Mrs. Malcina Towsley.

Dear brother Wesley! We have been called upon to lay him away in the grave; cruel death has taken the only brother. Oh, how we miss his counsel, how lonely this life is. I often think of Martha and her sister, and think how gladly they went out to meet their Lord and tell him their sorrow; and how much faith they had. Hear Martha saying: "Lord, if thou hadst been here my brother had not died; but I know that even now, whatsoever thou wilt ask of God he will give give it thee." And we can come to him by faith, and he will never forsake us. Though our brother is dead, he will live again; and if we are faithful in the service of God, as he was, we shall meet him; for though he is dead, he is not destroyed, for "Jesus saith unto her, thy brother shall rise again." He says the same to us, for we are told, "those that are in the graves shall hear his voice and come forth." Oh, blessed hope. We will not complain, though the stroke is heavy; dear sisters, we shall meet our brother soon—not weeping for his wife that sleeps in Jesus, nor grieving for his three motherless children, not sick or lame, but all glorious, all joy, clothed with immortality, crowned with eternal life. There will be no more sorrow nor crying, neither will there be any more death, for God will wipe all tears from our eyes. We will refrain our voice from weeping, for he that is to come will come quickly. Then we would live faithfully looking for that blessed hope, and the appearing of our Lord Jesus, that we may with our brother and sister and all the redeemed, hear the welcome applause, "well done good and faithful servant, enter into the the joy of our Lord."

From Eld. W. B. Covey, Spavinaw, Benton Co., Ark.

I write these lines to inform you and the brethren and sisters of like precious faith, of our condition at this time, also to give them some of my views in reference to the speedy coming of our Redeemer. The most of our little church here came from the old Disciple church. I was baptized into that church in 1841, and served in the tabernacle until 1871, since which time I have borne the name of Christian Adventist, looking for the coming of a personal Jesus. The reason for my quitting the old church was because they would not put any confidence in the prophecies concerning the soon coming of Christ. A man that claims to be a Christian and will not hear all that God has said through his prophets and apostles is not worthy the name Christian. This is my apology for the name, Christian Adventist. Br. S. S. Brewer's comments on the twentieth of Revelation, is the best I have seen on the one thousand years reign. All the blunders on this subject take their start from the fourth verse, which reads thus: "I saw thrones (troms) and they sat upon them, and judgment was given unto them." The personal crowning there has no reference to saints at all, but those that sat on the thrones were those that sat in Papal courts of inquisition, judged and condemned those that they denominated heretics to be slaughtered at their altars erected for that purpose; and "I saw the souls of them that were beheaded for the witness of Jesus, and for the word of God." This is a parallel case with Rev. 6.9. I understand that the word soul in these cases is equivalent to the word person or persons. Though the saints were slaughtered by thousands, yet Christianity never became extinct. The throne was occupied at that time by the Papal power, which had subdued the dragon, or devil power, this "dragon," "devil," Paganism are all one and the same power. We do not look upon the Papal power as being any better, because this Papal power spake as the dragon and also received its seat and great authority from the dragon or Pagan Rome. John gave the Papal power no better name than Pagan Rome, for he called it the bottomless pit. It was so called in consequence of its mixture of elements, any other view of this case would convey an idea that a literal devil was cast into a literal bottomless pit. We claim this to teach a condition and not a place. As early as A.D 538, the Pagan power was merged into the Papal power, or cast into this pit. More anon.

From W. W. Cate, Hudson, Bates Co., Mo.

Believing that some of your readers would like to hear from this isolated field of labor, I would state that against much opposition the truth is still gaining ground. I preach every Sunday and Saturday evenings, usually, generally to full houses, and there appears to be an increasing interest to hear. The church near Nevada City is in a prosperous condition, there being additions at nearly every meeting. Our meeting there is on the second Sunday in each month.

The church near Hudson is holding on to the blessed hope. At Taborville, and also at Johnstown, there is a good interest. A few weeks ago a minister of the Disciple Church, F. Johnson, challenged me for a discussion at Taborville, and a committee was appointed who reported three questions: On the "Setting up of the Kingdom;" on the "State of the Dead," and on "Eternal Misery." We were to have six speeches on a side on each question. But, after making three speeches, he refused to go on with the debate; asked my forgiveness, and said he would not stand up again before that audience or any other, to address them, so long as he lived. I then asked Eld. Landen, another minister of the same order present, if he would take Br. Johnson's place and go on with the debate. He consented, but after making three speeches terminated on the discussion the "kingdom" question; they both refused to discuss the other two questions according to our written agreement, therefore the debate closed with a glorious triumph for the truth. The next morning Br. Johnson asked me if I would discuss those propositions with Br. Burge. I replied, yes; with Br. Burge, or any other man, and there the matter rests—the other man has not appeared.

A similar state of things exists at Johnstown, where Eld. P. Coleman sent me a challenge for a discussion last fall. We met and arranged the programme, but, before the time came, his brethren forced him to back out. But as many were anxious to hear the debate, I told the people, publicly, that I would debate the question at issue with any respectable minister they might get, but none has come. So I am called upon, not from choice, but from necessity, to contend earnestly for the faith once delivered to the saints, but our warfare will soon be over. For, although we are called to go out with sadness—sometimes almost single-handed—to contend with the giants of the land, yet the sword of the Spirit is a trusty weapon, and by it we expect a victory, and a glorious reward when the Master comes. May he come soon, is my prayer. Pray that we may have more help here.

From Nellie F. Morrow, Jeffersonville, Ind.

I have long been desirous of writing a letter expressive of my high appreciation of your valuable paper, THE TIMES, but from various hindrances, and a feeling of inability to interest others I have delayed until the present time.

Our Church here which numbers over a hundred members has just been made to rejoice by the appearance in our midst of Br. and Sr. Tibbets, of Volga, and Br. Cass, of Holton.

Thursday, the 3d of this month, was the time appointed for our annual conference, but in consequence of the extreme warm weather and the anticipated approach of that fell destroyer cholera, many that would otherwis have been here were deterred from coming The time, as it proved, was a very inconvenient one for farmers, as most of them were just in the midst of harvest. However, we had a very refreshing season.

Br. Cass addressed us on Thursday and Friday evenings, also twice on Sunday, presenting the glorious truths of God's coming kingdom in a clear, tangible light. While many here are convinced of the truth of what w teach, they are too much afraid of their popularity to publicly acknowledge it.

On Sunday morning Sr. Tibbets paid he annual visit to our State Prison. There sh was cordially received by the excellent warden, Col. L. S. Shuler, and the chaplain i charge, Rev. John W. Sullivan. After attending a very interesting prayer meeting hel by the convicts, in which many witnessed fo Jesus, our good sister, in a kind, sympathizing and convincing manner, addressed a larg number upon the speedy advent of our absen Lord, showing by incontrovertible argumen that eternal life was obtained only throug Christ, and that all cherished ideas of goin to heaven at death were fallacious and n found in God's precious Word. That Go only possessed immortality, and we could obtain it only by a patient continuance in wel doing. That Christ's second advent was t effect that great purpose. To raise the sleeping dead and bestow immortality upon all wh had laid hold upon it by an obedience to th acquirements of God's Holy Gospel, and faithful continuance therein. While such position was entirely new to many, it seeme to be received with great interest, and I fe confident that the truth so potent, will n be left (even upon those benighted soul without effect. My father, Dr. N. Field, ha long ministered to the little band of Adven believers here, endeavoring by earnest effor to have a people ready for the appearing an kingdom of our blessed Master. We have a time been visited by sore trials, but, thanks t His holy name, we have always triumphe over every difficulty, and to Him that ha loved us and given himself for us we rende all the praise.

In conclusion, my dear brothers and sister let us hold fast the profession of our fait without fear or wavering, confidently relyin on our blessed Lord for strength, knowin "that the sorrows of the present time are n worthy to be compared with the glory tha shall be revealed."

From M. E. Orr, Reading, Mich., July 9, 187

Permit me to say to the scattered floc that in the good providence of God, I wa permitted to spend last Saturday and Sunda at our State camp meeting, and I trust, bot with interest and profit. The frequent rain during the week had kept many from attending, but Saturday morn the sun rose brigh and clear, and all Nature seemed to smile i thankfulness for the refreshing showers. A 8 P. M., in company with other friends, w stepped on board the train at R——, and i less than an hour we arrived at Cam Jonesville, where we were cordially greete by the friends of like precious faith. Th meetings were excellent, and I have seldo enjoyed, or appreciated, the truths of th gospel more than while listening to th preached word.

Br. Crandall spoke in the morning, wit earnestness and power, from Isa. 3:10, portraying the future joy and blessedness of th righteous, and the final doom of the wicke and the ungodly. It was a solemn time, an n earnest prayer went up to God that we ight be numbered with the righteous.

At 2 P. M. Br. Fox gave us a very pointed iscourse on the subject of baptism, showing nclusively that immersion is the "one aptism."

At 7 P. M. we met again for prayer and nference, after which Sr. T ssed a rge and attentive audience, fr Matt. 6:33. he subject of the kingdom was duly con- dered; also, an earnest appeal to the uncon- rted to seek first the kingdom of God id his righteousness, etc., etc. Thank God, e promise is being verified, "In the last ys I will pour out of my Spirit, and your ns and daughters shall prophesy." Sabbath orn as usual, met for love feast, which was feast of love indeed. Some forty testimonies ere given, and as many more witnessed for sus by rising to their feet. Truly, it was od to be there. Soon the tent was filled to erflowing, and still they kept coming, until was estimated there were between 2,000 d 3,000 people on the ground. As I gazed on the multitude as they came from dif- rent directions, the words of the Saviour me forcibly to my mind, "And they shall me from the east and the west, and shall down with Abraham, and Isaac, and Jacob, the kingdom of heaven."

At half past one P. M., Br. Hicks addressed at vast multitude from Rev. 22:17. It was ouching and earnest appeal to every one, come to the fountain of life. God grant at none present may refuse the gracious er.

Br. Preston spoke with renewed zeal and wer, at half-past two P. M., from 2 Pet. 9, showing the value of prophesy, and ex rting his hearers "to take heed thereto, unto a light that shineth in a dark place." eaching in the evening by Br. Snook, from hn 6:53, after which we gathered around table to celebrate the Lord's Supper, and ile we remembered with sadness the suf- ings and death of the Son of God, yet our arts were made to rejoice in the hope of promise, "If I go away, I will come ain and receive you unto myself, that where m ye may be also." This was the closing vice of our camp meeting, and to one, at st, will long be remembered.

Monday morning came with its sad partings, f the oft repeated "good bye, and God ss you," was uttered by many loving arts, and then the camp family separated go their several ways, and, we trust, ered and strengthened, and better fitted the duties and obligations of life.

om J. C. Smith, Jacksonville, Kansas.

Dear brethren and sisters, scattered abroad, ace be with yor from God our Father and Lord Jesus Christ. The work to be done Kansas is great, and the Lord alone is suffi- nt for these things. Yet we can be workers ether with Him.

June 17th I started alone, (and yet not alone, the Lord was with me) for Southern Kan- , came the distance of fifteen miles to S. Smith's, of Ottumwa, who is a faithful ing brother in the cause he has espoused. wife is one of the salt of the earth and nds ready to administer to the wants of all d's children that may call. They love the th and desire help. The door is open here the precious seed, and no doubt the tent l be pitched at this place ere long. From place I came to Burlington, and had a d season scattering the seed. Here a ther pledged $10 for the tent movement. m there I came east to a Br. Beman's, near mbolt. Here I found a hearty welcome, doors open for meetings. We sent out ice and had a meeting in the school-house; Lord helped in speaking from Matt. 6: and a new interest was stirred among se that were present. They wanted me to ain with them over Lord's Day. On the t I came to Erie, found a large company of ievers who hold the "age to come" views, there I tarried over Lord's Day. Br. re, their pastor, and evangelist, spoke to m. He is a firm man, and is doing good rk; four were baptised, and a young man nifested a desire to obey the Lord. This ple desire Advent preaching, and are get- it from Br. Fore. On the 24th I came to place, found a faithful friend, and Br. w and Sr. Nichols, they formerly belonged he Methodists, but as they were honest in ing light they embraced it, and are now ng in the Lord, giving glory to His name. y are being attacked by the Methodists, God is able to make them stand, and raise a standard in their midst. Next Sunday, Lord willing, we speak at two different ces here, and then on Wednesday next a t meeting commences, holding as long as ught best. Br. Bliss is expected, and we t others will be sent out. Everywhere have been the door still is open for help- , and many are inquiring for light. What need is tracts, papers, books, etc., that tract the kingdom and its kindred truths. And hope all that have the work at heart will d a helping hand. On the 25th I went to , found the children well, and the breth- hard at work in the harvest field. It is a ing time now with the harvesters, one man I stopped with yesterday had some twenty hands at work for him. The wheat crop is good, and has ripened up very fast. We had a meeting in the evening, a goodly number came out, notwithstanding they were tired. On the 26th went to Columbus, saw Br. Sanford, concluded to move the tent northward, so shall pitch it at Jacksonville first. Others desiring it I trust will write me at Arvonia, Osage Co. At Bero I gathered up some over two hundred copies of THE TIMES and Crisis, with a few numbers of the Bible Banner and Christian that Srs. Dunbar and Hunter had saved to lend among the people. O, that all would do this, and then after lending them at home send them to some laborer in the gospel field, to scatter where the people do not take them. I find many very anxious to read, and had I a thousand dollars would send it at once to the Mission Board for the express purpose of printing tracts, and sending out helpers into new fields. What say you, dear children in the Lord, shall we see our cause suffer when it is so precious and great? Think of the sufferings of Christ, and the glory to follow; think of the Kingdom of God, and its duration; think of everything that is provided, and then say, shall we not put our shoulder to the wheel, and help the work along. Kansas is a broad field, and we have but a very few laborers, but a great harvest can be gathered if all will do what they can; doors are open on every hand. Now is the time to sow the seed. Now is the time to water it, and God will give the increase. Come one, come all, let us awake to this blessed work; soon this blessed message will be sounded, and then comes the reaping time; and then cometh the reward; then shall we have done what we could?

We need tracts and books to scatter; who will send, in the Lord, to J. C. Smith, Arvonia, Osage Co., Kansas? Come, brethren and sisters, let us scatter the seed broadcast beside all waters this year, 1873. Please give us an encouraging word, and let us hear from all in Kansas, and others elsewhere, that are interested in this work. O, may all awake and gird themselves for the warfare, and then when Jesus comes, and the struggle is over, all will be well.

Taking Cold.

"Why do we take cold so easily?"

The immediate cause of your cold is suddenly checked perspiration; the body chilled by wet feet or damp garments, or a draught of cold air. The predisposing causes were gross food, bad digestion, want of personal cleanliness, constipation and breathing foul air.

If these predisposing causes had been avoided, temporary exposure to wet and cold might have been endured with impunity. But, if the pre-disposing causes have been active, then the slightest exposure invites head-ache, ringing ears, watery eyes, sore throats, and cough.

The reason is obvious; the foul habits have loaded the blood with impurities, the emunctories or cleansing organs have been crowded to their utmost capacity.

The slightest check of perspiration by exposure, or by neglect of bath, or lack of clean garments, or clean air in sleeping rooms, the blood being so overloaded with impurities, induces the fever which you call a cold.

On the plains in '1865,' a company of one hundred men women and children slept on the ground, without tents, exposed to hail, rain, wind, and snow. They endured mid-day heat, and the cold nights of the mountains. They forded ice cold streams, and walked all day with wet garments, were exposed to all the usually exciting causes of colds intensified and long continued—yet from Fort Leavenworth to Salt Lake—no one had a cold.

The lesson of practical value is—give attention not so much to the exciting as to the predisposing causes of colds.—Instead of extra wraps, dress the whole body evenly, and not too warmly; bathe daily, use plain food, never clog the stomach between meals, sun and air each day every garment and the bed clothes worn or used at night.

Omit all hot drinks, live much in the open air, drop the windows from the top, and open them at the bottom; do not let the curtain cover these openings. Fresh air is a friend; sunshine is a friend; cultivate their acquaintance, use good sense, and you are safe from colds, catarrhs and influenzas.—Science of Health.

Our Young Folks.

Saturday Night.

The supper is over, the hearth is swept,
And in the wood-fire's glow,
The children cluster to hear a tale
Of that time so long ago—

When grandmamma's hair was golden brown
And the warm blood came and went,
O'er the face that could scarce have been sweeter then,
Than now in its rich content.

The face is wrinkled and care worn now,
And the golden hair is gray;
But the light that shone in the young girl's eyes
Has never gone astray.

And her needles catch the fire's light,
As in and out they go,
With the clicking music that grandma loves,
Shaping the stocking toe.

And the waking children love it, too,
For they know the stocking song
Brings many a tale to grandma's mind,
Which they shall hear ere long.

But it brings no story of olden time,
To grandmamma's heart to-night—
Only a ditty, quaint and short,
Is sung by the needles bright.

"Life is a stocking," grandma says,
And yours is just begun;
But I am knitting the toe of mine,
And my work is almost done.

With merry hearts we begin to knit,
And the ribbing is almost play,
Some are gay colored, and some are white,
And some are ashen gray.

But most are made of many a hue,
With many a stitch set wrong,
And many a row to be sadly ripped
Ere the whole thing is fair and strong.

"There are long plain spaces without a break
That in youth are hard to bear;
And many a weary tear is dropped
As we fashion the heel with care.

But the saddest, happiest time is that
We court and yet we shun;
When our Heavenly Father breaks the thread,
And says that our work is done."

The children come to say good night,
With tears in their bright young eyes;
While in grandma's lap with a broken thread,
The finished stocking lies.

After The Event—A Fable.

A swallow's nest fell from the eaves of a farmhouse, and the barnyard poultry and hedgebirds gathered about the ruins, and went into committee on them.

"I knew it was going to fall—I felt sure it must the last time I went on the roof," chirped a sparrow.

"Stupid thing—building its nest up there," hissed a goose.

"I could have taught her how to lay eggs without getting them smashed, if she had only come to me," quacked a duck.

"And I could have taught her how to hatch them—I have had to hatch yours Neighbor Duck," clucked a hen.

"Gobble, gobble, gobble— if people choose to be fools they must take the consequences," said a strutting turkey-cock, puffing out his feathers.

"My friends, you are very kind to take so much interest in my affairs," twittered the poor swallow; "but if you were so sure that my house was going to fall, isn't it a pity that you didn't tell me so a little sooner?"—Good Things.

A Child's Sacrifice.

"My little children, let us not love in word, neither in tongue; but in deed and truth."

A child had a beautiful canary, which sung to him from early morning. The mother of the child was ill—so ill that the song of the little bird, which to the boy was so delicious, disturbed and distressed her so that she could scarcely bear to hear it.

He put it in a room far away, but the bird's notes reached the sick bed, and caused pain to her long, feverish days.

One morning, as the child stood holding his mother's hand, he saw that when his pet sung, an expression of pain passed over her dear face. She had never yet told him that she could not bear the noise, but she did so now.

"It is no music to me", she said, as he asked her if the notes were not pretty. He looked at her in wonder.

"And do you really dislike the sound?"

"Indeed I do," she said.

The child, full of love to his mother, left the room. The golden feathers of the pretty canary were glistening in the sunshine, and he was telling forth his loveliest notes; but they had ceased to please the boy. They were no longer pretty or soothing to him, and taking the cage in his hand he left the house.

When he returned he told his mother that the bird would disturb her no more, for he had given it to his little cousin.

"But you loved it so," she said, "how could you part with the canary?"

"I loved the canary, mother," he replied, but I loved you more. I could not really love any thing that gave you pain. It would not be true love if I did.—The Quiver.

The Dog Almost with a Conscience.

I must relate a few stories of Mumbo, the handsome bull-terrier.

He knows it is quite against the rule to go beyond the garden premises, but one day my daughter met him in the village. He immediately scudded home at full speed by the back way, and then came out at a quiet demure pace to meet my daughter as she walked up to the front door, wagging his tail and greeting her as if he had not seen her for some time in the hope that she would forget their recent meeting.

But the most remarkable of the dog's proceedings happened one Sunday evening. All the family had gone to church, leaving him alone in the house. On my return he greeted me less joyfully than usual, and then disappeared. Soon afterwards, the servant called me to look at Mumbo, and I found him in a remote part of the scullery, standing quite still, with his head in a corner and his tail down. I pronounced at once that he had been doing something amiss, and ere long the housemaid discovered that while sole guardian of the house, he had been lying on three beds in succession, making snug places for himself, by dragging and snatching about the bolsters and pillows.

The large, strong animal was dragged tremblingly upstairs and there received a slight flogging, after which he rushed downstairs and again placed himself in in the corner, only looking now and then over his shoulder to see if he was noticed.

The servants at last pitied the poor repentant animal, and called him to the fire as if it was a cold night, but he would not move till his bed-time. The next morning Mumbo was in excellent spirits, evidently feeling that he had fully punished himself for his misdeeds.—Sel.

How a Joke Struck a Little Boy.

"Mother," said Ashton, "I am very glad you did not laugh when Mr. Vose told the story of his joke at dinner to-day."

"What was it?" asked Lottie, who did not happen to be present. She had gone to Auntie Day's on an errand.

"Why, he said," answered Ashton, "how he was driving one very cold day with one hand, while his other arm was wrapped up in his buffalo, and seeing a log in the street, he asked an old man to move it, because he had only one arm.

"Lost it in the war?" asked the old man. "Oh, yes, answered Mr. Vose, "that is the way folks lose their arms." And the old man moved the log out of the way, and came and patted his shoulder, saying, "We can't do too much for our brave boys in blue." Mr. Vose drove on as fast as he could, lest he should get found out.

"And it was a lie," said Lottie.

"Yes," said Ashton "it was a lie. But Mr. Vose thought it was funny, and the folks would laugh. Father smiled, but mother didn't. I wanted to say, 'The most I see is the lie.'"

"True," said Lottie, "it was real deceiving.

"Be the matter what it may,
Always speak the truth;
Whether work or whether play,
Always speak the truth.
Never then from this depart,
Grave it deeply on your heart,
Written 'tis in Virtue's chart—
Always speak the truth."

THERE came recently to the New York post-office a letter directed simply to "God." When opened it was found to be evidently from a little girl, and ran thus: "Dear God, we are very poor. My brother needs a new coat very much. Won't you please send him one, and then I shall worry no more about it." The letter was put into the hands of certain good ladies. They sent to the town in Massachusetts whence the letter came, and found the case genuine.

At Bero I gathered up some over two hundred copies of THE TIMES and Crisis, with a few numbers of the Bible Banner and Christian that Srs. Dunbar and Hunter had saved to lend among the people. O, that all would do this, and then after lending them at home send them to some laborer in the gospel field, to scatter where the people do not take them. I find many very anxious to read, and had I a thousand dollars would send it at once to the Mission Board for the express purpose of printing tracts, and sending out helpers into new fields. What say you, dear children in the Lord, shall we see our cause suffer when it is so precious and great? Think of the sufferings of Christ, and the glory to follow; think of the Kingdom of God, and its duration; think of everything that is provided, and then say, shall we not put our shoulder to the wheel, and help the work along. Kansas is a broad field, and we have but a very few laborers, but a great harvest can be gathered if all will do what they can; doors are open on every hand. Now is the time to sow the seed. Now is the time to water it, and God will give the increase. Come one, come all, let us awake to this blessed work; soon this blessed message will be sounded, and then comes the reaping time; and then cometh the reward; then shall we have done what we could?

We need tracts and books to scatter; who will send, in the Lord, to J. C. Smith, Arvonia, Osage Co., Kansas? Come, brethren and sisters, let us scatter the seed broadcast beside all waters this year, 1878. Please give us an encouraging word, and let us hear from all in Kansas, and others elsewhere, that are interested in this work. O, may all awake and gird themselves for the warfare, and then when Jesus comes, and the struggle is over, all will be well.

Taking Cold.

"Why do we take cold so easily?"

The immediate cause of your cold is suddenly checked perspiration; the body chilled by wet feet or damp garments, or a draught of cold air. The predisposing causes were gross food, bad digestion, want of personal cleanliness, constipation and breathing foul air.

If these predisposing causes had been avoided, temporary exposure to wet and cold might have been endured with impunity. But, if the pre-disposing causes have been active, then the slightest exposure invites head-ache, ringing ears, watery eyes, sore throats, and cough.

The reason is obvious; the foul habits have loaded the blood with impurities, the emunctories or cleansing organs have been crowded to their utmost capacity.

The slightest check of perspiration by exposure, or by neglect of bath, or lack of clean garments, or clean air in sleeping rooms, the blood being so overloaded with impurities, induces the fever which you call a cold.

On the plains in '1865,' a company of one hundred men women and children slept on the ground, without tents, exposed to hail, rain, wind, and snow. They endured mid-day heat, and the cold nights of the mountains. They forded ice cold streams, and walked all day with wet garments, were exposed to all the usually exciting causes of colds intensified and long continued—yet from Fort Leavenworth to Salt Lake—no one had a cold.

The lesson of practical value is—give attention not so much to the exciting as to the predisposing causes of colds.—Instead of extra wraps, dress the whole body evenly, and not too warmly; bathe daily, use plain food, never clog the stomach between meals, sun and air each day every garment and the bed clothes worn or used at night.

Omit all hot drinks, live much in the open air, drop the windows from the top, and open them at the bottom; do not let the curtain cover these openings. Fresh air is a friend; sunshine is a friend; cultivate their acquaintance, use good sense, and you are safe from colds, catarrhs and influenzas.—Science of Health.

Our Young Folks.

Saturday Night.

The supper is over, the hearth is swept,
  And in the wood fire's glow,
The children cluster to hear a tale
  Of that time so long ago—

When grandmamma's hair was golden brown
  And the warm blood came and went,
O'er the face that could scarce have been sweeter then,
  Than now in its rich content.

The face is wrinkled and care worn now,
  And the golden hair is gray;
But the light that shone in the young girl's eyes
  Has never gone astray.

And her needles catch the fire's light,
  As in and out they go,
With the clicking music that grandma loves,
  Shaping the stocking toe.

And the waking children love it, too,
  For they know the stocking song
Brings many a tale to grandma's mind,
  Which they shall hear ere long.

But it brings no story of olden time,
  To grandmamma's heart to-night—
Only a ditty, quaint and short,
  Is sung by the needles bright.

"Life is a stocking," grandma says,
  And yours is just begun;
But I am knitting the toe of mine,
  And my work is almost done.

With merry hearts we begin to knit,
  And the ribbing is almost play,
Some are gay colored, and some are white,
  And some are ashen gray.

But most are made of many a hue,
  With many a stitch set wrong,
And many a row to be sadly ripped
  Ere the whole thing is fair and strong.

"There are long plain spaces without a break
  That in youth are hard to bear;
And many a weary tear is dropped
  As we fashion the heel with care.

But the saddest, happiest time is that
  We court and yet we shun;
When our Heavenly Father breaks the thread,
  And says that our work is done."

The children come to say good night,
  With tears in their bright young eyes;
While in grandma's lap with a broken thread,
  The finished stocking lies.

After The Event—A Fable.

A swallow's nest fell from the eaves of a farmhouse, and the barnyard poultry and hedgebirds gathered about the ruins, and went into committee on them.

"I knew it was going to fall—I felt sure it must the last time I went on the roof," chirped a sparrow.

"Stupid thing—building its nest up there," hissed a goose.

"I could have taught her how to lay eggs without getting them smashed, if she had only come to me," quacked a duck.

"And I could have taught her how to hatch them—I have had to hatch yours Neighbor Duck," clucked a hen.

"Gobble, gobble, gobble— if people choose to be fools they must take the consequences," said a strutting turkey-cock, puffing out his feathers.

"My friends, you are very kind to take so much interest in my affairs," twittered the poor swallow; "but if you were so sure that my house was going to fall, isn't it a pity that you didn't tell me so a little sooner?"—Good Things.

A Child's Sacrifice.

"My little children, let us not love in word, neither in tongue; but in deed and truth."

A child had a beautiful canary, which sung to him from early morning. The mother of the child was ill—so ill that the song of the little bird, which to the boy was so delicious, disturbed and distressed her so that she could scarcely bear to hear it.

He put it in a room far away, but the bird's notes reached the sick bed, and caused pain to her long, feverish days.

One morning, as the child stood holding his mother's hand, he saw that when his pet sung, an expression of pain passed over her dear face. She had never yet told him that she could not bear the noise, but she did so now.

"It is no music to me", she said, as he asked her if the notes were not pretty. He looked at her in wonder.

"And do you really dislike the sound?"

"Indeed I do," she said.

The child, full of love to his mother, left the room. The golden feathers of the pretty canary were glistening in the sunshine, and he was telling forth his loveliest notes; but they had ceased to please the boy. They were no longer pretty or soothing to him, and taking the cage in his hand he left the house.

When he returned he told his mother that the bird would disturb her no more, for he had given it to his little cousin.

"But you loved it so," she said, "how could you part with the canary?"

"I loved the canary, mother," he replied, but I loved you more. I could not really love any thing that gave you pain. It would not be true love if I did.—The Quiver.

The Dog Almost with a Conscience.

I must relate a few stories of Mumbo, the handsome bull-terrier.

He knows it is quite against the rule to go beyond the garden premises, but one day my daughter met him in the village. He immediately scudded home at full speed by the back way, and then came out at a quiet demure pace to meet my daughter as she walked up to the front door, wagging his tail and greeting her as if he had not seen her for some time in the hope that she would forget their recent meeting.

But the most remarkable of the dog's proceedings happened one Sunday evening. All the family had gone to church, leaving him alone in the house. On my return he greeted me less joyfully than usual, and then disappeared. Soon afterwards, the servant called me to look at Mumbo, and I found him in a remote part of the scullery, standing quite still, with his head in a corner and his tail down. I pronounced at once that he had been doing something amiss, and ere long the housemaid discovered that while sole guardian of the house, he had been lying on three beds in succession, making snug places for himself, by dragging and snatching about the bolsters and pillows.

The large, strong animal was dragged tremblingly upstairs and there received a slight flogging, after which he rushed downstairs and again placed himself in in the corner, only looking now and then over his shoulder to see if he was noticed.

The servants at last pitied the poor repentant animal, and called him to the fire as if it was a cold night, but he would not move till his bed-time. The next morning Mumbo was in excellent spirits, evidently feeling that he had fully punished himself for his misdeeds.—Sel.

How a Joke Struck a Little Boy.

"Mother," said Ashton, "I am very glad you did not laugh when Mr. Vose told the story of his joke at dinner today."

"What was it?" asked Lottie, who did not happen to be present. She had gone to Auntie Day's on an errand.

"Why, he said," answered Ashton, "how he was driving one very cold day with one hand, while his other arm was wrapped up in his buffalo, and seeing a log in the street, he asked an old man to move it, because he had only one arm.

"Lost it in the war?" asked the old man. "Oh, yes, answered Mr. Vose, "that is the way folks lose their arms." And the old man moved the log out of the way, and came and patted his shoulder, saying, "We can't do too much for our brave boys in blue." Mr. Vose drove on as fast as he could, lest he should get found out.

"And it was a lie," said Lottie.

"Yes," said Ashton "it was a lie. But Mr. Vose thought it was funny, and the folks would laugh. Father smiled, but mother didn't. I wanted to say, 'The most I see is the lie.'"

"True," said Lottie, "it was real deceiving.

"Be the matter what it may,
  Always speak the truth;
Whether work or whether play,
  Always speak the truth.
Never then from this depart,
  Grave it deeply on your heart,
Written 'tis in Virtue's chart—
  Always speak the truth."

THERE came recently to the New York post-office a letter directed simply to "God." When opened it was found to be evidently from a little girl, and ran thus: "Dear God, we are very poor. My brother needs a new coat very much. Won't you please send him one, and then I shall worry no more about it." The letter was put into the hands of certain good ladies. They sent to the town in Massachusetts whence the letter came, and found the case genuine.

Job Work.

We are now prepared to do all kinds of job work with despatch, and in a satisfactory manner. Envelopes, Letter-Heads, Note-Heads, Bill-Heads, Cards of all kinds, Circulars, etc., etc. Friends at a distance from printing offices, and often close to them, will do well to get our figures before ordering work elsewhere.

THE first edition of "Modern Spiritism," by C. C. Marston, is exhausted, and the second edition is printed and ready for delivery. The better class of work and consequent increase of cost in its preparation has necessitated a slight increase of price—from 12 to 15 cents post paid.

Book Notices, Etc.

The PHRENOLOGICAL JOURNAL for August is on our table with an excellent variety of seasonable reading. The main topics discussed in a lively, entertaining, and always instructive style, appear to be:—The late Joseph Howe, Lieut-Gov. of Nova Scotia; Prophecy, Ancient and Modern; Dr. Horace Wells and the discovery of Anesthesia; How to use Phrenology; The late Oakes Ames, M. C.; Living to Work vs. Working to Live; Power of Application; Compulsatory Attendance; Study of the Natural Sciences; Turning Points in Life; The Reason Why; Agricultural Hints; Progress in Virginia; The Eagle Owl; Handsome faces and bad dispositions, etc. This publication deserves a hundred thousand subscribers. $3 a year, with chromo premium. Such are my arrangements until further notice.
ALICE E. RATHBUN.

The Northern Illinois A. C. Conference will hold its annual session during the camp meeting at Wyanet. It is hoped that each church within the bounds of this Conference will send either by delegate, or by letter, a full report of the past year. Each minister is expected to be present in person or else report by letter.

Come, brethren in the ministry and laity, let us make a united and earnest effort to proclaim to a judgment-bound world the good news of our soon-coming King.

Any letters for the Conference should be addressed to the Secretary, Wyanet, Bureau county, Illinois. N. W. SPENCER, President.
C. C. MARSTON, Secretary.

The camp meeting of the Northern Illinois Conference will be held at Wyanet, Bureau county, commencing August 30, and continuing over two Sabbaths.

Wyanet is on the C. B. and Q. R. R.; west from Mendota. Those coming on the I. C. R. R., will change cars at Mendota. Those coming on the C. and R. I. R. R., will change at Burlington Crossing.

The camp ground is a half a mile east from the depot.

It is earnestly hoped that each church will be represented in the tented grove at Wyanet this year. Lumber will be furnished on the ground for making tents, at cost if destroyed, and free if uninjured. Let there be a general rally from all parts of the conference, and we should rejoice to see tents on the ground from any of our sister conferences. Come one, come all, laymen and ministers, brother and sister, saint and sinner, from this or any other conference. Come praying, come in the spirit of Elijah's God, and come to labor for the salvation of perishing sinners. We hope to see the best camp meeting this year ever held in the State. So mote it be.

A cordial invitation is hereby extended to any minister from abroad who may be desirous of attending the meeting. There will be a hearty welcome accorded to all who come in the spirit of the Master to labor for his glory.

For those who may wish to board on the ground ample provision will be made.

In behalf of Committee,
N. W. SPENCER, Chairman.
C. C. MARSTON, Secretary.

Job Work.

We are now prepared to do all kinds of job work with despatch, and in a satisfactory manner. Envelopes, Letter-Heads, Note-Heads, Bill-Heads, Cards of all kinds, Circulars, etc., etc. Friends at a distance from printing offices, and often close to them, will do well to get our figures before ordering work elsewhere.

THE first edition of "Modern Spiritism," by C. C. Marston, is exhausted, and the second edition is printed and ready for delivery. The better class of work and consequent increase of cost in its preparation has necessitated a slight increase of price—from 12 to 15 cents post paid.

Book Notices, Etc.

The PHRENOLOGICAL JOURNAL for August is on our table with an excellent variety of seasonable reading. The main topics discussed in a lively, entertaining, and always instructive style, appear to be:—The late Joseph Howe, Lieut-Gov. of Nova Scotia; Prophecy, Ancient and Modern; Dr. Horace Wells and the discovery of Anaesthesia; How to use Phrenology; The late Oakes Ames, M. C.; Living to Work vs. Working to Live; Power of Application; Compulsory Attendance; Study of the Natural Sciences; Turning Points in Life; The Reason Why; Agricultural Hints; Progress in Virginia; The Eagle Owl; Handsome faces and bad dispositions, etc. This publication deserves a hundred thousand subscribers. $3 a year, with chromo premium. ALICE E. RATHBUN.

The Northern Illinois A. C. Conference will hold its annual session during the camp meeting at Wyanet. It is hoped that each church within the bounds of this Conference will send either by delegate, or by letter, a full report of the past year. Each minister is expected to be present in person or else report by letter.

Come, brethren in the ministry and laity, let us make a united and earnest effort to proclaim to a judgment-bound world the good news of our soon-coming King.

Any letters for the Conference should be addressed to the Secretary, Wyanet, Bureau county, Illinois. N. W. SPENCER, President.
C. C. MARSTON, Secretary.

The camp meeting of the Northern Illinois Conference will be held at Wyanet, Bureau county, commencing August 30, and continuing over two Sabbaths.

Wyanet is on the C. B. and Q. R. R.; west from Mendota. Those coming on the I. C. R. R., will change cars at Mendota. Those coming on the C. and R. I. R. R., will change at Burlington Crossing.

The camp ground is a half a mile east from the depot.

It is earnestly hoped that each church will be represented in the tented grove at Wyanet this year. Lumber will be furnished on the ground for making tents, at cost if destroyed, and free if uninjured. Let there be a general rally from all parts of the conference, and we should rejoice to see tents on the ground from any of our sister conferences. Come one, come all, laymen and ministers, brother and sister, saint and sinner, from this or any other conference. Come praying, come in the spirit of Elijah's God, and come to labor for the salvation of perishing sinners. We hope to see the best camp meeting this year ever held in the State. So mote it be.

A cordial invitation is hereby extended to any minister from abroad who may be desirous of attending the meeting. There will be a hearty welcome accorded to all who come in the spirit of the Master to labor for his glory.

For those who may wish to board on the ground ample provision will be made.
In behalf of Committee,
N. W. SPENCER, Chairman.
C. C. MARSTON, Secretary.
